PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 78th CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 6, 1943

The 6th day of January having been designated for the annual meeting of Congress by the provisions of Public Law 819 (77th Cong., 2d sess.), approved December 19, 1942, the first session of the Seventy-eighth Congress commenced this day.

The Senate assembled in its Chamber at the Capitol.

HENRY A. WALLACE, of Iowa, Vice President of the United States, called the Senate to order at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., of the city of Washington, offered the following

PRAYER

Our Father God, in this hour of solemn convocation as with reverent hands we open a new volume of destiny in our Nation's history, we would, first of all, in contrition of spirit, lift our hearts to Thee, in whom we live and move and have our being. We confess our personal and social sin, our indifference to the want and woe of the world, our racial rancor, and the bigotry which has so often blinded us to the deep meanings of human brotherhood.

O Thou by whom the meek are guided in judgment and light riseth up in darkness for the godly, grant us, in all doubts and uncertainties, the grace to ask what Thou wouldst have us to do, that the spirit of wisdom may save us from all false choices and that, in Thy Light, we may see light, and, in Thy straight path, may not stumble. In all the deliberations begun this day keep our motives clean, our vision clear, our patriotism undefiled, our speech guarded, our appraisals fair, and our consciences unbetrayed. We ask it in the Dear Redeemer's Name. Amen.

SENATOR FROM TEXAS—CREDENTIALS

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I present the credentials of my colleague the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. O'DANIEL], and ask that they be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The credentials will be read.

The credentials were read and ordered to be placed on file, as follows:

To the PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES:

This is to certify that on the 3d day of November 1942, W. LEE O'DANIEL was duly chosen by the qualified electors of the State of Texas a Senator from said State to represent said State in the Senate of the United States for the term of 6 years, beginning on the 3d day of January 1943.

Witness: His Excellency our GOV. COKE R. STEVENSON, and our seal hereto affixed at Austin, this the 10th day of December, in the year of our Lord 1942.

COKE R. STEVENSON,
Governor.

By the Governor:
[SEAL] WM. J. LAWSON,
Secretary of State.

ADMINISTRATION OF OATH

The VICE PRESIDENT. The credentials of all Senators-elect have been placed on file. The Senators-elect who have not as yet been sworn in will present themselves at the desk in groups of four as their names are called to take the oath of office. The clerk will call the names of the first group of four.

Mr. President, in order that the committee appointed on the part of the Senate to act in conjunction with a similar committee on the part of the House to notify the President that the Congress is now in session and ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make may have time to perform its duty, I move that the Senate adjourn until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 29 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until tomorrow, Thursday, January 7, 1943, at 12 o'clock noon.

* Not sworn.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 6, 1943

This being the day fixed by the provisions of Public Law 819 (77th Cong. 2d sess.), approved December 19, 1942, for the annual meeting of the Congress of the United States, the Members-elect of the House of Representatives of the Seventy-eighth Congress met in their Hall, and at 12 o'clock noon were called to order by Hon. South Trimble, Clerk of the Seventy-seventh Congress.

Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., Chaplain of the Seventy-seventh Congress, offered the following

PRAYER

Our Father in Heaven, the God of all grace and power, in the sanctuary of the soul we wait at the altar of prayer. Here may we find that peace and unity which underlie diversity of intellect, fusing courage, strength, and truth into unbiased cooperation. Let there throb in all breasts an undying gratitude for the incomparable genius exemplified in our growing institutions, about which there shall never arise the mournful lament of failure and loss. Thou Christ, who art man's best Friend and love's divinest Love from whom earth's greatest souls have borrowed their greatest gifts, make us worthy to brighten the beacons of this fateful world.

For the facing of this hour give us a light, a searching light that we may step quietly and courageously into the trackless ways of an unknown future. Dispel the dark wind-swept clouds with their tidings of dismay hovering above this anguished earth. Free struggling humanity from those evildoers whose breath is pestilence and who are blind and false to all honor. Enrich us with fortitude of soul out of which victory is born, pledging ourselves to justice and truth. Grant that we may have knowledge with conviction, ability with vision, and understanding that in the kingdom of the soul obedience is life and disobedience is death. Through all the days of this memorable session be at the side of our President, our Speaker, and all Members and clothe them with great discretion and in accordance with Thy holy will.

"Set our feet on lofty places,
Gird our lives that they may be
Armored with all Christ-like graces
In the fight to set men free.
Grant us wisdom;
Grant us courage
That we fail not man nor Thee."

In the name of our Saviour. Amen.

The CLERK. This is the day fixed by law, enacted pursuant to the twentieth amendment of the Constitution, for the meeting of the Seventy-eighth Congress. Certificates of election covering the 435 seats in the Seventy-eighth Congress have been received by the Clerk of the House of Representatives of the Seventy-seventh Congress, and the names of those persons whose credentials show that they were regularly elected as Representatives in accordance with the laws of their respective States, or of the United States, will be called. As the roll is called, following the alphabetical order of the States, beginning with the State of Alabama, Representatives-elect will please answer to their names to determine whether a quorum is present.

The Clerk called the roll, by States, and the following Members-elect answered to their names:

The CLERK. The roll call discloses the presence of 426 members. A quorum is present. Credentials, regular in order, have been filed showing the election of ANTHONY J. DIMOND, as Delegate from the Territory of Alaska, and of JOSEPH R. FARRINGTON, as Delegate from the Territory of Hawaii.

Since the regular election of Representatives to the Seventy-eighth Congress, one change has occurred as a result of which a vacancy now exists in the Sixth Congressional District of the State of Missouri, occasioned by the death of the late Hon. Phillip A. Bennett.

ELECTION OF SPEAKER

The CLERK. The next business in order is the election of a Speaker, and nominations will now be received.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Clerk, as chairman of the Democratic caucus, I am directed, by the unanimous vote of that caucus, to present for election to the office of the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Seventy-eighth Congress the name of Hon. SAM RAYBURN, a Representative-elect from the State of Texas.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Clerk, by authority and direction of the Republican conference, representing a minority in this House, I nominate for Speaker of the House of Representatives the Honorable JOSEPH W. MARTIN, Jr., a Representative-elect from the State of Massachusetts to the Seventy-eighth Congress.

The CLERK. Hon. SAM RAYBURN, a Representative-elect from the State of Texas, and Hon. JOSEPH W. MARTIN, Jr., a Representative-elect from the State of Massachusetts, have been placed in nomination. Are there any further nominations? There being no further nominations, the Clerk appoints the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BROWN], the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. WENE], the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCGREGOR], and the gentlewoman from New York [Miss STANLEY], to act as tellers.

The roll will now be called, and those responding will indicate by surname the nominee of their choice. The tellers will please take places at the desk, in front of the Speaker's rostrum.

The tellers having taken their places, the House proceeded to vote for Speaker. The following is the vote in detail:

The CLERK. The tellers agree in their tally. The total number of votes cast is 426, of which Hon. SAM RAYBURN has received 217; Hon. JOSEPH W. MARTIN, Jr., 206; Hon. HARRY SAUTHOFF, 1; Hon. MERLIN HULL, 1; and present, 1.

Therefore, Hon. SAM RAYBURN, a Representative-elect from the State of Texas, having received a majority of all the votes cast, is duly elected Speaker of the House of Representatives for the Seventy-eighth Congress.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN], the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK], the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. O'NEAL], the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF], and the gentleman from California [Mr. SHEPPARD] will please conduct the Speaker-elect to the chair.

PRESENTATION OF THE SPEAKER-ELECT

The committee appointed by the Clerk conducted Mr. RAYBURN to the Speaker's chair.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. My colleagues of the House, one of the compensations for being a defeated candidate for Speaker is that it gives you one thrilling moment. You come to this exalted position, you breathe this rarefied atmosphere, and, if you are of a speculative nature, you can look down on this great gathering and wonder what might have happened if more than 500,000 majority of people in this country who wanted a Republican House had only wisely distributed their votes.

But I prefer to think of this as something nobler and grander than all that. I like to think of it as the American way of life and the American way of government, functioning at its very best. In this country we divide, we debate, we discuss, and sometimes we compromise. When we reach a decision we are all one united people. That is something that those who live in other countries do not always realize.

So, as we meet here today on this very solemn and serious occasion, this is going to be one of the great Congresses in the history of our country. The last Congress might well be called the War Congress, but this Congress will be the Victory Congress. No matter on which side of the aisle we may sit, no matter what may be our party fealty, there is one fixed determination on the part of every man and woman who occupies a place in this House, and that is to see this war to a successful, decisive, and early end. As leader of the opposition, we pledge our earnest and untiring efforts to that end.

We may differ in some philosophies of government, we may differ in some details of government, but there will be no division; this aisle will have no division as far as the purpose of winning the war is concerned. It is necessary for our security and our way of life. We shall win this war decisively and then write a just peace.

In our American system of government there is one great integral part of this Government in whom the American people have faith. The people may at times scold us; they may at times criticize us; they may occasionally damn us; but, in the final analysis, the American people have faith in their Congress. They know the Congress is the bulwark of popular government.

It has always been one of the proudest boasts of this great institution of which we are privileged to be a part, that we have always had a great Speaker. I have served 18 years as a Member of this body and in all that time I never knew the House to have a Speaker who was not a real American. Our new Speaker measures up to our finest traditions. We have elected a really great American as Speaker. We have elected as Speaker a just man; one who realizes that when he assumes this high office there can be but one purpose, and that is to see that every Member of this body, whatever his party may be, shall have a square, fair deal. Our Speaker in the past has always been fair; he presides with dignity and courage.

It is a happy coincidence that this great honor of being elected Speaker of what I believe is to be the Victory Congress should come to our beloved Speaker on his birthday. Members of the House, it gives me great pleasure to present to you the man you have honored by electing him your Speaker; the beloved friend not only of myself but of every Member of this House, the gentleman from Texas, Hon. SAM RAYBURN.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. MARTIN, I should be less than human if I were not deeply moved by your most gracious words when presenting me to my colleagues in the House of Representatives.

To my colleagues in the House and friends—and they are not divided by the center aisle—from the bottom of a grateful heart I thank you for the signal honor you have done me. When I was the humblest Member of the House of Representatives I was proud of my membership. It is a great honor for any man or woman to be rewarded by a district with a seat in this Chamber. For 30 of my years I have been a Member of this body, and the longer I am a Member the prouder I am of being a part of this great House of Representatives.

As was said by our colleague, the leader of the minority, we have just closed a great Congress. We were criticized; we shall be criticized, but, in my opinion, that Congress in which many of you sat was one that for the work it did and the way it did it deserved the least criticism. We cannot administer the laws we pass or fight the wars we declare; this must be done by others. But the Congress just closed did its important work in a great way. It gave to those charged with the administration of the laws and the fighting of the war every law that was needed and every dollar that was necessary. I trust and I believe that the Congress assembling today will so act that just criticism will not fall upon it.

For the honor you have conferred upon me I again bring you this pledge: It shall be my unwavering determination to protect and defend the rights, the prerogatives, and the power of the House of Representatives.

We must have teamwork between the executive departments and the legislative branch of the Government; this cooperation must be mutual and understood by all of us. It is fortunate at a time like this, the most serious, in my opinion, that civilization has faced, that we have leadership of our causes in the great countries of the world allied with us, and I believe you will not deem me partisan on this occasion when I say to you that if America had been searched I believe a greater war leader could not have been chosen than the one who is our present Commander in Chief. Cooperation between him and the leadership of the House has been had; free and open discussions are had each week with the proposals discussed, and I may take you into my confidence and say that these are not blow-pulling conferences. I have no complaint from that part of the executive branch of the Government.

To other branches of the Government suggestions have been made that before determinations are reached or proposals are announced, those in positions of responsibility upon the hill must be consulted. I trust and believe this will be done.

We today, my colleagues, are in the midst of a chaotic world; civilization itself is being tested as never before; all of our ideals of freedom, of democracy, of freedom of conscience, are today under serious and dangerous attack. It remains to be seen in the months that lie immediately ahead of us whether or not Government set up as ours is can function in a crisis. I believe it can; it has in the past; it will in the future.

In my opinion, when this war is over actions must be taken that will be world-shaking in their consequences. Trade and commerce, peace and civilization themselves must be looked to. This must be not a war without victory, but a war of victory. This time there should be no stopping until the vandalism and paganism of Berlin, Rome, and Tokyo are wiped from the face of the earth.

We must win this war and keep it won. Civilization cannot stand a shock like this every quarter of a century; we must have a peace that will remain. There is in my mind but one way this can be brought about: That when we are victorious we disarm these vandals and keep them disarmed. The great Jefferson said:

> We are today in this world the last hope of human liberty. For so dear a state we should be willing to sacrifice every attachment and every enmity.

Those words sound as if they were spoken yesterday or today; or they might be spoken on the morrow.

I have that faith and confidence in the representatives of the people assembled here to feel that they will measure up to the highest standards of statesmanship and patriotism that have stood forth in this country in every crisis since the beginning of the Republic. Criticism there will be. One great leader said of his country that there would always be a country by that name. So long as liberty survives and freedom lives there will be a House of Representatives of the United States of America.

It is needless for me to say to you on this occasion that it is a happy one for me. Three times you have bestowed upon me this distinguished honor which has been a life's ambition with me. You, my friends, have allowed me to realize that great ambition. In this terrible period I must preside over what I conceive to be probably the most important session of the Congress since Washington's day. I pledge with confidence to the American people that you will live up to their hopes, their aspirations, and their ambitions.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] will administer the oath of office.

Mr. SABATH then administered the oath of office to the Speaker.

SWEARING IN OF THE MEMBERS

The SPEAKER. Some years ago the old custom of having each delegation come to the Well and take the oath of office was subrogated, and there was substituted instead the precedent that all Members should rise in their places and take the oath of office at the same time. The Chair thinks the latter precedent is much more convenient and much more practical. The Chair therefore asks each Member- and each Delegate-elect to the Seventy-eighth Congress to rise in his place that the the Speaker may administer to them the oath of office.

The Members- and Delegates-elect rose and the Speaker administered to them the oath of office.

ELECTION OF OFFICERS

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution (H. Res. 1), and ask for its immediate consideration and adoption.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That South Trimble, of the State of Kentucky, be, and he is hereby, chosen the Clerk of the House of Representatives;

That Kenneth Romney, of the State of Montana, be, and he is hereby, chosen the Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives;

That Joseph J. Sinnott, of the State of Virginia, be, and he is hereby, chosen Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives;

That Finis E. Scott, of the State of Tennessee, be, and he is hereby, chosen Postmaster of the House of Representatives; and

That Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., of the District of Columbia, be, and he is hereby, chosen Chaplain of the House of Representatives.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the resolution be divided and that a vote first be taken on the election of Chaplain, after which I shall offer a substitute resolution.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the election of a Chaplain of the House.

The resolution was divided; the question was taken; and the Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., was unanimously elected Chaplain of the House of Representatives for the Seventy-eighth Congress.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I offer a substitute resolution for the resolution offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. SHEPPARD].

The Clerk read the substitute resolution, as follows:

Substitute resolution offered by Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan:

Resolved, That John Andrews, of the State of Massachusetts, be, and he is hereby chosen Clerk of the House of Representatives;

That W. F. Russell, of the State of Pennsylvania, be, and he is hereby, chosen Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives;

That James P. Griffin, of the State of New Jersey, be, and he is hereby, chosen Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives; and

That Frank W. Collier, of the State of Wisconsin, be, and he is hereby, elected Postmaster of the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the substitute resolution.

The substitute resolution was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the original resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SWEARING IN OF OFFICERS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. South Trimble, Mr. Kenneth Romney, Mr. Joseph J. Sinnott, Mr. Finis Scott, and Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., appeared at the bar of the House and the oath of office was administered to them by the Speaker.

NOTIFICATION OF SENATE OF ORGANIZATION OF THE HOUSE

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution (H. Res. 2), and ask for its immediate consideration and adoption.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That a message be sent to the Senate to inform that body that a quorum of the House of Representatives has assembled; that SAM RAYBURN, a Representative from the State of Texas, has been elected Speaker and South Trimble, a citizen of the State of Kentucky, Clerk of the House of Representatives of the Seventy-eighth Congress,

The resolution was agreed to.

COMMITTEE TO NOTIFY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution (H. Res. 3), and ask for its immediate consideration.

Resolved, That a committee of three Members be appointed by the Speaker on the part of the House of Representatives to join with the committee on the part of the Senate to notify the President of the United States that a quorum of each House has been assembled, and that Congress is ready to receive any communication that he may be pleased to make.

The resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints as members of the committee on the part of the House to join with the committee on the part of the Senate to notify the President of the United States that a quorum of each House has been assembled and that the Congress is ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK], the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON], and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN].

NOTIFICATION OF ELECTION OF SPEAKER AND CLERK

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged resolution (H. Res. 4), which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk be instructed to inform the President of the United States that the House of Representatives has elected SAM RAYBURN, a Representative from the State of Texas, Speaker, and South Trimble, a citizen of the State of Kentucky, Clerk of the House of Representatives of the Seventy-eighth Congress.

The resolution was agreed to.

RULES OF THE HOUSE

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged resolution (H. Res. 5), and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the rules of the Seventy-seventh Congress be, and they are hereby, adopted as the rules of the Seventy-eighth Congress.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FISH. May I say to the chairman of the Committee on Rules that the highest constitutional power of the House of Representatives is to formulate its own rules. May I ask the chairman if he can give some assurance that he will call the Committee on Rules together to permit those who have amendments to the rules to present them to that committee in the very near future, as soon as the committee is organized? I have in mind one particular rule that should be considered, relating to the creation of a committee on civilian and commercial aviation. It is necessary to expedite consideration of this rule so that if it is decided by the House to create such a committee those in authority can make the proper designations to the committee.

Mr. SABATH. I assure the gentleman and the House that I shall call a meeting of the committee as soon as possible. If the gentleman from New York or any other gentleman has a rule he proposes to offer, it will receive consideration as early as possible.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

HOUR OF MEETING

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution (H. Res. 6), and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That until otherwise ordered, the daily hour of meeting of the House of Representatives shall be 12 o'clock meridian.

The resolution was agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution (H. Res. 7), and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations and the subcommittees thereof be authorized to sit during sessions and recesses of the Seventy-eighth Congress.

The resolution was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had adopted the following resolution (S. Res. 1):

Resolved, That a committee consisting of two Senators be appointed to join such committee as may be appointed by the House of Representatives to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that a quorum of each House is assembled and that the Congress is ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make.

The message also announced that, pursuant to the foregoing resolution, the Vice President appointed Mr. BARKLEY and Mr. MCNARY as members of the committee on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had adopted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary inform the House of Representatives that a quorum of the Senate is assembled and that the Senate is ready to proceed to business.

COMMITTEE TO NOTIFY THE PRESIDENT

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, your committee appointed on the part of the House to join a committee on the part of the Senate to wait upon the President of the United States and notify him that a quorum of the two Houses has assembled and that Congress is ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make has performed its duty. The President asked us to report that he will be pleased to deliver his message at 12:30 o'clock p. m., January 7, 1943, to a joint session of the two Houses.

JOINT SESSION OF CONGRESS

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution (H. Con. Res. 1), and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the two Houses of Congress assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Thursday, the 7th day of January 1943, at 12:30 o'clock in the afternoon, for the purpose of receiving such communications as the President of the United States shall be pleased to make to them.

The resolution was agreed to.

MINORITY EMPLOYEES

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution (H. Res. 8), and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That under authority of the act making appropriations for the legislative establishment for the fiscal year 1943, John Andrews is hereby named a special clerk to the minority of the House as successor to William Tyler Page, deceased; and John McCabe is hereby named as a minority employee of the House as successor to John Andrews.

The resolution was agreed to.

PRINTING AND BINDING

Mr. JARMAN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution (H. Res. 9), and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the standing committees of the House of Representatives and the floor leaders are hereby authorized to have such printing and binding done as may be actually necessary for the transaction of their official business during the Seventy-eighth Congress.

The resolution was agreed to.

MAJORITY AND MINORITY LEADERS

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Democratic caucus, I desire to notify the House officially of the election as majority leader of our distinguished colleague the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK].

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, as chairman of the Republican conference, I have been directed to notify the House officially that the Republican conference has elected the gentleman from Massachusetts, the Honorable JOSEPH W. MARTIN, as minority leader of the House.

HOUSE OFFICE BUILDING COMMISSION

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to the provisions of title 40, sections 175 and 176,

United States Code, the Chair appoints the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. HANCOCK], members of the House Office Building Commission to serve with himself.

ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Speaker, I have a message from the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KIRWAN] stating that he has been unable to get to the session today, and asking me to express his regrets. He is sick.

THE LATE DR. GEORGE WASHINGTON CARVER

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks and include therein an excellent article from the Washington Post of today.

Mr. SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, it is my sad privilege to call upon you Representatives of the people to join the people of Alabama in mourning the passing of a great Alabamian—a great American—a man of the people. Eminent and world-famous man of science in the field of chemistry, an artist of note, as well as an honored educator, Dr. George Washington Carver, of Tuskegee Institute, was called yesterday to his long and well-earned rest, his great reward. He was a faithful, humble servant of his Divine Master, the servant of all. His greatness knows no color line. The blessings flowing, and to flow, from his work, will make multiplied millions his debtors.

The mourning that his loss evokes is not "denied or abridged" "on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude."

[From the Washington Post of January 6, 1943]

DR. CARVER, NOTED NEGRO SCIENTIST, DIES

TUSKEGEE, ALA., January 5.—Dr. George Washington Carver, the noted Negro scientist, died at 7:30 p. m. today at his home at Tuskegee Institute.

Dr. Carver had been in failing health for some months and was confined to his bed for the past 10 days.

Born of slave parents at Diamond Grove, Mo., he was never sure of his birth date, but once estimated that it was "about 1864."

He became a member of the Tuskegee Institute faculty in 1894 and has been attached to the Negro institution ever since.

Dr. Carver was recognized as one of the outstanding scientists in the field of agricultural research. He discovered scores of uses for such lowly products as sweetpotatoes, peanuts, and clay. From the South's red clay and sandy loam he developed ink, pigments, cosmetics, paper paint, and many other articles.

He will be buried in Tuskegee Cemetery, where also lies Booker T. Washington, founder and first president of the school. The body is to lie in state for a short time before the burial.

Some characterized him "The Ebony Pasteur"; others, "The most outstanding Negro of his time"; and still more, "An outstanding world character."

WHITES JOINED IN TRIBUTE

Many times whites joined members of his own race in tribute. On his fortieth anniversary as a member of the Tuskegee Institute (Ala.) faculty in 1937 a bronze bust of him was unveiled on the campus, a tribute to "Forty Years of Creative Research."

Carver never knew his father. While a child he and his mother were stolen from the Diamond Grove, Mo., farm, where he was born, and taken to Arkansas.

He was ransomed from his captors with a horse valued at $300. His mother was never heard of again.

A gangling boy, determined to better his lot, he worked his way through public schools and then through Iowa State College, winning a bachelor's degree in 1894 and a master's degree in 1896. From there he went to Tuskegee Institute, founded by the late Booker T. Washington and later to become the world's largest institution of learning for the Negro.

Before he turned in 1936 to experimenting with peanut oils as a massage for after-treatment of infantile paralysis, Carver had developed scores of everyday uses for sweetpotatoes, peanuts, trees, clays, cornstalks, blossoms, and even cow dung.

From the products of the South's red clay and sandy loam he developed milk, ink, plastics, cosmetics, paper, paint, and even imitation marble.

VISITED BY THE GREAT

Presidents, statesmen, leaders of industry and the humble called at Carver's laboratory. Henry Ford paused at an exhibit in Carver Memorial Museum to view the peanut-oil massage display.

While he was best known for his contributions to agriculture, Dr. Carver was also listed among the great artists of his age.

One of his paintings hangs in Luxembourg Gallery. Landscapes were his choice, and his Curtis Browns were pointed out with pride to all who called at Tuskegee while he was there. They were made with paints developed by his young assistant—from the magnolia blossom cone, the Osage orange, banana skins and coffee grounds.

Besides being chief of research and experiment at Tuskegee Institute, Dr. Carver was a director of the Department of Agriculture research; collaborator in the division of plant industry, United States Department of Agriculture; member of the Royal Society of Arts, London; holder of the 1923 Spingarn Medal; and winner in 1939 of the Roosevelt Medal for achievement in science.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include an address delivered by Pope Pius XII a week ago. I have talked to the Public Printer, and there will be more than two pages, but, irrespective of that, I ask unanimous consent that the address be inserted notwithstanding.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MR. SPEAKER RAYBURN

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, in these trying days, when the greatest external danger that has confronted our country exists, it is necessary that we have in all positions of public trust, particularly in high and key positions, men of vision and courage. There must be only one thought uppermost in the minds of all of us—to win the war and preserve our country, and also a future world, in which decent people of all countries, men and women of good will, can live in peace. Fortunately we have such a leader in the legislative branch, whom we have just elected Speaker of this great body. Without regard to party, we all have a great affection for our beloved Speaker. He will treat every Member fairly; he will truly represent the House in all governmental activities. I am proud to enjoy his friendship and to serve with him as majority leader. Not so many years ago there was born one who has made his imprint upon American life. The child of years ago is our beloved Speaker of today—a great leader—of whom we of the House are all proud, our great war Speaker, and we all hope and pray, our victory Speaker. I know I express the sentiments of the House in congratulating SAM RAYBURN on his birthday anniversary, and when I extend to him our best wishes for many future birthday anniversaries.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may address the Chair for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, if the gold of unwavering loyalty and deep friendship buys privilege, then in addressing you I am within my own right.

This House in having reelected you to the great office of Speaker honors itself when it honors you and continues unbroken a cordial and affectionate relationship which must be made to work for the public good.

The responsibilities that rest upon you, Mr. Speaker, are beyond the power of human imagination to measure. Decisions which must be taken in this Chamber may well influence the course of civilization and certainly influence the fate of millions yet unborn. Washington is today literally the hub of the globe. Our Nation is having to mother the whole world, and you are the second ranking official in the Government. You need the help of Almighty God, and the loyal support of your colleagues. It is my prayer that these you may enjoy.

Mr. Speaker, you are not only the Speaker of this House, you are its symbol. In your keeping is its honor, its reputation, and its place in the confidence of the people. Yours is the duty and the pleasure, I am sure, of defending it against all abuse of person or power.

The Congress, Mr. Speaker, is the special instrument of the people by which they control their Government and those who govern them. It is the special instrument through which those who operate the Government get their mandates and their authority from the people. The Congress, sir, is the heart and conscience, it is the spirit and the soul of government by consent of the governed.

The House of Representatives, Mr. Speaker, by reason of its very nature—by reason of the fact that its Members go back to the electorate every 2 years for approval or disapproval of their policies—may be said to represent more intimately the people than perhaps is the case with the other branch of the Congress. In conferences which must from time to time be held between the legislative, the judicial, and the executive branches of the Government you, Mr. Speaker, will speak for this House, and you will speak with an authority that cannot be questioned.

The great honor that is yours delights me as your friend. The great responsibility that is yours I hope every Member of this House, irrespective of party, may be privileged to help you carry and discharge.

Mr. Speaker, the winning of the war is our chief business, and to that end this House will give its all. But we want to keep America. We want to preserve the liberties of our people. We want to keep our constitutional representative form of government. We want a Congress that is not only coordinate but one that is coequal and independent.

It matters little, Mr. Speaker, whether any individual in this House remains here or goes back to private life because throughout a century and a half of our national existence Members of this and the other body have come and gone, but Congress, as an institution, goes on forever, and must go on forever if liberty is to survive.

We recognize with regret that the terrible business of war renders necessary the temporary surrender of many of our liberties and privileges, but let me ask you, sir, have we not at times gone dangerously far astray? If we expect to keep America as we know and love America, do we not need to stop, take our bearings, and be certain of our course? The people expect the laws governing them to be made by their Congress; to be made by those they choose to represent them, and not by people they have never seen, whose policies they know nothing about, whom they have elected to no office, and with whom they are unacquainted.

Mr. Speaker, a difficult task confronts the Congress, and that task is to reestablish balanced government by the Congress, recapturing powers which never should have been delegated. Powers which it cannot reclaim it must redefine. Congress must use that great and certain power reserved to it in the Constitution—the control of the purse. I say to you, sir, that government by bureaucrats must be broken, and broken now, and to the accomplishment of these measures necessary to the preservation of liberty and constitutional government, you, Mr. Speaker, must lead the way.

This House, speaking with the voice of the people, is determined that the legislative shall be in fact as well as name a coequal branch of the Government. It is determined to stand upon its own feet, to do its own thinking, to write its own laws, and, in its own right, to perform its constitutional functions. It is your great good fortune, as it is your awful responsibility, to render a high public service to the Nation and to the world in your position as the presiding officer of this great parliamentary body. I count it fortunate for the Nation and the world that a man of your breadth of views and kindliness of nature should be the Speaker of this House at a time like this.

Your training from childhood has fitted you to render this historic service in this unique period in human history. You have the confidence of both sides of the House. Your fairness, your Americanism, your ability, are unquestioned.

This war has laid tremendous strains upon our civil procedures. Unless those strains are properly met and adequately handled, they can menace our whole scheme of parliamentary government.

This House must be cemented into a working agency with the sole objective of winning the war and of saving civilization afterward.

As Speaker, we all know you will confer with the leaders of both sides. Your fairness and kindliness alone, your good judgment and your sense of justice, alone can make possible a united body in this House to protect our American freedom and our American ideals.

As Speaker, by grace of the House, you are responsive to the will of the House. As the head of this parliamentary body it is your profoundly important function to deal with the President of the United States. The President as head of the executive department is powerful; indeed, as Commander in Chief, he is wellnigh all powerful. The Vice President, as the head of the Senate, occupies a position of great influence and honor. But you, sir, as Speaker of the House of Representatives, wield more power and exert more influence on events in this country than any other individual except the President.

I think we are all keenly conscious that our system of Government cannot function in this time of stress and danger without the aid and influence of the House of Representatives. By reason of events, which touch the lives and fortunes of every individual in the world, it has become imperative that the checks and balances of our American constitutional form of Government be more carefully adjusted and more fully employed than at any time in the history of this Nation.

The decisions which must be taken and the problems which must be met here and the sacrifices which the people must bear as the result of our decisions are too fundamental; they are too profound; they are too vast to be decided by any one man or any small group of men. The people must be heard through their representatives in the Congress. The Congress must be heard in the supreme councils of the Nation through you, Mr. Speaker.

In the sunshine of the Texas plains, in the free winds that swept across those magnificent distances, in the traditions of your State so rich in heroism and self-reliance, in the hospitality, the friendliness of the Texas heart and the Texas home, you, Mr. Speaker, have imbibed that kindly nature, that great courage, that breadth of view, that balance of judgment which stand your Nation in such good stead in her hour of need now.

Reflecting these qualities in your attitude, Mr. Speaker, representing and speaking for this House of Representatives in the councils of the Nation, and the world, I say to you, sir, that you will have the wholehearted support of the House of Representatives and the country. May God put wisdom in your mind and strength in your heart to discharge to your country and the world these vast responsibilities with honor to yourself and eternal blessing to your fellow men.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD at this point a poem entitled "A Plea to the Seventy-eighth Congress," written for us by Mr. Joseph Auslander, of the Library of Congress. I wanted to read the poem, but in view of the pressure of official business connected with the inauguration of the new Congress, I shall insert it in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, it is my great privilege to bring to your attention the following poem, which I have entitled "A Plea to the Seventy-eighth Congress." The beautiful and moving appeal was written especially for this day, January 6, by Mr. Joseph Auslander. As you know, Joseph Auslander is the gift officer at the Library of Congress.

I am certain that every Member will enjoy this work of Mr. Auslander and I am sure that the words of the plea will inspire us in our duties as legislators, aid us in our quest for a solution to the problems of government, and encourage us in efforts to furnish leadership, as did Jeanne d'Arc, to the people of America and to the peoples of the world.

The poem follows:

A PLEA TO THE SEVENTY-EIGHTH CONGRESS

This day on which you meet will mark
The birthday also of Jeanne d'Arc,
Whose life was ruled by simple faith
That rose triumphant over death;
Who stood secure in her great vision
Against the cynic's grim derision,
Strong against traitor's tongue and rod
In love of country, love of God;
In whose heart burned a fire that shamed
The faggots that about her flamed:
The soul's pure light that set France free,
The burning love of liberty,
The burning love of her sweet land,
The faith no foeman could withstand.
This is the day on which was born
The faith that saved a nation torn Within, without by double strife—
The faith that saves a nation's life.
Such faith, such valor we must give,
If we would make our freedom live.

—Joseph Auslander.

GEORGE WASHINGTON CARVER

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, yesterday evening at Tuskegee Institute, in Alabama, the great Negro institute of learning, made famous by Booker T. Washington, there died one of America's and the world's greatest scientists, Dr. George Washington Carver. Dr. Carver was born of slave parents about 1864 at Diamond, Mo., in Newton County, in my congressional district. He found new uses during his agricultural research for the lowly peanut, the soybean, and the sweetpotato, and from the red clay of the Southland he extracted many valuable substances—milk, ink, pigments, paint, and cosmetics. His scientific discoveries and research reflect not only credit to the Negro race, but they have brought fame and honor to this great Nation and have served humanity everywhere. Dr. Carver was a great artist as well as a renowned scientist. One of his paintings hangs in the Luxembourg Gallery.

In the last Congress, on July 15, 1942, I introduced H. R. 7391, a bill to provide for the establishment of the George Washington Carver National Monument. Today I am reintroducing this identical bill, and I trust that the Public Lands Committee and this House will take early and favorable action in order that they may purchase the farm near Diamond, Mo., on which Dr. Carver, one of the greatest benefactors of mankind, was born, to do honor to this great leader of the Negro race. This humble man, with his gentle spirit, his deep and abiding religious faith, his artistic temperament, and scientific achievements, won for himself immortality. Presidents, statesmen, captains of industry, and humble folks made a path to his door. The least a grateful nation can do is to build a monument to this hero of humanity.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. STEARNS of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein a radio address by Hon. WARREN R. AUSTIN, United States Senator from Vermont.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. SHAFER was granted permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.)

Mr. LEONARD W. HALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include the inaugural address of Governor Dewey, of New York.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include a radio address that I made recently.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. GUYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include a statement by Mr. Paul H. Ditzen, a member of the Wyandotte bar.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by inserting an editorial from the Minneapolis Times.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. MANASCO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include therein a newspaper editorial.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include therein a speech which I recently made over the radio in Louisiana.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Tuesday next, after the disposition of all other business on the Speaker's desk, I may address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KEOGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include a letter I have received.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE LATE HON. CAROLINE O'DAY

Mr. MERRITT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. MERRITT. Mr. Speaker, I am very reluctant to bring to the attention of the House at this time a very sad occurrence which has happened, in the loss of our colleague the late Mrs. Caroline O'Day.

She died just about the time the new Congress was assembling. She was a very great help to us in our work. Mrs. O'Day was a very charitable woman. Not only was she a Member of the House of Representatives but she was also the secretary of the Democratic Club. I am sure every Member feels, as I do, a sense of deep personal loss in her passing. We trust that her reward may be as great as her service.

Mr. KEOGH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MERRITT. I yield.

Mr. KEOGH. Mr. Speaker, I should like to join with my distinguished colleague in lamenting the passing of a fine lady who for 8 years honored us and the great State of New York with her service in this body, and who for many years served the womanhood of America and her country in a splendid, intelligent, capable, and forward-looking way. She was a distinguished Member of this House, and we all mourn her passing.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MERRITT. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I know every Member here mourns the passing of Mrs. O'Day, a true gentlewoman, a lady in the real sense of the word, a woman of the strongest convictions from her childhood, a person who did not espouse a cause for the moment or for any purpose except a sincere and honorable one. She did a great service in the earlier days for the cause of women, the garment workers, and for other women in industry, and for the underprivileged in New York. As one of them said to me: "I know you will like our Mrs. O'Day." We did like her, her honesty, her great modesty, her love of humanity, her intelligence, and her ability. We cannot replace people of this kind, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MERRITT. I yield.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I, too, learned with genuine regret of the death of our late colleague, Caroline O'Day. She was always quiet, unassuming, but withal a most effective Member of this august body. She was elected in 1934 and served with distinction for 8 years. She was a member of the Committee on Insular Affairs, the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, and she was chairman of the Committee on the Election of the President and Vice President. She was always careful, precise, and painstaking in her work. She never played to the gallery, she never sought publicity, she was every inch a statesman. She never used her sex as a glamorous weapon of achievement. She was highly regarded for her intelligence and accomplishments.

Caroline O'Day was an idealist, but her idealism never interfered with her realism.

New York loses a splendid leader, a laborer in welfare organizations, a powerful spearhead. The Halls of Congress were not the only arena wherein she succeeded. She was an eminent artist and achieved fame as a painter, etcher, and costume designer. She was always a member, a loyal member, of the Democratic Party.

We have lost a sincere adherent, the country has lost a genuine patriot, and my State of New York has lost a liberal servant; we have all lost a fine friend.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MERRITT. I yield.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I too, join my delegation and colleagues in mourning the loss of Caroline O'Day. She was a member of the Committee on Immigration of which I have had the honor of being chairman for many years. In her work in the committee she demonstrated intelligent understanding of the problems dealt with. She was human, charitable, and represented a great picture of a fine lady. My committee joins me in mourning the loss of this lady. I personally will miss her very much, as I at many times consulted her on great human progressive problems and always received the proper answer.

Mr. Speaker, on some future occasion I hope to extend my remarks on the life and character of Caroline O'Day.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MERRITT. I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GAMBLE].

Mr. GAMBLE. I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. Speaker, I was greatly shocked to learn of the death of my friend and neighbor, the Honorable Caroline O'Day, and I join with my colleagues in expressing not only my own personal sympathy in the loss that has come to her family but the deep sympathy of her many friends and neighbors in my congressional district where she lived in Westchester County, N. Y.

Mrs. O'Day was for many years one of the prominent women in public life, not only in Westchester County, but in the State of New York.

A gentlewoman of culture, of high ideals and purposes, Mrs. O'Day was a leader early in the cause of woman suffrage. She believed that women had a place in the political life of this country—that they should take a part in it and her own political career proved indeed those principles for which she strove.

A great humanitarian, a liberal always, kind, soft-spoken, sympathetic, she worked with and for all groups and classes in all walks of life with a complete understanding of and a desire to better the social and economic condition, particularly among the working people. She did much in advancing a liberal program of social and welfare reform.

In all this she worked quietly and yet with much enthusiasm and with a quality of leadership that made her one of the outstanding citizens of the Empire State. In her death the citizens of Westchester County and New York State have lost a true friend.

Mr. BYRNE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MERRITT. I yield.

Mr. BYRNE. Mr. Speaker, the passing of Mrs. O'Day is not the end of an epoch, but it is the passing of the beginning of an epoch. Mrs. O'Day represented the womanhood of this country who sought through the original suffragette program equal rights with men in suffrage. The story of her work on the suffrage movement is interesting and is also illustrative of the work of millions of other women in our country who were impelled and inspired by the suffrage movement and the leadership of many other women who had been originally in the movement. Mrs. O'Day, in my opinion, is representative of that period when the suffragette movement came to its greatest peak; to wit, about 1910, 1911, 1912, and 1913. Mrs. O'Day was standing on the curb in New York City observing the passing of a suffragette parade. As the parade passed by, her husband turned to her and said:

My dear, some day I hope to see you in a parade of this kind.

The tears sprung to her eyes, her heart was inspired, her soul was thrilled by the parade and the movement, but she wondered how her husband would react to the problem, and when he spoke to her about her joining the movement she felt indeed deeply moved and deeply grateful.

After that there was never a suffragette parade or a suffragette meeting or movement that was not led somewhat by Mrs. O'Day. She proceeded on from year to year until she became in the State of New York one of the great outstanding leaders of woman suffrage.

I shall never forget personally attending many meetings at which she presided, and at which she was the moving spirit. When I came to Congress in 1937 I discussed with her many times the very marvelous improvement that women had attained down through the years since, say 1920. It was in 1916 that the women obtained the right to vote in a national election first in California, and as we all rather vividly recollect, the women, having the right to vote in California, made possible the election of Woodrow Wilson as President in 1916.

Mrs. O'Day has passed to a great reward. She is one of the outstanding pioneers of that particular movement in womanhood and will unquestionably as history is written take a very high place in the record of achievements in the movement. Today I believe she is laid away in her last resting place. My tribute in a poetic sense is one that I am reminded of because she not only loved it but it was loved by one of the great men of all times, Abraham Lincoln. Many times during those perilous days between 1860 and 1865 President Lincoln recited the 12 stanzas of this poem. No one knows who wrote it. Some believe it was written by Knox, while others attribute it to various authors; however, it has great potency and it possesses great philosophy.

Oh, why should the spirit of mortal be proud?
Like a swift-flitting meteor, a fast flying cloud,
A flash of the lightning, a break of the wave,
He passeth from life to his rest in the grave.

The leaves of the oak and the willow shall fade,
Be scattered around, and together be laid;
As the young and the old, the low and the high,
Shall crumble to dust and together shall lie.

The child that a mother attended and loved,
The mother that infant's affection who proved,
The husband that mother and infant who blessed—
Each, all, are away to their dwellings of rest.

The maid on whose brow, on whose cheek, in whose eye,
Shone beauty and pleasure—her triumphs are by;
And alike from the minds of the living erased
Are the memories of mortals who loved her and praised.

The peasant, whose lot was to sow and to reap;
The herdsman, who climbed with his goats up the steep,
The beggar, who wandered in search of his bread—
Have faded away like the grass that we tread.

The saint who enjoyed the communion of heaven,
The sinner who dared to remain unforgiven,
The wise and the foolish, the guilty and just,
Have quietly mingled their bones in the dust.

So the multitude goes, like the flower or weed,
That withers away to let others succeed;
So the multitude comes, even those we behold,
To repeat every tale that has often been told.

For we are the same things our fathers have been;
We see the same sights our fathers have seen;
We drink the same stream, we feel the same sun,
And run the same course our fathers have run.

The thoughts we are thinking our fathers did think;
From the death we are shrinking our fathers did shrink;
To the life we are clinging our fathers did cling,
But it speeds from us all like the bird on the wing.

They loved—but the story we cannot unfold;
They scorned—but the heart of the haughty is cold;
They grieved—but no wail from their slumbers will come;
They joyed—but the tongue of their gladness is dumb.

They died—ah! they died—we, things that are now,
That walk on the turf that lies over their brow,
And make in their dwellings a transient abode,
Meet the changes they met on their pilgrimage road.

Yea, hope and despondency, pleasure and pain,
Are mingled together in sunshine and rain:
And the smile and the tear, the song and the dirge,
Still follow each other like surge upon surge.

'Tis the wink of an eye; 'tis the draught of a breath
From the blossom of health to the paleness of death,
From the gilded saloon to the bier and the shroud;
Oh, why should the spirit of mortal be proud?

Mr. Speaker, upon this very sad occasion of memorializing the memory of one of our colleagues who did so much for the progress of humanity in her lifetime, I place upon her bier these few thoughts of one long dead. I trust that they may enshrine somewhat not only her memory and her accomplishments, but the love that we all bore her and now bear for her memory.

Mr. Speaker, in bidding her adieu, it is my prayer to God Almighty that on the other side, seated at His right hand, she will receive a deserved eternal reward.

Mr. MERRITT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members who desire may have the right to extend their own remarks in memory of Mrs. O'Day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MERRITT]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include an address I made before the Mississippi Valley Flood Control Association in New Orleans.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SNYDER]?

There was no objection.

(Mr. CELLER asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.)

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD in two instances.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. WICKERSHAM]?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD in two respects and to include some brief extracts.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW]?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROLPH. Mr. Speaker, I have two requests: First, that I may extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include an editorial, also transcript of the radio broadcast, in connection with the arrival of the battle cruiser San Francisco in San Francisco, and also to extend my own remarks in connection with the Army-Navy E award to the Union Iron Works plant of the Bethlehem Steel Corporation, both of which events occurred on December 11, 1942.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. ROLPH]?

There was no objection.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to make two insertions in the RECORD, one a recent address by Mr. Willkie and the second a recent article by General Smuts.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, on what subject is the address by Mr. Willkie?

Mr. COLE of New York. I am sure the gentleman from Michigan must have heard of it at one time or another.

Mr. HOFFMAN. No; I never heard of it.

Mr. COLE of New York. It is an address delivered by Mr. Willkie on some date in November in Canada.

Mr. HOFFMAN. What is it about?

Mr. COLE of New York. It is on a most interesting subject.

Mr. HOFFMAN. What is it?

Mr. COLE of New York. Post-war problems.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Why clutter up the RECORD with something like that before we have won the war?

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Speaker, I renew my request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein some excerpts.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on two subjects.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Friday next, at the conclusion of the legislative program of the day and following any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 35 minutes. I want to talk about Mr. Maloney down town, and some articles that were put in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a poem written by Col. Floyd Evans.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

(Mr. CANNON of Missouri and Mr. LAMBERTSON asked and were given permission to extend their own remarks in the RECORD.)

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a remarkable editorial entitled "Freedom's Textbook."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on two different subjects and also to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a short newspaper article.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on two subjects and to include an article in each one.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

THE EQUAL RIGHTS AMENDMENT

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes and to revise and extend my remarks and include therein the names of 42 Members of this House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, on this, the opening day of the Seventy-eighth Congress, I have introduced a resolution for an amendment to the Constitution which would provide that "men and women shall have equal rights throughout the United States and every place subject to its jurisdiction."

This is a very historic proposal, known sometimes as the equal rights amendment but more generally as the Lucretia Mott amendment in honor of the distinguished pioneer who did so much to pave the way for women's rights in America and throughout the world.

This proposed constitutional amendment is offered as a corollary of the nineteenth amendment to the Constitution, which gave women a democratic instrument—the vote—by the effective use of which they may gain their rights, but did not give them their rights.

The equal rights amendment, if adopted, would bring to full fruition the age-old struggle of women to attain the complete stature of position and influence to which they are entitled as creatures of God, under all of the canons of justice. It would do this by repealing in one swoop an almost infinite variety of State enactments and local ordinances that discriminate against women. It would truly place woman on a par with man, and that is where she belongs.

It is unnecessary for the purposes of this occasion to review these discriminations in any detail. They stand out as plainly as a flag on a pikestaff, and he who runs may read and understand them. They comprise a black record of oppression and injustice. Some States deny the right of women to serve as guardians. What is the justice of that? What is the sense of it? Who is better qualified to serve as guardian for a child than a competent woman with a mother's instinct and a mother's heart?

Burnita Shelton Matthews, an able Washington attorney, not long ago made a survey of discriminatory statutes and practices imposed by the States on women and the results were very revealing. It seems incomprehensible, but it is true, that women are excluded from jury service in a majority of the States. Now, as we all know, jury service is an important part of the administration of justice, and to say that women are not qualified for that service is a monstrous libel on women. One State bars women from all high public offices. In another State the husband is allowed by statute to collect his wife's pay envelope. In another State no married woman, however intelligent, may freely carry on a business without a court inquiry into her competency. In two States when the husband and wife own common property he is permitted to will away his one-half, but the wife, if the husband lives, cannot leave a dollar of her half of this common property to anyone, not even to her own children. In many States, divorce laws are unequal and discriminatory in favor of men. And so on, ad infinitum.

If women are good enough to serve as WAACS and WAVES and to render splendid service working in the defense plants of our country, they are good enough to be entitled to enjoy equal rights with men under the laws of the land, and the refusal of that right is a stain on our flag.

This resolution takes its honored place as House Joint Resolution No. 1 of the Seventy-eighth Congress. Let us all, as friends of democracy no less than as friends of women, join together and pass this resolution at this session. To be allowed to participate in this great history-making achievement is not only a duty but an inestimable privilege.

Under the rules of the House only one name can appear as the introducer of a resolution, but I am authorized to say that the following 42 Members, representing 19 States, about equally divided between the two great political parties, approve the resolution and will give it their cordial support:

Guyer, Kansas; Jonkman, Michigan; Murdock, Arizona; Gearhart, California; Voorhis, California; Peterson, Florida; Wilson, Indiana; Cunningham, Iowa; D'Alesandro, Maryland; Shafer, Michigan; Woodruff, Michigan; Bradley, Michigan; Hartley, New Jersey; Hendricks, Florida; Harless, Arizona; Ellison, Maryland; Barrett, Wyoming; Baldwin, Maryland; Bender, Ohio; Price, Florida; Angell, Oregon; O'Toole, New York; Byrne, New York; Weaver, North Carolina; Burdick, North Dakota; Mott, Oregon; Troutman, Pennsylvania; Bryson, South Carolina; Plumley, Vermont; Flannagan, Virginia; Ward Johnson, California; Ploeser, Missouri; Beall, Maryland; Gillie, Indiana; Cannon, Florida; Wright, Pennsylvania; Scanlon, Pennsylvania; Sheridan, Pennsylvania; McGranery, Pennsylvania; Sikes, Florida; Myers, Pennsylvania; Weiss, Pennsylvania.

GASOLINE RATIONING

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, the people of the country are beset by a number of bureaucratic asininities, but the silliest asininity of all is that which requires the people to sign their license numbers on the backs of their gasoline ration coupons.

I hold in my hand form OPA–R–120, which is a sheet of paper having glue on its face. The gasoline dealer who takes your gasoline ration coupons pastes them face up on this glue-faced form, and the license number you have so sweetly written upon the back of the coupon becomes melded with the glue on the face of this piece of paper and no one ever sees that number again.

Why does not the O. P. A. realize how foolish that requirement is and cancel that regulation right off the books? It is a piece of foolishness that ought to be abolished immediately.

POST-WAR PLANNING COMMISSION

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, I am sure that every Member of the House was thrilled today by the splendid tributes paid by the minority leader to our beloved Speaker, and by the remarks of our reelected Speaker and his reply in turn to the minority leader. They were thrilled also by the resolute and stirring addresses giving testimony to the world that this House and this country are determined to fight this war through to a complete, early, and permanent victory.

However, in that connection I call attention of the Congress to the fact that up to this time at least this Congress has not provided any forum or body or jury to which can be submitted the numerous proposals which are adrift in the country today as to how we can get this type of permanent peace for which we all pray. Today I introduced in the House a joint resolution known as House Joint Resolution 28. My resolution proposes the creation of a post-war planning commission to study the various problems confronting this Republic, both from the standpoint of international policy and from the standpoint of our domestic economy. I recall as a boy hearing a poem that went something like this:

I shot an arrow into the air;
It fell to earth, I know not where.

It seems to me that today a lot of ideas, some good and some bad, have been shot into the air, and nobody knows where they are going to fall, or whether they will ever contact realism, because no proving ground is provided for the conduct of a careful, realistic, and analytical study with respect to the value of these proposals.

Up until Pearl Harbor we had two groups of opinion in this Nation, which for want of better names were called interventionists and isolationists. Since Pearl Harbor we have happily had only one point of view in this country, and that may be called the indomitables, because we are firmly united and we are indomitable in our crusade for victory. However, we must in some manner fashion our thoughts and measure our views as to what is best to do in our post-war policies, as we assume our rightful position in the world of affairs. We must eliminate the blind spots in the thinking of a lot of people speaking on the subject today who apparently fail to recognize a relationship between our foreign policy and our domestic economy; neither can operate in a vacuum. Somebody said one time that the most dangerous thing in the world is the void created by the loss of a religion. I think there is a lot of truth in that. I also imagine that it is highly dangerous for a nation to operate in a void created by the loss of an accepted and acknowledged foreign policy. Consequently, I would like to help contribute to the elimination of such a hazard—the elimination of such a void—by the creation of a biparty, nonpolitical, nonsensational, realistic commission to study the problems of an acceptable American foreign policy following the war, to help crystallize our peace objectives, and to consider our domestic problems related thereto.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent at this time to include in these remarks a reprinting of House Joint Resolution 28, which I introduced today, and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

House Joint Resolution 28

Joint resolution creating a Post-War Planning Commission

(Introduced by Mr. MUNDT, of South Dakota, January 6, 1943)

Whereas it is necessary, if there is to be a durable peace concluded at the termination of the present war, that the American people prepare for peace; and

Whereas preparation for solving the problems of peace requires study of what those problems may be and the consequences which their solution entails both upon the future stability and peace of the rest of the world and upon the domestic economy of the United States; and

Whereas it is essential that the policy of the United States in respect of the treaty of peace have the undivided support of both major political parties in the United States; and

Whereas since it cannot be foreseen which party will be in control of the Government of the United States at the termination of the present war, it is desirable that responsibility for and leadership and participation in that study be shared equally by both major political parties: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That (a) there is hereby created a Post-War Planning Commission, which shall consist of 32 members chosen as follows: Eight members shall be chosen by the Honorable Cordell Hull and 8 members shall be chosen by Ex-President Herbert Hoover. Four each of the members chosen by the Honorable Cordell Hull and Ex-President Herbert Hoover, respectively, shall be chosen to represent, respectively, agriculture, business, labor, and industry, and the other 4 members chosen by each shall be chosen with due regard to geographical distribution throughout the United States of citizens best fitted for a realistic consideration of the problems to be discussed by the Commission. Eight members shall be chosen from among the Members of the Senate, 4 by the majority leader and 4 by the minority leader of the Senate. Eight members shall be chosen from among the Members of the House of Representatives, 4 by the Speaker and 4 by the minority leader of the House of Representatives. The members of the Commission shall not receive any compensation for their services on the Commission, but shall be reimbursed for all necessary travel and subsistence expenses (or receive a per diem in lieu thereof) while away from their residence on the business of the Commission. Any vacancy occurring in the membership of the Commission shall be filled in the same manner as the original choice was made, except that if for any reason such vacancy cannot be filled in such manner, it shall be filled by the choice of a person chosen by the affirmative vote of not less than 20 members of the Commission. The Commission shall select a chairman from among its members.

(b) The Commission is authorized to employ and fix the compensation of such professional, technical, clerical, stenographic, and other employees as it deems necessary.

SEC. 2. (a) It shall be the duty of the Commission to examine and study proposals and suggestions with respect to the organization of the world after the present war, to assemble and digest pertinent data with respect thereto, and to make recommendations from time to time relating to the post-war position of the United States in world affairs, its peace objectives, and its domestic post-war problems.

(b) The Commission may exercise its powers either within or without the United States.

(c) The Commission shall make a report to Congress not later than 8 months after the date of the enactment of this act, and shall make subsequent reports and recommendations whenever it deems it desirable so to do.

(d) The Commission shall cease to exist on whichever of the following dates is the earlier: (1) The date 1 year after the President proclaims the termination of the hostilities in the present war, or (2) the date of the ratification by the United States of the treaty of peace after the termination of the present war.

SEC. 3. To carry out the provisions of this act the sum of $100,000 is authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, the foregoing is a reprint of the complete text of House Joint Resolution 28 for the purpose of creating a post-war planning commission to study the problems of the post-war world and to make recommendations for the clear-cut enunciation of our peace aims in this war, our position and relationship in the family of nations after the war, and for domestic policies which will help alleviate the impact of the war. My bill specifically stresses the importance of this commission making a careful and realistic study of the relationship of our foreign and domestic policies so that we may not make the mistake of developing myopic programs which jeopardize either the success of our domestic economy and our American way of life here at home or the opportunity of making American influence felt for the betterment and peaceful security of the rest of the world. Too many current speakers and writers discuss either foreign or domestic policy with apparent disregard or disdain of the impact of the first upon the latter, or vice versa. It is this blind spot in our thinking which must be eliminated if America is either to assume its rightful position in the family of nations or rebuild its domestic economy so as to continue as the greatest and most powerful member of that family.

By creating such a post-war planning commission as I propose, we would bring together around one table representatives of the executive and the legislative branches of government together with those selected from the general public. We would make certain that agriculture, labor, business, and the professions all had important representation on this planning commission. We would have a bipartisan group selected equally by members of the two major parties and the results obtained from the commission's activities would be devoid of partisanship. It would afford a real opportunity for the two great parties to unite upon a program of post-war policies, both foreign and domestic, which would bring the greatest good to the greatest number. There would be no conflict between various branches of government or between political parties. There could be a genuine meeting of minds on the facts which the most careful study by the best brains available to survey the facts indicated were meritorious.

Mr. Speaker, it is just as important to prepare for peace in time of war as it is to prepare for war in time of peace. Unfortunately, this country after being in the war for more than a year has failed to set up a commission or authority which gives equitable representation to all groups and phases of popular government and which is charged with working out the steps in a wise preparation for a permanent and prosperous peace. Let us delay no longer. No one can predict just when this war will be won nor which political party will be charged with writing the peace and directing the period of reconstruction. It is true, also, that neither a wise and lasting peace nor a safe and sound reconstruction policy will eventuate if either is to be developed and determined upon narrow partisan lines. Thus I hope Congress will adopt my proposal as incorporated in House Joint Resolution 28.

The Commission which I propose would be equipped to make a realistic, bipartisan, nonpolitical study of post-war foreign and domestic proposals to the end that America and all the world can benefit from recommendations worked out in such an atmosphere of serious-minded, nonsensational, deliberation on the most significant problems ever facing this Republic. We must not make the mistake either of fashioning international programs without regard to our own American destiny or of focusing our attention upon American problems without regard to their relationship, workability, and value in terms of the world in which we live. The Commission I propose would bring together these two realms of planning and thinking in a manner which should help clarify our peace aims and aid in the prevention of post-war policies which might become injurious either to our domestic welfare or to the peace and development of the remainder of the world.

Secretary of State Hull is the outstanding authority of the Democratic Party on foreign policy and his selections will give due emphasis to the executive viewpoint. Ex-President Herbert Hoover is the only living Republican who has been President and due to his experience and background he is the best authority among prominent Republicans on matters of foreign policy. The Democratic and Republican leaders of the House and Senate could be depended upon to select representatives to this Commission from among the Members of the two Houses who would give articulation to the point of view of the legislative branch of Government and who would reflect the various attitudes to be found therein.

Mr. Speaker, the peace of the world and the preservation of our way of life here at home may well depend upon the manner in which we prepare for peace and get ready for the victory which our armed forces are sure to win. The type of careful, impersonal, fact-facing planning which a Post-War Planning Commission such as I propose would achieve can mean much to the world after the war. The time to start planning without partisanship for a victory which will be both secure and significant is now. I sincerely hope that my resolution will be favorably adopted by an overwhelming vote in the early months of the Congress which today begins its deliberations with the prayers of most of the civilized world devoted to the devout wish that it will measure up to the challenges confronting it.

BOOKS FOR OUR FIGHTING MEN

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I take this occasion to call the attention of the Members of the House to the current Victory book drive to send interesting and entertaining reading matter to our men in the armed services. Army and Navy officers bear witness that ours is the "readingest" Army and Navy, and the news correspondents from the South Pacific have reported that the chief diversion of our men on Guadalcanal is reading. Here is a Nation-wide project which I am sure you will all want to support, the forwarding of good books to our fighters in the Army, the Navy, the Marine Corps, the Coast Guard and the merchant seaman service. The 1943 Victory book campaign which opened officially yesterday, January 5, is a patriotic undertaking, sponsored jointly by the American Library Association, the Red Cross, and the United Service Organizations, to provide the best possible reading fare to our men in camps, naval bases, ports of embarkation, on ships, and behind the battle lines.

On Monday of next week, or rather Tuesday of next week, opportunity will be given for the contribution of whatever books Members desire to make. On next Monday I shall announce where in the Capitol Building the books may be delivered, and arrangements will be so made. I understand it is desired to take moving pictures of Members of Congress contributing the books, as a stimulus to be used throughout the country, but between now and Monday when I make the announcement as to where books may be delivered, I hope Members will look over what books they have at their offices and at their homes, and be prepared to deliver them on Tuesday. This is a most worthy cause and the books will prove a source of interest and consolation to the men of the armed forces.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Does the gentleman feel that old copies of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD would be appropriate to send?

Mr. McCORMACK. I do not know of anything that is more interesting than the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, though I cannot vouch for its truth always.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, if we want to give the American people a real free press, it would not be a bad idea to increase the circulation of the number of copies of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD published, so that they might get into the hands of the American people, who then will know what their Congress is doing. I will go along with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. VORYS], and more than double the number of copies of the RECORD now published in order that the American people may get it into their hands and know just exactly what their Members of Congress are doing for them and what they are trying to do to win this war and save this Republic.

Mr. McCORMACK. I think there is much in the comment of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN]. The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is a valuable document. I know that everybody likes to get it, and I would like to have a larger mailing list myself.

Mr. RANKIN. As far as I am concerned, I have said all the time and I say it now, and I say it advisedly, the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is the one free press left that is not controlled by external influences and that is not under the domination of advertising. Every Member who places a word in that RECORD has 434 other Members to answer him. It is the greatest source of information the American people can have. As far as I am concerned, I would not only double the number now published but I would double it many times, in order that it might go into the homes of the American people all over the country. I do not believe we could do anything that would be of greater value to the American people or to the Members of the American Congress who are doing their patriotic duty to win this war and to save American institutions.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. MUNDT. I ask the gentleman to yield just for the purpose of saying something along the line which the gentleman from Mississippi has just said so eloquently that there is nothing left for me to say, except that I hope the majority leader will use his influence to help bring about increased circulation of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD so that it can go into the Army camps, to all the ships at sea, into the colleges and high schools of this country. I introduced a bill in the previous session, urging that that be done, but it fell by the wayside. I am sure if such a proposal would have the fathering of the gentleman from Massachusetts with his potent influence, it would mean a great deal to the country.

Mr. McCORMACK. I do not know whether my influence is potent or not, but I have always felt sympathetic to the proposal made by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] and, of course, his eloquence has influenced me and persuades me tremendously on this occasion. As far as I am concerned, I think there should be an increase. Just how far it should be worked out is for the appropriate committee, but I think the gentleman from Mississippi is absolutely right and also my friend from South Dakota. The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD wields a powerful influence. There must be some limitation on circulation, but the more we can spread it around the country the better it is for the people of our country.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have 1 more minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Let me say to the gentleman that there are many worthless publications, in my opinion, published by the various Government bureaus. As a rule, they are nothing in the world but self-advertising. We could take the money that is spent on those publications and confine it to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, which is not prepared propaganda. The matter contained in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is either speeches made on the floor or extensions of remarks for which Members take the responsibility. In my opinion, the money that is being wasted on many of these publications would more than pay for five times the number of CONGRESSIONAL RECORDS now issued. As far as I am concerned, I am willing to take my part of the responsibility and see that the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, as the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MUNDT] said, goes into the Army camps, into the schools and into the libraries of the country where every American can get his hands on one any time he wants to read it. I am tired of having the Congress misrepresented by a few flannelmouth propagandists who are paid to abuse and malign us.

Mr. McCORMACK. I hope that my original observation will not be lost sight of in this very interesting colloquy on the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and that the Members between now and next Tuesday will look over their books and contribute freely and liberally to this drive.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman advise the House what the program is for tomorrow?

Mr. McCORMACK. There is no program after the President's message and such other incidental matters as may arise. The Democrats will hold a caucus for the purpose of electing members to the Ways and Means Committee. I advise my Republican friends of that so that they will have that in mind.

I was hopeful that we would be able to adjourn from Thursday until Monday. Of course, that requires unanimous consent. On the first day of the session I would prefer not to submit it unless I know that unanimous consent would be granted. I see the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] standing. I would like to have him take me into his confidence, if he will, as to whether or not he would object to such a unanimous-consent request? I assure the gentleman that I will submit the unanimous-consent request that he have his 35 minutes on Monday.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I would be happy not only to take the gentleman but the whole world into my confidence. Of course, I do not have anything to conceal at all, if I can only get a larger audience. That is what bothers me all the time. As long as we are going to hear the President's message tomorrow, some Members on this side, I know, want to have something to say on Friday. The question that has been bothering me, and I hope the gentleman will help me out on this, are these Members on the minority side, for example, who hold positions on two or more important committees, going to have those same committee assignments in the next Congress? Could the gentleman tell me about that? That has been worrying me terribly.

Mr. McCORMACK. I can imagine that it would worry the gentleman if the gentleman is of the worrying type, but the gentleman is not of the worrying type.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Well, I appear to worry, anyway.

Mr. McCORMACK. But that is a matter for your own party. Now, will you object to my unanimous-consent request?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I will have to ask for a session on Friday, because there are so many Members who want to talk.

Mr. McCORMACK. I notice my friend gulped as if he would like to say he would not.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I just swallowed there because I was trying to be polite to the gentleman and it was hard to do.

Mr. McCORMACK. I am sorry. Unless the gentleman from Michigan changes his attitude I must say reluctantly there will be a session on Friday.

ADMISSION TO THE CHAMBER ON JANUARY 7, 1943

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to make a statement. After consultation with the majority and the minority leaders of the House, and remembering the terrific jam we had upon this floor on previous occasions when the President of the United States appeared here, with the consent and approval of the floor leaders the Chair announces that on tomorrow the door immediately opposite the Speaker will be open, and the doors on the Speaker's left and right, and none others. No one will be allowed upon the floor of the House who does not have the privilege of the floor of the House.

THE FUEL-OIL SITUATION IN NEW ENGLAND

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for one moment to make an appeal.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, everyone knows the chaotic condition that exists regarding oil and gasoline in the country. We today in Massachusetts, as a result of the lack of any department with power of control, and because of the indecision in all the departments handling oil and gasoline and by their conflicting statements, are actually suffering. In Tewksbury, in my district, kerosene tanks are empty, bunker oil is almost gone in the State—the bunker oil that is used by our industries—and the amount of fuel oil available for heating purposes is extremely low; there is great shortage.

I appeal to Members from other sections of the country to ask their constituents to give up until we can secure legislation—to give up the nonessential use of gasoline in order to keep our people from further suffering. We are assisting other countries, and I am sure my colleagues will want to assist the sections of our own country that today are suffering.

Our hospitals are closing; some of our schools have closed. Will you help us?

PROTECTING CONGRESS AGAINST ABUSE

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, along the line I was speaking a moment ago in response to the majority leader about the distribution of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, the time has come when Congress is constantly abused, maligned, and vilified over the radio. This is one of the problems we are going to have to meet. As far as I am concerned, I am in favor of Congress making arrangements whereby we may either have a national radio system or time divided between the two sides of both House and Senate in order that Members and Senators may go on the radio and speak to the American people on issues that confront the Congress, and thus offset a lot of the propaganda and insinuations that are being spread by a few flannel-mouthed propagandists who are doing more to destroy American institutions than they are to spread public information.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman has put his finger on a very important point. May I suggest that the radio is relatively fair from the standpoint of its distribution of time among points of view. The difficulty the gentleman refers to comes primarily because speakers use sponsored time to abuse Members of Congress.

Mr. RANKIN. That is right.

Mr. MUNDT. I think some legislation should be directed to the situation that permits the power of the purse to determine who is going to control the air to attack Members of Congress.

Mr. RANKIN. Congress should move into the driver's seat so far as its own affairs and its own protection are concerned.

[Here the gavel fell.]

ADJOURNMENT

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California.

Mr. ROGERS of California. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 4 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Thursday, January 7, 1943, at 12 o'clock noon.

10. A letter from the Chairman of the Board of Reconstruction Finance Corporation, transmitting the report of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for the month of September 1942; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

11. A letter from the president of the Electric Home and Farm Authority, transmitting, pursuant to the requirements of section 2 of the Electric Home and Farm Authority Act, as amended, the seventh annual report, prepared by direction of the board of trustees of Electric Home and Farm Authority, covering operations from July 1, 1941, through October 31, 1942, inclusive; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

12. A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a copy of an order pursuant to the act of July 1, 1932 (47 Stat. 564), canceling certain charges existing as debts due the United States by individual Indians and tribes of Indians; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

13. A letter from the chairman of the Tennessee Valley Authority, transmitting the annual report for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1942; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

14. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting the supplemental list of contracts in excess of $150,000; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

15. A letter from the executive director, national legislative committee of the American Legion, transmitting the financial statement of the American Legion up to October 31, 1942, as in accordance with the act of incorporation of the American Legion (Public Law 47, 66th Cong.); to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

16. A letter from the Postmaster General, transmitting a report to Congress of all cases where special contracts are made with railroad companies for the transportation of the mails, and the terms and reasons therefor; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

17. A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims of the United States, transmitting all judgments rendered by the Court of Claims for the year ended November 30, 1942; to the Committee on Claims.

18. A letter from the Comptroller General of the United States, transmitting a report of officers and administrative offices delinquent in rendering or transmitting accounts, and officers delinquent in payment of final balances, for the fiscal year 1942; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

19. A letter from the Archivist of the United States, transmitting a report of the Archivist of the United States on lists of papers, recommended to him for disposal by certain agencies of the Federal Government; to the Committee on the Disposition of Executive Papers.

20. A letter from the Archivist of the United States, transmitting a report of the Archivist of the United States on lists of papers, recommended to him for disposal by certain agencies of the Federal Government; to the Committee on the Disposal of Executive Papers.

21. A letter from the chairman of the National Mediation Board, transmitting the eighth annual report to Congress of the National Mediation Board, including the report of National Railroad Adjustment Board; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

22. A letter from the president of the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co., transmitting a report of the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co., to the Congress of the United States for the year 1942; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

23. A letter from the Acting Administrator of the Federal Security Agency, transmitting a report to the Congress of amounts and rates paid to the superintendent and to teachers at Columbia Institution for the Deaf; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

24. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a combined statement of receipts, expenditures, and balances of the United States Government for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1942; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

25. A letter from the Clerk of the House of Representatives, transmitting a report for the period from July 1, 1941, to June 30, 1942, giving names of statutory and contingent-fund employees of the House, and their respective compensations; to the Committee on Accounts.

26. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a draft of a proposed joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to construct, and the President of the United States to present to the people of St. Lawrence, Newfoundland, on behalf of the people of the United States, a hospital, dispensary, or other memorial, for heroic services to men of the United States Navy; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

27. A letter from the Clerk of the House of Representatives, transmitting a list of reports which it is the duty of any officer or department to make to Congress (H. Doc. 38); to the Committee on Accounts, and ordered to be printed.

28. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to grant easements for rights-of-way over, across, in, and upon naval reservations; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

29. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill to extend the jurisdiction of naval courts martial in time of war or national emergency to certain persons outside the continental limits of the United States; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

30. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill to provide for the reimbursement of certain Navy personnel for personal property lost as a result of the disaster at the East Base, Antarctica, on March 21, 1941; to the Committee on Claims.

SENATE

THURSDAY, JANUARY 7, 1943

The Chaplain, Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, whose years have no beginning nor ending, replenish us with Thy sustaining and restraining grace as our feet tread the uncertain ways of a new year. Our judgments must weigh vast issues, our minds must face tangled problems. We are pilgrims of the night; we have not passed this way before. Yet we are heirs of great traditions. We are conscious of the cloud of witnesses out of heroic yesterdays who look down upon us from the sacred spaces of this white shrine of each patriot's devotion. We are conscious, too, of a listening world hoping in its agony, as in these halls of state is being designed the global shape of things to come.

Upon the President of the United States and his counsellors, the Vice President, the Members of the Congress, the leaders of our armed forces, and upon all trusted with authority, upon whom rest the heavy burdens and responsibilities of vital decisions so largely molding the future and, for weal or woe, affecting the lives of untold millions, we implore the wisdom which is from above and the undergirding of Thy everlasting arms. Together, with fixed purpose of heart, in Thy might unafraid, we march to meet the issues of this crucial year as in the name of the Lord our God we set up our banners. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Wednesday, January 6, 1943, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, informed the Senate that a quorum of the House of Representatives had assembled; that Hon. SAM RAYBURN, a Representative from the State of Texas, had been elected Speaker; and that South Trimble, a citizen of the State of Kentucky, had been elected Clerk of the House of the Seventy-eighth Congress.

The message announced that a committee of three Members, consisting of Mr. MCCORMACK, Mr. DOUGHTON, and Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts, had been appointed by the Speaker on the part of the House of Representatives to join with the committee of the Senate to notify the President of the United States that a quorum of each House had assembled and that Congress is ready to receive any communication that he may be pleased to make.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to a concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 1) providing for a joint session of the two Houses at 12:30 o'clock in the afternoon today (January 7, 1943) for the purpose of receiving such communication as the President may be pleased to make to them, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT—JOINT MEETING OF THE TWO HOUSES

Mr. BARKLEY and Mr. MCNARY advanced in the center aisle, and Mr. BARKLEY said:

Mr. President, the committee appointed by the Vice President under the resolution adopted yesterday to act in conjunction with a similar committee of the House of Representatives to notify the President that the Congress is assembled and ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make has performed its duty, and the President stated that he would address a joint session of the Congress in the Hall of the House of Representatives at 12:30 p. m. today.

The concurrent resolution which has just come over from the House of Representatives provides for the joint session, and I ask that the concurrent resolution be now considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 1), which was read, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the two Houses of Congress assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Thursday, the 7th day of January 1943, at 12:30 o'clock in the afternoon, for the purpose of receiving such communications as the President of the United States shall be pleased to make to them.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the concurrent resolution is agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the ordinary morning business be postponed until the reassembling of the Senate following the address by the President. I may say to Members that the Senate will reassemble for a session at which bills and resolutions may be introduced, instead of doing that now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ADMINISTRATION OF OATH TO SENATOR GLASS

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to submit a resolution and have it read by the clerk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 4) was read as follows:

Whereas CARTER GLASS, a Senator-elect from the State of Virginia, is temporarily unable, by reason of illness at his residence in Lynchburg, Va., to appear in person to take the oath required by law as a Member of the Senate; and

Whereas there is no contest or question as to his election: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized to administer the oath of office to the said CARTER GLASS, and that the said oath, when administered as herein authorized, shall be accepted and received by the Senate as the oath of office of the said CARTER GLASS.

Mr. BYRD. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the House has sent word that it desires the Senate be in the Hall of the House of Representatives at 12:20 p. m. Therefore I think it would be well to have a quorum called, in order to notify all Senators.

Mr. HILL. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Aiken | George | O'Mahoney |
| Andrews | Gerry | Overton |
| Austin | Gillette | Radcliffe |
| Bailey | Green | Reed |

| Connally | Millikin | Wherry |
| Danaher | Moore | White |
| Davis | Murdock | Wiley |
| Eastland | Murray | Willis |
| Ellender | Nye | |
| Ferguson | O'Daniel | |

Mr. HILL. I announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] are absent from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY] is conducting hearings in Western States for the Special Committee to Investigate Agricultural Labor Shortages.

The Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] and the Senators from New York [Mr. MEAD and Mr. WAGNER] are necessarily absent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish to announce that, in order to comply with the request of the House to be in the Hall of the House of Representatives at 20 minutes after 12 o'clock, the Senate will assemble and leave its Chamber at 15 minutes after 12. In the meantime, I suggest that the Senate recess for 3 minutes so that it may be at ease.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Senate will stand in recess for 3 minutes.

Thereupon (at 12 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess for 3 minutes.

At the expiration of the recess the Senate reassembled.

JOINT MEETING OF THE TWO HOUSES

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the terms of House Concurrent Resolution 1, adopted by the two Houses, the Senate will now proceed to the Hall of the House of Representatives for a joint session with the House to receive a message from the President of the United States.

Thereupon the Senate, preceded by its Secretary (Edwin A. Halsey), its Sergeant at Arms (Chesley W. Jurney), and the Vice President, proceeded to the Hall of the House of Representatives for the purpose of receiving a message from the President of the United States.

ANNUAL MESSAGE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

The annual message of the President of the United States was this day delivered by him to the joint meeting of the two Houses of Congress.

(The full text of the message will be found in the proceedings of the House, p. 45.)

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

The Senate, having returned to its Chamber, reassembled at 1 o'clock and 28 minutes p. m., and the Vice President resumed the chair.

TENURE OF OFFICE OF GOVERNOR OF PUERTO RICO

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I introduce a bill to fix the tenure of the office of the Governor of Puerto Rico. I may say that a companion measure is being introduced today in the House of Representatives by the Resident Commissioner of Puerto Rico. I ask that the bill be referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs, and I also ask that a statement of my reason for the presentation of the measure in this form be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and referred as requested, and, without objection, the statement will be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The bill (S. 40) to provide that the term of office of the Governor of Puerto Rico shall expire upon the enactment of this act and at the end of each two-year period thereafter, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

The statement presented by Mr. VANDENBERG in connection with the bill is as follows:

It is universally recognized that a serious situation exists in Puerto Rico. There is a substantially supported opinion, both in Puerto Rico and here at home, that these difficulties stem from the administration of Governor Tugwell. In any event, they exist within his jurisdiction. Without further delay the Congress should determine whether a change in the governorship of Puerto Rico is the essential starting point looking toward a solution of these serious conditions.

Under existing law, the Governor of Puerto Rico serves indefinitely at the pleasure of the President. If his removal is deemed advisable by Congress, the only available process is impeachment; but impeachment is presumably confined to high crimes and misdemeanors of which an otherwise undesirable or discredited Governor might not be guilty. Under existing circumstances, the only other possible alternative would be a congressional resolution recommending his dismissal by the President; but when that congressional recourse was invoked in 1924 against certain Cabinet officers, President Coolidge immediately rejected the advice, declaring it to be outside the constitutional jurisdiction of the Congress to deal in any fashion with Presidential appointees after their original confirmation.

Under these circumstances, it appears that the answer to this dilemma—if Congress desires to assert some degree of continuous responsibility—is for the Governor of Puerto Rico to have a fixed tenure of office which forces him to pass periodically in congressional review. Therefore, I am introducing this bill, which terminates the tenure of the present Governor of Puerto Rico forthwith and fixes a definite 2-year term hereafter for his successors. If Governor Tugwell's tenure is thus terminated by statute—which is clearly within congressional jurisdiction—the President can renominate Governor Tugwell if he sees fit to do so. Then the Senate can explore and clarify the whole situation before it reconfirms him if such shall be its desire. Thus the whole controversy can be brought to an effective conclusion.

Certainly there is need to liquidate this controversy for the sake of all concerned. Obviously, there is serious doubt whether Governor Tugwell should longer be left in control of Puerto Rico's destinies. The House of Representatives feels this fact so keenly that its unanimous Agricultural Committee recently made a $15,000,000 relief appropriation for hungry Puerto Ricans wholly contingent upon Governor Tugwell's retirement. But this method of dealing with the problem is an inhumane recourse—namely, to withhold relief from the victims of famine until there is a change in a governorship over which the victims of famine have no control. The responsibility for the governorship is here in Washington and it should be met here in Washington in direct action by the President and the Congress pursuant to an authentic disclosure of the facts.

Governor Tugwell's removal has been prayerfully sought by petitions from numerous Puerto Rican groups, and by other students of Puerto Rican affairs who believe that his swiftly expanding bureaucracy and his superlatively expensive administration—with all its implicit national socialization—is a fateful threat to our Island wards and is related to the Island's present serious predicament. I am frank to say that in my own view his pattern of things—which often failed dismally at home—is being revived in prostrate Puerto Rico. But this is a question of fact which ought to be authentically established in connection with the other numerous protests which have challenged both the propriety and the efficiency of the Tugwell administration. There is no present assurance of any such effective review unless Congress acts in the fashion proposed by the bill which I am introducing today—a counterpart of which is also being introduced in the House of Representatives by Hon. BOLÍVAR PAGÁN, who was elected by the people of Puerto Rico to speak for them in Washington in his capacity as Resident Commissioner of Puerto Rico.

Among others who have asked for Governor Tugwell's removal are not only the Resident Commissioner from Puerto Rico to the United States but also the Union Republican, the Socialist and Unification Parties of Puerto Rico, the Chamber of Commerce, the Farmers' Association, and the Free Federation of Labor of Puerto Rico. But the only "removal" thus far has been the summary Presidential order last November "removing" Attorney General George A. Malcolm—one of the most distinguished career servants in the American Foreign Service—because he opposed what he officially branded as Governor Tugwell's unconstitutional and illegal acts.

A special Senate committee is investigating the critical Puerto Rican famine. But it has only limited jurisdiction and limited resources although its findings are calculated to have an important bearing upon the Tugwell regime. But I respectfully submit that the whole Tugwell regime should promptly pass in congressional review. Congress cannot escape its share of Puerto Rican responsibility. But it cannot implement this responsibility under existing circumstances—except by some such dubious device as the House committee recently invoked. I respectfully submit that we should immediately meet the issue head-on.

Governor Tugwell was confirmed originally by a margin of one vote with only 21 out of 96 Senators present. He should either be reconfirmed by a clear majority of the Senate upon reappointment under the terms of the bill which I am introducing today or he should be rejected in favor of a successor in the event that the President sees fit to renominate him. We owe this clarification to Puerto Rico and to our congressional responsibility and to Governor Tugwell himself.

I respectfully suggest that the situation in Puerto Rico requires immediate, constructive attention with a view to quick, effective, ameliorating results. In the first place, we cannot allow this population to starve; and while, as the New York Herald Tribune has recently editorially said, these conditions are not "entirely or even perhaps largely Governor Tugwell's fault," yet "he has fallen down on the job of coping with them even in reasonable degree" and "should give place at once to some one with the vigor and common sense which the problem requires." In the second place, Puerto Rico is known as the "Gibraltar of the Caribbean." It is vital to our defenses in the middle Atlantic, and it cannot be left in a status of disorganization and unrest. In the third place, Puerto Rico is well calculated to be a significent symbol of American efficiency and American ideals—for good or ill—in our Latin-American relationships. It should constantly have the best government of which we are capable. The President cannot excuse Congress from its share of these responsibilities—and Congress cannot excuse itself—by falling back on the terms of the existing statute which leaves to his "pleasure" the tenure of the Governor of Puerto Rico. The tenure of the Governor should be immediately terminated by act of Congress. Then if the President still believes that Mr. Tugwell is the best available man for this key assignment, he can reappoint him; and, in the regular and normal course of events, the Senate, exercising its constitutional power of confirmation or rejection, can survey the field and act upon its constitutional responsibility. The issue thus will be settled conclusively.

Mr. McNARY. In connection with the bill introduced by the able Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] and immediately following the introduction of the bill and his remarks, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial on the subject of change of command, appearing in the New York Herald Tribune on January 5, 1943.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CALLING FOR A CHANGE OF COMMAND

The desperate plight of Puerto Rico, normally unable to feed itself and now deprived of adequate imports to maintain even its low living standard, is familiar to most of us. In a series of eyewitness articles by Mr. Homer Bigart this newspaper has publicized the dismal story. More recently, the World-Telegram, in a similar series, has confirmed it. Meanwhile, Mr. Rexford Guy Tugwell remains Governor of the island, though the conditions complained of have arisen under his stewardship.

It would be unfair to say that they were entirely or even perhaps largely his fault. But this can be said: that he has fallen down on the job on coping with them even in reasonable degree. From all accounts he has used his post to promote the visionary reforms with which his name is associated instead of adopting realistic measures, and the general result has been starvation and dissension.

Puerto Rico is known as the Gibraltar of the Caribbean. Its possession is of great strategical importance to the defense of the Panama Canal and of our own shores, and its well-being, therefore, should be a prime consideration. But beyond the purely material argument comes the one of self-respect and prestige. How can this country afford to permit any territory under its flag to suffer privations comparable with those of Nazi-held Europe? It can't, of course, and hold its head up.

So we agree entirely with Senator VANDENBERG that Tugwell should go, and as promptly as possible. Granted that any Governor of the island has a tough job ahead of him. This is a tough war, and no man in command, military or civilian, who fails to make progress against the odds facing him should be retained. The time for excuses is over. Tugwell has shown no ability to deal with the Puerto Rican situation, which is still deteriorating. He should give place at once to someone with the vigor and common sense which the problem requires.

Obviously, other remedies will have to be applied. A mere change of governors will not suffice. But even an executive unafraid, who talks in terms of immediate necessities as distinct from social dreams, what more must be done will become apparent.

CURRENT PAYMENT OF INCOME TAXES

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I introduce a joint resolution to provide for the current payment of personal income taxes in monthly installments.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 1) to provide for the current payment of income tax was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CAPPER. I ask that a short statement of my reasons for introducing the joint resolution be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The pay-as-you-go tax plan proposed in the joint resolution I offer in the Senate is the same as introduced by Representative FRANK CARLSON of Kansas in the other House.

If enacted into law, it would put personal income tax payments on a current basis, and would also provide that they may be paid in monthly installments. For the first year of operation, at least, personal income taxes would be payable in nine monthly installments, beginning with March 15, when the return is filed.

I believe nearly everyone who studies the tax problem reaches the conclusion that the greatly increased personal income tax burden should be paid on a current basis; that is, paid from income received in the year the tax is collected.

To accomplish this purpose the bill provides that personal income tax returns shall be filed March 15 this year as usual. The income tax levied would be levied on the basis of 1942 income, but would be the tentative personal income tax on 1943 income. Adjustment of the tentative income tax to 1943 actual taxable income would be made when the next year's income tax return is filed.

Provision is made for an earlier adjustment where it is shown that by reason of service in the military forces, or other circumstances, current year's income will be greatly decreased from the previous year's income.

The joint resolution introduced by Representative CARLSON and myself would write into legal tax language the main features of the so-called Ruml plan proposed to the Senate Finance Committee last year.

Back in the days when personal income taxes were relatively low, it did not matter particularly that payment of a certain year's income taxes was made the following year.

But now, since personal income taxes are running up toward one-fourth of income in the lower brackets, it is highly necessary that personal income taxes be paid currently. The joint resolution provides for such current payments.

Another desirable feature of the measure, as I see it, is that personal income taxes would be paid in monthly installments. For those on wages and salaries now in income paying class, I believe this to be very desirable.

Farmers also would be particularly affected by the current payment feature of the bill. Their income tax payments being made in the current tax years, they would not be called upon in drought or other crop-failure years to pay income taxes upon income received in good crop years. This is highly important.

I expect to push for early enactment of this proposed legislation, so it can go into effect by next March 15.

JOINT COMMITTEE ON WAR PROBLEMS

Mr. MALONEY submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 1), which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there is hereby created a joint congressional committee to be known as the Joint Committee on War Problems (hereinafter referred to as the "joint committee"), and to be composed of six Members of the Senate to be selected by the Senate and six Members of the House of Representatives to be selected by the House of Representatives. Not more than three of the members of the joint committee selected by the Senate, and not more than three of the members of the joint committee selected by the House of Representatives, shall be from the same political party. The joint committee shall select a chairman from among its members. A vacancy in the membership of the joint committee shall not affect the power of the remaining members to execute the functions of the joint committee, and shall be filled in the same manner as the original selection.

SEC. 2. It shall be the duty of the joint committee to make a special study and investigation of the problems arising out of the war under existing and future acts of Congress; to confer with the President, and with the various departments and agencies of the Government, from time to time, with respect to such problems; to consult with other committees of both branches of the Congress, and to report to the Congress from time to time, together with such recommendations with respect to legislation as it deems advisable.

SEC. 3. For the purposes of this concurrent resolution, the joint committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Seventy-eighth and succeeding Congresses, to employ such clerical and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such correspondence, books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures, as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the joint committee, which shall not exceed $_____, shall be paid one-half from the contingent fund of the Senate and one-half from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the joint committee.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE CAMPAIGN EXPENDITURES OF SENATORIAL CANDIDATES

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I submit a Senate resolution, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read for the information of the Senate.

The resolution (S. Res. 5) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That Resolution No. 235, agreed to April 16, 1942, authorizing a Special Committee to Investigate the Campaign Expenditures of Senatorial Candidates in 1942, hereby is continued in full force and effect until the committee shall submit its final report, which shall not be later than March 6, 1943.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, why has there been delay in making a report on elections which were held last November?

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, we do not anticipate that there will be a long delay, but we are compiling some figures which we should like to submit. There is usually some delay in submitting a final report of this nature.

Mr. McNARY. There is no question about that, but I do not recall that extra time has ever heretofore been requested on the part of a similar committee to submit a report. I shall oppose the resolution in its present form unless the committee is able to make its report on the 1st or the 15th of February at the latest. If there is any uncertainty regarding the title to any seat in the Senate, it should be settled at the earliest possible moment. That is the reason I object to a long, drawn-out continuation of the hearings or consideration by the committee. I am sure that the limit of time which I have indicated will give the able Senator and his committee ample time to compile the figures to which he has referred. I believe that February 1 should give them the necessary time.

Mr. McFARLAND. Would the able Senator from Oregon object to the 15th of February?

Mr. McNARY. No; the 15th of February would be satisfactory.

Mr. McFARLAND. I imagine the 1st of February would be satisfactory to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. McNARY. Let us split the difference and make it the 10th of February.

Mr. McFARLAND. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution as modified?

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 5), as modified, was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That Resolution No. 235, agreed to April 16, 1942, authorizing a special committee to investigate the campaign expenditures of senatorial candidates in 1942, hereby is continued in full force and effect until the committee shall submit its final report, which shall not be later than February 10, 1943.

CONTINUATION OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE INVESTIGATING THE NATIONAL DEFENSE PROGRAM

Mr. TRUMAN. Mr. President, I submit a resolution to continue the special committee of which I am chairman, and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be received and referred as requested by the Senator from Missouri.

The resolution (S. Res. 6) was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, as follows:

Resolved, That the authority conferred by Senate Resolution 71, Seventy-seventh Congress, agreed to March 1, 1941, Senate Resolution 146, Seventy-seventh Congress, agreed to August 11, 1941, and Senate Resolution 288, Seventy-seventh Congress, agreed to September 17, 1942 (relating to the investigation of the war program), is hereby continued during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Seventy-eighth and succeeding Congresses.

Mr. TRUMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD a statement made before the Special Committee Investigating the National Defense Program by Under Secretary of War Robert P. Patterson; also a letter from Under Secretary of the Navy James V. Forrestal, and a letter by Donald M. Nelson, Chairman of the War Production Board, all dealing with the work of the special committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement and letters are as follows:

Under Secretary ROBERT PATTERSON. Before I give my prepared statement, Senators, I would like to express the appreciation of the War Department for the very constructive assistance that this committee has rendered. I have personally not been before the committee in quite some months, although I have kept in close contact with the work of the committee, but the work done by the committee has been of the utmost aid in the prosecution of the war program. A great many of the measures that the committee has recommended have been put into operation. You know how it is when you first are told that something you have been doing has some defects in it; at first your feeling is one of, well, perhaps, slight irritation, but on consideration your feeling changes and you are appreciative of the criticism, outside criticism of a constructive character, and that is the point of view of the War Department on the efforts made by this committee. We are quite appreciative of the work done by the committee. It has been a very substantial contribution to the work done by the War Department. The suggestions have been helpful. I believe most of them have been adopted. Some of the very best features of our war program have their origin from the investigations made by this committee.

JANUARY 6, 1943.

Hon. HARRY S. TRUMAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR TRUMAN: I am informed that the Senate will consider the question of the continuation of the Truman committee shortly after its organization.

I think I have expressed my views to you orally a number of times. They are:

The Truman committee has served a useful purpose in providing a medium for the exploration of criticisms of the war effort. Its work has been as objective as I think it possible for such investigations to be, and both committee and counsel have endeavored to conserve the time of witnesses. The tempo at which this war is being waged and the resulting need of speed of accomplishment mean there should be constant review and survey, particularly of the procurement side of the war effort. The Navy has this constantly in mind and is, therefore, conducting a continuous scrutiny of its business operations. In the vast area being covered by its operations, however, and the greatly increased scope of its business it welcomes the kind of additional outside scrutiny which your committee has given.

I think such inquiries now can substantially lessen the number and burden of postwar investigations.

Sincerely yours,

JAMES FORRESTAL.

WAR PRODUCTION BOARD,
Washington, D. C., January 4, 1943.

The Honorable HARRY S. TRUMAN,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR TRUMAN: As our Nation enters upon a year in which war production must expand to greater and entirely unprecedented volume, involving, as it inevitably will, problems of great complexity and difficulty, I wish to express the hope that your Special Committee Investigating the National Defense Program may continue to serve the same high purpose that it has comprehended so well since its creation. That purpose, as I see it, has been to obtain the best possible results in our march toward total economic mobilization for war.

Both from personal experience with your committee and from regular study of its extensive activities, I should like briefly to express my deep appreciation and approval of its work. My appreciation becomes the deeper when I consider that your task, which is so often thankless, has been pursued by you and your associates with courage and perseverance.

First, your work has been broad in scope and has provided a needed incentive for the fullest coordination of our war effort. Such coordination has been most helpful, because of the fact that all war agencies are inescapably affected by the plans and operations of any one agency. By making available to these agencies, through formal reports, public or private hearings and in other ways, a variety of approaches to war production problems, your committee has brought vigor and freshness of viewpoint to their solution.

Second, the quality of your analysis has been kept at a high level, noticeably avoiding personalities, minor issues, and biased or incomplete collection of evidence.

Third, the clear and unequivocal character of your conclusions has stimulated plans for improvements and has been especially helpful because of the care and thoroughness with which your supporting reasons and data have been marshaled.

Finally, perhaps the most conspicuous single characteristic of your work from the viewpoint of an administrative agency has been the constant emphasis you have placed upon the need for foresight—upon anticipating coming events and upon making adequate plans and taking appropriate action to meet them.

In short, I believe the committee has made a substantial contribution to the war effort and with it to the work of the War Production Board.

Sincerely,

DONALD M. NELSON.

INVESTIGATION OF ADMINISTRATION AND OPERATION OF LEND-LEASE ACT

Mr. BUTLER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 7), which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

Resolved, That a subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, to consist of not more than five, or less than three members who shall be appointed by the chairman of such committee, is authorized and directed to make a full and complete investigation of the administration and operation of "An act to promote the defense of the United States," approved March 11, 1941 (commonly referred to as the Lease-Lend Act). The subcommittee shall report its findings and recommendations to the Committee on Appropriations at the earliest possible date.

For the purposes of this resolution, the subcommittee is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Seventy-eighth Congress, to employ such clerical and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such correspondence, books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures, as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the subcommittee, which shall not exceed $10,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD at this point, following the submission of the resolution, a brief statement which was given to the press with reference to the resolution.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

This resolution will, with the approval of the Senate, provide for a complete and thorough investigation of the administration of the Lend-Lease Act.

It seems to me that this inquiry should be carried forward as promptly as possible so that the Senate can have in hand the necessary information it will need to pass upon any request from the President for extension of the Lend-Lease Act with additional appropriations. Out of such a thorough inquiry as is proposed in the resolution, the Committee on Appropriations could fully advise itself and know that past expenditures have been wisely and appropriately used for the purposes defined by Congress.

I am in sympathy with a lend-lease program, for there is an inherent obligation upon allies to aid each other and our allies have said repeatedly that they need the output of our farms and factories more than our manpower.

I have proposed that the investigating committee be left with no handicaps in its work and no instructions in advance except to obtain the information upon which we can base a sound judgment in considering new appropriations for carrying the war to a victorious ending.

I assume the subcommittee will decide itself which of its hearings shall be in private to prevent the leakage of war information that should be kept secret and what parts of its inquiry can be held in public to the end that the people can be as adequately informed as possible upon the conduct of their war.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON TERRITORIES AND INSULAR AFFAIRS

Mr. TYDINGS submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 8), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and hereby is, authorized during the Seventy-eighth Congress to send for persons, books, and papers; to administer oaths; and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be before said committee the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during any session or recess of the Senate.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE

Mr. BAILEY submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 9), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized, during the Seventy-eighth Congress, to send for persons, books, and papers; to administer oaths; and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words, to report such hearings as may be had on any subject before said committee, the expense thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during any session or recess of the Senate.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON INTEROCEANIC CANALS

Mr. CLARK of Missouri submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 10), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Interoceanic Canals, or any subcommittee thereof, hereby is authorized, during the Seventy-eighth Congress, to send for persons, books, and papers; to administer oaths; and to employ a stenographer at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words to report such hearings as may be had on any subject before said committee, the expense thereof to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during any session or recess of the Senate.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC LANDS AND SURVEYS

Mr. HATCH submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 11), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, or any subcommittee thereof, hereby is authorized, during the Seventy-eighth Congress, to send for persons, books, and papers; to administer oaths; and to employ a stenographer at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words to report such hearings as may be had on any subject before said committee, the expense thereof to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during any session or recess of the Senate.

INVESTIGATION OF PRODUCTION, TRANSPORTATION, AND MARKETING OF WOOL

Mr. HATCH submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 12), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That Senate Resolution 160, Seventy-fourth Congress, first session, agreed to July 10, 1935, authorizing a special committee to investigate the production, transportation, and marketing of wool, as extended, is hereby further extended and continued in full force and effect during the Seventy-eighth Congress; and the said committee may report to the Senate at any time prior to the expiration of the Seventy-eighth Congress.

INVESTIGATION OF THE VARIOUS BRANCHES OF THE NATIONAL HOUSING AGENCY

Mr. TAFT submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 13), which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor:

Whereas the United States Government is now the owner of numerous projects to provide residence quarters for war workers and lower income groups which were constructed by the United States Housing Authority, the Federal Works Administrator, the War Department, the Navy Department, the Farm Security Administration, the Defense Homes Corporation, and other agencies; and

Whereas the Federal Housing Administration, the Federal Home Loan Banks, the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, the Federal Loan Administrator, the Federal Works Administrator, and other agencies have financed or assisted the financing of various other housing activities; and

Whereas on February 24, 1942, the President of the United States, acting under the authority vested in him by title I of the First War Powers Act, 1941, provided for the consolidation of functions of Federal agencies relating to housing in a National Housing Agency, and said National Housing Agency has continued to exercise the functions consolidated in it; and

Whereas the effect of said Executive order expires with the expiration of the First War Powers Act, 1941, and great confusion will result from the expiration of said Executive order if permanent legislative provision is not made to deal with the subject of housing; and

Whereas numerous projects have been constructed under emergency legislation to provide housing for war workers, the disposition of which housing after the war has been left for future legislative determination; and

Whereas the figures now obtainable appear to show that there is now a serious shortage of housing, and the construction of housing in the period which follows the war should be an effective means of preventing industrial depression; and there is need for a constructive and over-all plan for the provision of such housing through private and public agencies, and for the permanent coordination of all Government activities related to such housing: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Education and Labor, through a subcommittee to be appointed by the chairman, is hereby authorized—

(1) To study the work of all branches of the National Housing Agency, including the Federal Housing Administration, the Federal Home Loan Bank Administration, the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation, the Federal Public Housing Authority, the Defense Homes Corporation, the Alley Dwelling Authority of the District of Columbia, and all other Federal agencies exercising functions in connection with housing activities, and prepare a report showing the work of such agencies and the present status of all projects undertaken, financed, or managed by them;

(2) To recommend a plan for the disposition of emergency housing at the termination of the war emergency;

(3) To prepare a comprehensive plan for the construction of housing after the war, including that to be provided or financed by private capital or private agencies, and that to be provided or financed by Government funds or Government agencies, and all other housing, with special reference to the possibility of encouraging home ownership and of eliminating slums and other deteriorated areas, and with special reference to the extent of the necessity of the Federal Government's subsidizing housing for lower-income groups.

For the purpose of this resolution, the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Seventy-eighth Congress, to employ such clerical and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such correspondence, books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $25,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee.

INVESTIGATION OF CLOSING DOWN OF CERTAIN MINES

Mr. McCARRAN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 14), which was referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining:

Resolved, That a special committee of five Senators, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, is authorized and directed to make a full and complete study and investigation with respect to the reasons for and the effect of the closing down of domestic mines producing gold and war-essential, critical, and strategic minerals and metals, and to report to the Senate at the earliest practicable date the results of such investigation, together with its recommendations, if any, for necessary legislation.

For the purpose of this investigation, the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Seventy-eighth Congress, to employ such clerical and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such correspondence, books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per 100 words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $25,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee.

COMMITTEE ON CIVIL AVIATION AND AERONAUTICS—AMENDMENT OF RULE

Mr. McCARRAN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 15), which was referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That rule XXV of the Standing Rules of the Senate is hereby amended by inserting after the seventeenth line of paragraph 1 the following:

"Committee on Civil Aviation and Aeronautics, to consist of 13 Senators."

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 16), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized during the Seventy-eighth Congress, to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words, to report such hearings as may be had on any subject before said committee, the expense thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during any session or recess of the Senate.

CONTINUATION OF SURVEY OF CONDITION OF INDIANS

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 17), which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs:

Resolved, That Senate Resolution 79, agreed to February 2, 1928, and continued by subsequent resolutions, authorizing the Committee on Indian Affairs, or any subcommittee thereof, to make a general survey of the condition of the Indians in the United States, hereby is continued in full force and effect during the Seventy-eighth and succeeding Congresses.

COMPENSATION FOR LANDS SOLD TO THE UNITED STATES BY THE CHEROKEE INDIANS

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 18), which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Resolved, That the report of the Comptroller General on "Compensation for Lands Sold to the United States by the Cherokee Indians," printed as Senate Document 288, November 25, 1942, be referred to the Judiciary Committee of the Senate for examination and report.

The Judiciary Committee is hereby authorized to report to the Senate whether any readjustment of the accounts is necessary in order to fulfill the pledges made in compensation of the lands sold to the United States by the Cherokee treaty, and whether or not a fair and just settlement has been made in accordance with the treaty through which the sale was made. The committee is authorized to obtain further evidence, if found advisable, and report any facts and precedents pertinent thereto to the Senate for its full information. If the committee find necessary, as a matter of justice, it shall submit a suitable resolution for the readjustment of the accounts and the ultimate liquidation of any balances found due.

PRINTING OF CERTAIN LAWS RELATING TO THE FIVE CIVILIZED TRIBES IN OKLAHOMA

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 19), which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That the manuscript of the laws, agreements, Executive orders, proclamations, etc., relating to the Five Civilized Tribes, Oklahoma, passed and proclaimed from 1890 to 1938, inclusive, to be known as Laws Relating to the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma, 1890 to 1938, prepared under Senate Resolution 60, Seventy-fifth Congress, first session, be printed as a Senate document, and that there be printed 30 additional copies for the use of the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs and 30 additional copies for the use of the House Committee on Indian Affairs.

PRODUCTION OF GOLD AND SILVER—CONTINUATION OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 20), which was referred to the Senate Special Silver Committee:

Resolved, That Senate Resolution 187, agreed to August 16, 1935, as amended by motion on January 17, 1939, increasing the membership of the committee to nine Senators instead of five, and as further amended by Senate Resolution 261, agreed to June 29, 1942, authorizing a special committee of nine Senators to confer with the Secretary of the Treasury relative to the administration, and the economic and commercial effect in the United States and abroad, of the Silver Purchase Act of 1934 (48 Stat. 1178), and to make a full and complete investigation with respect to the production, or the lack of production, of gold and silver in the United States and its Territories, etc., hereby is continued in full force and effect during the Seventy-eighth and succeeding Congresses.

COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AVIATION

Mr. WILEY submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 21), which was referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That paragraph 1 of rule XXV of the Standing Rules of the Senate is amended by inserting, between the paragraph relating to the Committee on Military Affairs and the paragraph relating to the Committee on Mines and Mining, the following new paragraph:

"Committee on Military Aviation, to consist of 17 Senators."

FOREIGN RELATIONS ADVISORY COUNCIL FOR FORMULATION OF TREATIES

Mr. WILEY submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 22), which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Resolved, That the Chief Executive be invited to join with the Senate in the creation of a Foreign Relations Advisory Council to be constituted of the following: The Secretary of State, the Under Secretary of State, other technicians, whom the Secretary of State might designate, the chairman and the ranking minority member of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, and the chairman and the ranking minority member of the House Committee on Foreign Affairs, and such other Senators as the President might from time to time designate.

INVESTIGATION OF COMMODITY PRICES IN THE DISTRICT

Mr. NYE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 23), which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to make a full and complete investigation of commodity prices prevailing in the District of Columbia, with a particular view toward determining how prices paid by consumers for agricultural commodities, or for commodities processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part from agricultural commodities, compare with the prices received by farmers for such agricultural commodities. The committee shall report to the Senate at the earliest practicable date the results of such investigation, together with its recommendations, if any, for necessary legislation.

For the purposes of this resolution, the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Seventy-eighth Congress, to employ such clerical and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such correspondence, books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $3,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee.

INVESTIGATION OF CONDITIONS CONCERNING THE SUFFICIENCY OF FOOD PRODUCTION

Mr. NYE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 24), which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Resolved, That the Committee of Agriculture and Forestry, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to make an investigation of the ability of American agriculture to afford such production as is being required and will be required to meet American civilian and military needs and the commitments of food aid to our allies, with particular reference to the availability of manpower on the farms, the availability of farm machinery and repairs, the relationship of present farm legislation to the production challenge, and the degree to which prevailing farm prices are helping or hindering farm production.

For the purposes of this resolution, the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Seventy-eighth and

Seventy-ninth Congresses, to employ such clerical and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses, and the production of such correspondence, books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $25,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee.

INVESTIGATION OF POLLS OF PUBLIC OPINION

Mr. NYE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 25), which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce:

Resolved, That the Committee on Interstate Commerce, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to make a full and complete study and investigation of polls purporting to measure or indicate the state of public opinion upon matters of national importance, the results of which are published in newspapers, magazines, periodicals, or other publications. Such study and investigation shall include, but shall not be limited to, determination of the procedure and methods used in conducting such polls and tabulating the results thereof. The committee shall report to the Senate as soon as practicable the results of its study and investigation, together with its recommendations, if any, for necessary legislation.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Senate in the Seventy-eighth and succeeding Congresses, to employ such experts, and such clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such correspondence, books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $5,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee.

INVESTIGATION OF ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL CONDITIONS IN PUERTO RICO

Mr. CHAVEZ submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 26), which was referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs:

Resolved, That a subcommittee of the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs, to be composed of five members of such committee appointed by the chairman thereof, is authorized and directed to make a full and complete study and investigation with respect to economic and social conditions in Puerto Rico resulting from the interruption of the normal flow of trade between Puerto Rico and the United States which has been brought about by the war. The subcommittee shall report to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs the results of its study and investigation, together with its recommendations, at the earliest practicable date.

For the purposes of this resolution the subcommittee, or any member thereof duly authorized by the chairman of the subcommittee, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned period of the Senate in the Seventy-eighth Congress, to employ and to call upon the executive departments for such experts and such clerical and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures, as it or he deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per 100 words. The expenses of the subcommittee, which shall not exceed $25,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the subcommittee.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES—RIVER AND HARBOR PROJECTS

Mr. VANDENBERG submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 27), which was referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That the standing rules of the Senate be, and they are hereby, amended by adding after rule XX a new rule, relating to river and harbor projects, as follows:

"Rule XXI. When a rivers and harbors authorization bill is pending, a point of order may be made against the authorization of any project in any form not formally recommended to the Congress in an official report of the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors."

CONTINUATION OF INVESTIGATION OF GASOLINE AND FUEL SHORTAGES

Mr. MALONEY submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 28), which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Resolved, That the authority conferred by Senate Resolution 156, Seventy-seventh Congress, agreed to August 28, 1941, Senate Resolution 189, Seventy-seventh Congress, agreed to December 9, 1941, and Senate Resolution 264, Seventy-seventh Congress, agreed to December 15, 1942, providing for an investigation with respect to shortages of gasoline, fuel oil, and other petroleum products and solid fuels, is hereby continued until the end of the Seventy-eighth Congress.

COMMITTEE ON EXPENDITURES IN THE EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS

Mr. DAVIS submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 29), which was referred to the Committee on Rules:

Whereas present conditions effectively demonstrate the need for closer supervision by the Congress over fiscal practices of the Government; and

Whereas the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, which was established on April 18, 1921, is a standing committee of the Senate; and

Whereas such committee, as its name implies, was created for the purpose of examining the accounts and expenditures of the several departments of the Government; and

Whereas the membership of such committee is not sufficiently large to enable it properly to exercise such functions: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments shall hereafter be composed of 21 Senators.

INVESTIGATION OF GOVERNMENTAL EXPENDITURES

Mr. DAVIS submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 30), which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments:

Whereas present conditions effectively demonstrate the need for closer supervision by the Congress over fiscal practices of the Government; and

Whereas the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, which was established on April 18, 1921, is a standing committee of the Senate; and

Whereas such committee, as its name implies, was created for the purpose of examining the accounts and expenditures of the several departments of the Government: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments is authorized and directed to conduct a continuing investigation of the accounts and expenditures of the several departments, independent establishments, offices, and agencies of the Government, including the necessity for, economy, and correctness of such expenditures; their conformity with appropriation laws; the proper application of public funds; the security of the Government against unjust and extravagant demands; the economy and accountability of public officers; and the elimination of unnecessary activities and expenses, and, from time to time, to report to the Senate and the Committee on Appropriations the results of its studies and investigations.

For the purpose of carrying out its functions, the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Seventy-eighth Congress, to employ such clerical and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such correspondence, books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $——, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee.

INDUCTION OF GEORGE W. MAXEY AS CHIEF JUSTICE, SUPREME COURT OF PENNSYLVANIA

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, in view of the vital and important position which an independent judiciary occupies in the American system of government, both as concerns the Federal Government and the governments of the several States, I believe it is well to call to mind the validity of the principles which established that independent judiciary and also some of the very high functions which the judiciary performs in the protection of our fundamental rights and in the perpetuation of freedom and justice.

It is one of the innate features of our Government that the judiciary shall be a dignified and deliberative body, far removed from public clamor, whose efforts shall be devoted to the scrutiny and interpretation of the laws and to the protection of the people who live under them. For more than 150 years the judiciary has continued to function in that high calling, and for more than 150 years, despite all periods of menacing crisis and erring clamor, the courts have sustained the majesty of the law and have cast down all those doctrines which would establish the supremacy of any one man or group of men. We need only look abroad into those miserable lands beyond the seas which have succumbed to the will of a supreme dictator to appreciate the noble thing which the courts have done for us and for all mankind.

Last Monday, January 4, I attended the Pennsylvania Supreme Court induction ceremonies, when Hon. George W. Maxey was installed as Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania—the oldest State supreme court in the Union, in point of years of continuous service. Chief Justice Maxey is typical of the many outstanding jurists who have served so tirelessly and fearlessly in the preservation of freedom and the protection of the fundamental right. His career of public service in the law dates back to 1913. Through the years he has become recognized as an ardent and able jurist, both by his colleagues and by the people of Pennsylvania. His philosophy is one of sound and continued progress, based upon the fundamental rights of man.

It is not my purpose here to review the career of Chief Justice Maxey; that was done in a most admirable manner by John C. Arnold, Esq., president of the Pennsylvania Bar Association, in his address of salutation. Mr. Arnold, in referring to the career of Chief Justice Maxey, said in part:

> In the positions of trust and confidence which you have held, much has been required—and the requisition has always been fulfilled.

As an indication of the deep sense of responsibility and purpose which Chief Justice Maxey holds for his high calling, I can do no better than to quote briefly from his inaugural address, in which he said:

> A State or a nation should be ruled by reason, and not by tumult. The passion and prejudice of the passing hour should never be the supreme law of the land, for when they are, no man's life, liberty, or property is safe.

Mr. President, because I feel that the responsible and necessary position of an independent judiciary in our Government cannot be overemphasized, and because I feel that the remarks of Mr. Arnold and Chief Justice Maxey will serve to give the American people a valuable insight into this position of the judiciary, as well as an insight into the deep sense of dignity, learning, and responsibility with which the members of that body approach their high calling, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks the addresses delivered by these distinguished gentlemen at the Pennsylvania Supreme Court induction ceremonies held in Philadelphia on January 4, 1943.

There being no objection, the addresses were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ADDRESS BY JOHN C. ARNOLD, ESQ.

For me, there could be no more congenial privilege than to convey on behalf of the members of the bar of this court their respects and their greetings to Mr. Chief Justice Maxey and to Mr. Associate Justice Allen M. Stearne on this notable occasion.

Mr. Chief Justice, to me, practicing law far away from Lackawanna County, George W. Maxey was first merely a name of a young man of force and ability who was elected district attorney of Lackawanna County in 1913 and reelected to a second term in 1917, his second term being contemporaneous with my first term as district attorney of my county. During my term of office you, sir, presented to the Superior Court of Pennsylvania the brief for the Commonwealth in the case of Commonwealth v. Rogo,[1] involving the law of evidence, and we, having a similar question, procured the paper books from your office. We said then, and repeat now, that the district attorney's brief in that case was the best presentation of an evidential question which we have ever seen. It seemed to me that that district attorney was giving clear evidence of distinction. Therefore we followed the subsequent years. In the middle of your second term you were elected judge of the Court of Common Pleas of Lackawanna County, and in 1929 both political parties of your county gave you their nomination for reelection. In 1930 your name was presented as a candidate for judge of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. In the ensuing primary you carried every county of this State save one. At the general election your majority was over 850,000. I have mentioned the figures because they demonstrate the increasing public favor of each candidacy of yours.

In your first year on this bench you filed a notable document: Your dissenting opinion in the so-called Yellow-dog contract case of Kraemer Hosiery Co. v. American Federation of Full-Fashioned Hosiery Workers.[2] It seemed to us to be unanswerable and to reflect your views not only as a sound lawyer, but as one who understood the problems of the present, and the difficulties of those less able to protect themselves. You are the sole remaining member of this Court who participated in that decision. The views of that dissent were forcibly and clearly expressed, and by statute, State and Federal, are now the law of the land.

As foreshadowed by your brief in Commonwealth v. Rogo you wrote the opinion for this Court in the case of Watkins v. Prudential Insurance Co.[3] clarifying and restating the law concerning presumptions of fact. This valuable monograph on evidence received much just recognition from judges, from lawyers, and from leading law schools.

We have made mention of only two of more than 500 opinions which you have written for this Court because they illustrate the kind of man and judge who wrote them.

[1] 71 Pa. Superior Court 109 (1918).
[2] 305 Pa. 206 (1931).
[3] 315 Pa. 497 (1934).

The bar also recognizes the contributions which you have made other than your work on this Court. You were selected by the Philadelphia bar to deliver the commemoration address on the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the adoption by the Constitutional Convention of the Constitution of the United States. Under the title "The Problem of 1787 and How It Was Met," it was widely published and widely acclaimed. We think your most notable address, and the one most commended, was delivered at the Union League Club in Chicago in 1938: "The Descent to a Dictatorship," in which you summed up four basic principles upon which the Federal Constitution rested: "(1) The Federal Government shall keep to its sphere and the States to their proper spheres of government. (2) No official shall be entrusted with autocratic power. (3) Unrestrained power shall never be lodged anywhere, not in the President, not in the Congress, not even in a majority of the American people. (4) There shall be maintained an absolutely independent judiciary." You declared: "As long as these basic principles of the Constitution are unviolated, there can be no dictatorship. A certain sign of a dictator complex in any public official is his scorn of these principles."

The bar recognizes that your qualities and accomplishments inevitably led to repeated suggestions that you be a candidate for certain high offices in other branches of the Government, with offers of powerful support. The bar was gratified by your expressed preference to continue in your judicial work which began exactly 23 years ago this morning.

Your elevation to this court met the full approbation of the bar. It is a great thing, Mr. Chief Justice, to merit the approbation of one's fellows, and I suppose no more critical body exists than the bar. It is a great thing to live and to act so that your approving friends need only say, "He has done as I expected." It is a great thing, sir, to discharge large responsibilities with credit to yourself, to your court, and to the public. These things have you done, and these things were not always easily done. On one occasion, the great Teacher said: "Unto whomsoever much is given, of him shall much be required." In the positions of trust and confidence which you have held, much has been required, and the requisition has always been fulfilled. The lawyers have noted your insistence on fair play, your strong sense of justice, your consideration of others, and your courtesy to the bar.

You are commissioned this morning for a 9-year term as Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. Not since Chief Justice John Bannister Gibson ended his great career on this bench in the early 1850's has there been so long a term. His term as Chief Justice was not made remarkable because of the length in years. It is the character of service alone which with him, or with you, secures worthy remembrance.

I feel quite inadequate to convey to you and to this court the sentiments of a strong bar, which, as this court best knows, possesses large talents and true fidelity. Only permit me to say that no bar of any court has loftier aims or better minds, and that no bar of any court is truer or more loyal to the bench.

How excellent it is when the bar knows, as we in Pennsylvania know, that this bench possesses not merely great power but great integrity. It is the character of the justices that procures the respect of the bar, and not the position which the incumbents have. We lawyers in Pennsylvania honor this court because this court has honor.

With a sense of happiness, the bar of Pennsylvania welcomes you, Mr. Justice Allen M. Stearne, to membership in this tribunal. You, Justice Stearne, bring to this court a wide experience of 22 years of active practice in the bar, followed by 15 years of judicial service in the orphans' court of Philadelphia. You are, of course, the youngest justice in point of commission and you are also the youngest justice in point of age. You come to this bench with a firmly established reputation as a most able jurist, and, almost as important, with a firmly established reputation for a never-failing kindness and patience toward the lawyers who practiced before you. It would not become me to measure your responsibilities or your opportunity, but your whole life and career guarantee that you will fully measure up to both. We, therefore, know that you will continue in the opportunities of the future as you have wrought in the responsibilities of the past.

To Chief Justice Maxey, to Associate Justice Allen M. Stearne, and to each member of this court we bring the assurance of the continued confidence, good will, and respect of your bar.

ADDRESS OF GEORGE W. MAXEY, CHIEF JUSTICE OF THE SUPREME COURT OF PENNSYLVANIA

President Arnold, and members of the bar, we appreciate these generous greetings so graciously expressed by the president of the Pennsylvania Bar Association, an outstanding and distinguished lawyer and a highly respected and esteemed member of the bar of this court. There is no more satisfying reward of public service and no more potent stimulus to earnest endeavor than public confidence and goodwill.

One by one the judges leave this bench and others take their places, but there is no pause—the court goes on. This court is now in the third decade of the third century of its existence. It is invested with "judicial power" by the State's organic law. What this judicial power is has been exemplified in Anglo-Saxon and American jurisprudence for hundreds of years. Its chief function has been the protection of the individual, not only against the lawless depredations of other individuals but also against the oppression and spoliations of the government itself. In no nation has liberty ever survived the destruction of an honest, independent, and fearless judiciary. This court interprets and applies the principles and commandments of the State constitution, and in some cases those of the Federal Constitution. We had occasion recently to emphasize the fact that under our American system the State and not the Federal Government is the traditional protector of the lives, the liberty, and the property of its own people.[1]

Nearly a century ago Daniel Webster said: "Wherever the temple of justice stands and so long as it is duly honored, there is a foundation for social security, general happiness, and the improvement and progress of our race."

It must be avowed of the State supreme tribunal as it has been avowed of the Nation's supreme tribunal that "it possesses neither sword nor purse; its strength is found in the reverence of the people for the sanctity of the law."

The maintenance of this sanctity depends upon the people, themselves, upon the courts, and upon the bar. To have a government of law, instead of tyranny or anarchy, that is, a government ruled neither by a man nor by a mob, there must be in human hearts an innate respect for law and order, and in the public mind an instinctive recognition of the postulate that the first duty of government is to govern. Undisciplined liberty means social disintegration. Dictatorships are products of democracies that fail. The courts as arbiters of conflicting interests must consist of judges whose quest is always for the path of right, and when they conscientiously believe they have found that path they should travel it without fear or flinching. Their constant prayer should be that God give them as He gave Solomon: "Wisdom and understanding and largeness of heart, even as the sand that is on the seashore."[2] They should not count voices of approval; they should weigh them, and they should give the greatest weight to the voice of intelligence and conscience. A state or nation should be ruled by reason and not by tumult. The passion and prejudice of the passing hour should never be the supreme law of the land, for when they are, no man's life, liberty, or property is secure. The organic law embodies a people's sober judgment and it demands sober judgment. When the social stream is lashed into fury it will burst its barriers and spread devastation far and wide unless the constitution is strong, and no constitution is stronger than the highest court which stands behind it. It is a judge's duty not only to interpret the respective constitutions of state and nation but also to "support, obey, and defend" them. The illustrious Chief Justice, John Bannister Gibson, who presided over this court 100 years ago, and whose marble image looks down upon us in this chamber, judicially declared in 1844 that: "A constitution is not to receive a technical construction, like a common law instrument or a statute. It is to be interpreted so as to carry out the great principles of the government, not to defeat them."[3] Just judgments depend primarily on the passionate zeal of judges to do justice—a zeal directed by intelligence, clothed with energy and manifesting itself in the craftsmanship of painstaking care.

The functions of the bar are no less important than those of the court. It is the constitutional right of every accused "to be heard by himself and his counsel." In civil cases also this right is an integral part of that "due process of law" which every American when in need of it can freely invoke. Advocates of fidelity and ability are essential to the administration of justice. Each of us may well vow as did one of England's greatest lawyers and judges, Lord Chancelor Erskine: "I will at all hazards forever maintain the dignity, the independence and the integrity of the bar, without which justice can have no existence." It is the duty of lawyers to present the cause of their clients with candor, courage, and clarity and it is the duty of the judges to listen to that presentation with attentiveness and patience, with decorum and with civility. Those who appear before courts of justice are suitors, not suppliants.

It is an ancient Latin proverb that amid the clash of arms the law is silent. This is true where courts are closed by the vicissitudes of war or by dictatorial decrees. In one half of the world today courts of justice are closed, but the war which 5,000,000 embattled Americans, with their allies of the United Nations, are now waging on all continents and on all seas and on the islands of the sea, is a war which will not end until in the arbitrament of arms it is conclusively determined that lawless force must bow in submission and surrender to the force of law.

With every judge and every lawyer taking delight not in distinction but in duty well performed, proud not of his power but of his service, gratified not by what he gets but by what he gives, we will all help to actualize that lofty ideal of the law as something so majestic that there are "none so high as to be beyond its power and none so humble as to be beneath its care; its seat is the bosom of God and its voice is the harmony of the world."

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate adjourn until 12 o'clock noon on Monday next.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, JANUARY 7, 1943

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by the Speaker.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord, our Lord, holy, holy, holy is Thy name and righteousness is the habitation of Thy throne. We pray that brotherhood may take to itself an enlarging clasp and gather up all wandering tones into unjarring harmonies, enlarging our charity and keeping us free from all prejudice. Inspire us to carry with us the wisest thoughts and aspirations and whisper Thy presence to us each passing day. God be merciful unto us and bless us, and cause His face to shine upon us; that Thy way may be known upon each, Thy saving health among all nations. Let people praise Thee, O God, let all the people praise Thee. Oh, let the nations be glad and sing for joy; for Thou shalt judge the people righteously and govern the nations upon earth. Let the people praise Thee, O God, let all the people praise; then shall the earth yield her increase and God, even our own God, shall bless us; God shall bless us, and all the ends of the earth shall fear Him. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

RECESS

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Speaker may declare a recess at any time during the day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK]?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair now declares a recess of the House, subject to the call of the Chair.

Accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 8 minutes p. m.) the House stood in recess, to meet at the call of the Speaker.

AFTER RECESS

The recess having expired, the House (at 12 o'clock and 18 minutes p. m.) resumed its session.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, a concurrent resolution of the House of the following title:

H. Con. Res. 1. Concurrent resolution providing for a joint session on Thursday, January 7, 1943, for the purpose of receiving such communications as the President of the United States shall be pleased to make.

JOINT MEETING OF THE HOUSE AND SENATE

The Members of the House rose.

The Senate, preceded by the Vice President and by their Secretary and Sergeant at Arms, entered the Chamber.

The Vice President took the chair at the right of the Speaker, and the Members of the Senate took the seats reserved for them.

The SPEAKER. On behalf of the House the Chair appoints the following committee to conduct the President into the Chamber: The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK], the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON], and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN].

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair appoints on behalf of the Senate the following Members to escort the President into the Chamber: The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY], and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL].

At 12 o'clock and 24 minutes p. m., the Doorkeeper, Mr. J. J. Sinnott, announced the members of the diplomatic corps.

The members of the diplomatic corps entered the Chamber and took the seats reserved for them in front of the Speaker's rostrum.

At 12 o'clock and 27 minutes p. m., the Doorkeeper, Mr. J. J. Sinnott, announced the Cabinet of the President of the United States.

The members of the Cabinet of the President of the United States entered the Chamber and took the seats reserved for them in front of the Speaker's rostrum.

At 12 o'clock and 31 minutes p. m., the President of the United States, escorted by the committee of Senators and Representatives, entered the Hall of the House and stood at the Clerk's desk, amid prolonged applause.

The SPEAKER. Senators and Representatives of the Seventy-eighth Congress, I have the great pleasure, the high privilege, and distinguished honor of presenting to you the President of the United States.

ADDRESS OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 1)

Mr. Vice President, Mr. Speaker, Members of the Senate and of the House of Representatives, the Seventy-eighth Congress assembles in one of the great moments in the history of this Nation. The past year was perhaps the most crucial for modern civilization; the coming year will be filled with violent conflict—yet with high promise of better things.

We must appraise the events of 1942 according to their relative importance; we must exercise a sense of proportion.

First in importance in the American scene has been the inspiring proof of the great qualities of our fighting men. They have demonstrated these qualities in adversity as well as in victory. As long as our flag flies over this Capitol, Americans will honor the soldiers, sailors, and marines who fought our first battles of this war against overwhelming odds—the heroes, living and dead, of Wake and Bataan and Guadalcanal, of the Java Sea and Midway and the North Atlantic convoys. Their unconquerable spirit will live forever.

By far the largest and most important developments in the whole strategic picture of 1942 were the events on the long fronts in Russia: First, the implacable defense of Stalingrad; and, second, the offensives by the Russian armies at various points which started in the latter part of November and which still roll on with great force and effectiveness.

The other major events of the year were: The series of Japanese advances in the Philippines, the East Indies, Malaya and Burma; the stopping of the Japanese in the mid-Pacific, the South Pacific, and the Indian Oceans; the successful defense of the Near East by the British counterattack through Egypt and Libya; the American-British occupation of North Africa. Of continuing importance in the year 1942 were the unending, bitterly-contested battles of the convoy routes, and the gradual passing of air superiority from the Axis to the United Nations.

The Axis Powers knew that they must win the war in 1942—or eventually lose everything. I do not need to tell you that our enemies did not win this war in 1942.

In the Pacific area, our most important victory in 1942 was the air and naval battle off Midway Island. That action is historically important because it secured for our use communication lines stretching thousands of miles in every direction. In placing this emphasis on the battle of Midway, I am not unmindful of other successful actions in the Pacific, in the air and on land and afloat—especially those on the Coral Sea and New Guinea and in the Solomon Islands. But these actions were essentially defensive. They were part of the delaying strategy that characterized this phase of the war.

During this period we inflicted steady losses upon the enemy—great losses of Japanese planes, naval vessels, transports, and cargo ships. As early as 1 year ago, we set as a primary task in the war of the Pacific day-by-day and week-by-week destruction of more Japanese war matériel than Japanese industry could replace. Most certainly, that task has been and is being performed by our fighting ships and planes. A large part of this task has been accomplished by the gallant crews of our American submarines who strike on the other side of the Pacific at Japanese ships—right at the very mouth of the harbor of Yokohama.

We know that as each day goes by, Japanese strength in ships and planes is going down and down, and American strength in ships and planes is going up and up. The eventual outcome can be put on a mathematical basis. That will become evident to the Japanese people themselves when we strike at their own home islands, and bomb them constantly from the air.

In the attacks against Japan, we shall be joined with the heroic people of China, whose ideals of peace are so closely akin to our own. Even today we are flying as much lend-lease material into China as ever traversed the Burma Road, flying it over mountains 17,000 feet high, flying blind through sleet and snow. We shall overcome all the formidable obstacles, and get the battle equipment into China to shatter the power of our common enemy. From this war China will realize the security, the prosperity, and the dignity which Japan has sought so ruthlessly to destroy.

The period of our defensive attrition in the Pacific is passing. Now our aim is to force the Japanese to fight. Last year, we stopped them. This year, we intend to advance.

In the European theater of war during this past year it was clear that our first task was to lessen the concentrated pressure on the Russian front by compelling Germany to divert part of her manpower and equipment to another theater of war.

After months of secret planning and preparation in the utmost detail, an enormous amphibious expedition was embarked for French North Africa from the United States and the United Kingdom in hundreds of ships. It reached its objectives with very small losses, and has already produced an important effect upon the whole situation of the war. It has opened to attack what Mr. Churchill well described as "the under-belly of the Axis," and it has removed the always dangerous threat of an Axis attack through West Africa against the South Atlantic Ocean and the continent of South America itself.

The well-timed and splendidly executed offensive from Egypt by the British Eighth Army was a part of the same major strategy of the United Nations.

Great rains and appalling mud and very limited communications have delayed the final battles of Tunisia. The Axis is reinforcing its strong positions. But I am confident that though the fighting will be tough, when the final Allied assault is made, the last vestige of Axis power will be driven from the south shores of the Mediterranean.

Any review of the year 1942 must emphasize the magnitude and diversity of the military activities in which this Nation has become engaged. As I speak to you, approximately one and a half million of our soldiers, sailors, marines, and fliers are in service outside our continental limits, all through the world. Our merchant seamen are carrying supplies to them and to our allies over every sea lane.

Few Americans realize the amazing growth of our air strength, though I am sure our enemy does. Day in and day out our forces are bombing the enemy and meeting him in combat on many different fronts over the world. And for those who question the quality of our aircraft and ability of our fliers, I point to the fact that in Africa we are shooting down two enemy planes to every one we lose, and in the Pacific and in the southwest Pacific we are shooting them down 4 to 1.

We pay the tribute of the United States of America to the fighting men of Russia and China and Britain and the various members of the British Commonwealth—the millions of men who through the years of this war have fought our common enemies and have denied to them the world conquest which they sought.

We pay tribute to the soldiers and fliers and seamen of others of the United Nations whose countries have been overrun by Axis hordes.

As a result of the Allied occupation of North Africa, powerful units of the French Army and Navy are going into action with the United Nations forces. We welcome them as allies and as friends. They join with those Frenchmen who since the dark days of June 1940 have been fighting valiantly for the liberation of their stricken country.

We pay tribute to the fighting leaders of our allies, to Winston Churchill, to Joseph Stalin, and to the Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek. There is a very real unanimity between the leaders of the United Nations. This unity is effective in planning and carrying out the major strategy of this war and in building up and maintaining the lines of supplies.

I cannot prophesy. I cannot tell you when or where the United Nations are going to strike next in Europe. But we are going to strike—and strike hard. I cannot tell you whether we are going to hit them in Norway, or through the Low Countries, or in France, or through Sardinia or Sicily, or through the Balkans, or through Poland—or at several points simultaneously. But I can tell you that no matter where and when we strike by land, we and the British and the Russians will hit them from the air heavily and relentlessly. Day in and day out we shall heap tons upon tons of explosives on their war factories and utilities and seaports.

Hitler and Mussolini will understand the enormity of their miscalculations—that the Nazis would always have the advantage of superior air power as they did when they bombed Warsaw, Rotterdam, London, and Coventry. That superiority has gone—forever.

Yes—the Nazis and the Fascists have asked for it—and they are going to get it.

Our forward progress in this war has depended upon our progress on the production front.

There has been criticism of the management and conduct of our war production. Much of this self-criticism has had a healthy effect. It has spurred us on. It has reflected a normal American impatience to get on with the job. We are the kind of people who are never quite satisfied with anything short of miracles.

But there has been some criticism based on guesswork and even on malicious falsification of fact. Such criticism creates doubts and fears, and weakens our total effort.

I do not wish to suggest that we should be completely satisfied with our production progress—today, or next month, or ever. But I can report to you with genuine pride on what has been accomplished during 1942.

A year ago we set certain production goals for 1942 and 1943. Some people, including some experts, thought that we had pulled some big figures out of a hat just to frighten the Axis. But we had confidence in the ability of our people to establish new records. That confidence has been justified.

Of course, we realized that some production objectives would have to be changed—some adjusted upward and others downward; some items would be taken out of the program completely, and others added. This was inevitable as we gained battle experience and as technological improvements were made.

Our 1942 airplane production and tank production fell short, numerically, of the goals set a year ago. Nevertheless, we have plenty of reason to be proud of our record for 1942. We produced about 48,000 military planes—more than the airplane production of Germany, Italy, and Japan put together. Last month, December, we produced 5,500 military planes, and the rate is rapidly rising. Furthermore, as each month passes by, the averages of our types weigh more, take more man-hours to make, and have more striking power.

In tank production, we revised our schedule—and for good and sufficient reasons. As a result of hard experience in battle, we have diverted a portion of our tank-producing capacity to a stepped-up production of new, deadly field weapons, especially self-propelled artillery.

Here are some other production figures:

In 1942 we produced 56,000 combat vehicles, such as tanks and self-propelled artillery.

In 1942, we produced 670,000 machine guns, 6 times greater than our production in 1941 and 3 times greater than our total production during the year and a half of our participation in the First World War.

We produced 21,000 antitank guns, 6 times greater than our 1941 production.

We produced ten and a quarter billion rounds of small arms ammunition, five times greater than our 1941 production and three times greater than our total production in the First World War.

We produced 181,000,000 rounds of artillery ammunition, 12 times greater than our 1941 production, and 10 times greater than our total production in the First World War.

The arsenal of democracy is making good.

These facts and figures will give no aid and comfort to the enemy. On the contrary, I can imagine they will give him considerable discomfort. I suspect Hitler and Tojo will find it difficult to explain to the German and Japanese people just why it is that "decadent, inefficient democracy" can produce such phenomenal quantities of weapons and munitions—and fighting men.

We have given the lie to certain misconceptions—especially the one which holds that the various blocs or groups within a free country cannot forego their political and economic differences in time of crisis and work together toward a common goal.

While we have been achieving this miracle of production, during the past year our armed forces have grown from a little over 2,000,000 to 7,000,000. In other words, we have withdrawn from the labor force and the farms some 5,000,000 of our younger workers. And in spite of this, our farmers have contributed their share to the common effort by producing the greatest quantity of food ever made available during a single year in all our history.

Is there any person among us so simple as to believe that all this could have been done without creating some dislocations in our normal national life, some inconveniences, and even some hardships?

Who could have hoped to have done this without burdensome Government regulations which are a nuisance to everyone—including those who have the thankless task of administering them?

We all know that there have been mistakes—mistakes due to the inevitable process of trial and error inherent in doing big things for the first time. We all know that there have been too many complicated forms and questionnaires. I know about that. I have had to fill some of them out myself.

But we are determined to see to it that our supplies of food and other essential civilian goods are distributed on a fair and just basis—to rich and poor, management and labor, farmer and city dweller alike. And we are determined to keep the cost of living at a stable level. All this has required much information. The forms and questionnaires represent an honest and sincere attempt by honest and sincere officials to obtain this information.

We have learned by the mistakes that have been made.

Our experience will enable us during the coming year to improve the necessary mechanisms of wartime economic controls and to simplify administrative procedures. But we do not intend to leave things so lax that loopholes will be left for cheaters, for chiselers, or for the manipulators of the black market.

Of course, there have been inconveniences and disturbances—and even hardships. And there will be many, many more before we finally win. Yes; 1943 will not be an easy year for us on the home front. We shall feel in many ways in our daily lives the sharp pinch of total war.

Fortunately, there are only a few Americans who place appetite above patriotism. The overwhelming majority realize that the food we send abroad is for essential military purposes, for our own and Allied fighting forces, and for necessary help in areas that we occupy.

We Americans intend to do this great job together. In our common labors we must build and fortify the very foundation of national unity—confidence in one another.

It is often amusing, and it is sometimes politically profitable, to picture the city of Washington as a madhouse, with the Congress and the administration disrupted with confusion and indecision and general incompetence.

However, what matters most in war is results. And the one pertinent fact is that after only a few years of preparation and only 1 year of warfare, we are able to engage, spiritually as well as physically, in the total waging of total war.

Washington may be a madhouse—but only in the sense that it is the Capital City of a nation which is fighting mad. And I think that Berlin and Rome and Tokyo, which had such contempt for the obsolete methods of democracy, would now gladly use all they could get of that same brand of madness.

We must not forget that our achievements in production have been relatively no greater than those of the Russians and British and Chinese who have developed their war industries under the incredible difficulties of battle conditions. They have had to continue work through bombings and black-outs. They have never quit.

We Americans are in good, brave company in this war, and we are playing our own, honorable part in the vast common effort.

As spokesmen for the United States Government, you and I take off our hats to those responsible for our American production—to the owners, managers, and supervisors, to the draftsmen and engineers, to the workers—men and women—in factories and arsenals and shipyards and mines and mills and forests and railroads and highways.

We take off our hats to the farmers who have faced an unprecedented task of feeding not only a great Nation but a great part of the world.

We take off our hats to all the loyal, anonymous, untiring men and women who have worked in private employment and in Government and who have endured rationing and other stringencies with good humor and good will.

We take off our hats to all Americans who have contributed magnificently to our common cause.

I have sought to emphasize a sense of proportion in this review of the events of the war and the needs of the war.

We should never forget the things we are fighting for. But, at this critical period of the war, we should confine ourselves to the larger objectives and not get bogged down in argument over methods and details.

We, and all the United Nations, want a decent peace and a durable peace. In the years between the end of the first World War and the beginning of the second World War, we were not living under a decent or a durable peace.

I have reason to know that our boys at the front are concerned with two broad aims beyond the winning of the war; and their thinking and their opinion coincide with what most Americans here back home are mulling over. They know, and we know, that it would be inconceivable—it would, indeed, be sacrilegious—if this Nation and the world did not attain some real, lasting good out of all these efforts and sufferings and bloodshed and death.

The men in our armed forces want a lasting peace, and, equally, they want permanent employment for themselves, their families and their neighbors when they are mustered out at the end of the war.

Two years ago I spoke in my annual message of four freedoms. The blessings of two of them, freedom of speech and freedom of religion, are an essential part of the very life of this Nation; and we hope that these blessings will be granted to all men everywhere.

The people at home, and the people at the front—men and women—are wondering about the third freedom—freedom from want. To them it means that when they are mustered out, when war production is converted to the economy of peace, they will have the right to expect full employment—for themselves and for all able-bodied men and women in America who want to work.

They expect the opportunity to work, to run their farms, their stores, to earn decent wages. They are eager to face the risks inherent in our system of free enterprise.

They do not want a post-war America which suffers from undernourishment or slums—or the dole. They want no get-rich-quick era of bogus "prosperity," which will end for them in selling apples on a street corner, as happened after the bursting of the boom in 1929.

When you talk with our young men and women you will find they want to work for themselves and their families; they consider they have the right to work; and they know that after the last war their fathers did not gain that right.

When you talk with our young men and women you will find that with the opportunity for employment they want assurance against the evils of all major economic hazards—assurance that will extend from the cradle to the grave. This great Government can and must provide this assurance.

I have been told that this is no time to speak of a better America after the war. I am told it is a grave error on my part.

I dissent.

If the security of the individual citizen, or the family, should become a subject of national debate, the country knows where I stand.

I say this now to this Seventy-eighth Congress, because it is wholly possible that freedom from want, the right of employment, and the right of assurance against life's hazards, will loom very large as a task of America during the coming 2 years.

I trust it will not be regarded as an issue—but rather as a task for all of us to study sympathetically, to work out with a constant regard for the attainment of the objective, with fairness to all and with injustice to none.

In this war of survival we must keep before our minds not only the evil things we fight against but the good things we are fighting for. We fight to retain a great past—and we fight to gain a greater future.

Let us remember that economic safety for the America of the future is threatened unless a greater economic stability comes to the rest of the world. We cannot make America an island in either a military or an economic sense. Hitlerism, like any other form of crime or disease, can grow from the evil seeds of economic as well as military feudalism.

Victory in this war is the first and greatest goal before us. Victory in the peace is the next. That means striving toward the enlargement of the security of man here and throughout the world—and, finally, striving for the "fourth freedom"—freedom from fear.

It is of little account for any of us to talk of essential human needs, of attaining security, if we run the risk of another world war in 10 or 20 or 50 years. That is just plain common sense. Wars grow in size, in death and destruction, and in the inevitability of engulfing all nations, in inverse ratio to the shrinking size of the world as a result of the conquest of the air. I shudder to think of what will happen to humanity, including curselves, if this war ends in an inconclusive peace, and another war breaks out when the babies of today have grown to fighting age.

Every normal American prays that neither he nor his sons nor his grandsons will be compelled to go through this horror again.

Undoubtedly a few Americans, even now, think that this Nation can end this war comfortably and then climb back into an American hole and pull the hole in after them.

But we have learned that we can never dig a hole so deep that it would be safe against predatory animals. We have also learned that if we do not pull the fangs of the predatory animals of this world, they will multiply and grow in strength—and they will be at our throats once more in a short generation.

Most Americans realize more clearly than ever before that modern war equipment in the hands of aggressor nations can bring danger overnight to our own national existence or to that of any other nation or island or continent.

It is clear to us that if Germany and Italy and Japan—or any one of them—remain armed at the end of this war, or are permitted to rearm, they will again, and inevitably, embark upon an ambitious career of world conquest. They must be disarmed and kept disarmed, and they must abandon the philosophy, and the teaching of that philosophy, which has brought so much suffering to the world.

After the First World War we tried to achieve a formula for permanent peace, based on a magnificent idealism. We failed. But by our failure we have learned that we cannot maintain peace at this stage of human development by good intentions alone.

Today the United Nations are the mightiest military coalition in history. They represent an overwhelming majority of the population of the world. Bound together in solemn agreement that they themselves will not commit acts of aggression or conquest against any of their neighbors, the United Nations can and must remain united for the maintenance of peace by preventing any attempt to rearm in Germany, in Japan, in Italy, or in any other nation which seeks to violate the tenth commandment—"Thou shalt not covet."

There are cynics and skeptics who say it cannot be done. The American people and all the freedom-loving peoples of this earth are now demanding that it must be done. And the will of these people shall prevail.

The philosophy of the Axis Powers is based on profound contempt for the human race. If, in the formation of our future policy, we were guided by the same cynical contempt, then we should be surrendering to the philosophy of our enemies, and our victory would turn to defeat.

The issue of this war is the basic issue between those who believe in mankind and those who do not—the ancient issue between those who put their faith in the people and those who put their faith in dictators and tyrants. There have always been those who did not believe in the people, who attempted to block their forward movement across history, to force them back to servility and suffering and silence.

The people have now gathered their strength. They are moving forward in their might and power—and no force, no combination of forces, no trickery, deceit, or violence can stop them now. They see before them the hope of the world—a decent, secure, peaceful life for all men everywhere.

I do not prophesy when this war will end.

But I do believe that this year of 1943 will give to the United Nations a very substantial advance along the roads that lead to Berlin and Rome and Tokyo.

I tell you it is within the realm of possibility that this Seventy-eighth Congress may have the historic privilege of helping greatly to save the world from future fear.

Therefore, let us—all of us—have confidence; let us redouble our efforts.

A tremendous, costly, long-enduring task in peace as well as in war is still ahead of us.

But, as we face that continuing task, we may know that the state of this Nation is good—the heart of this Nation is sound—the spirit of this Nation is strong—the faith of this Nation is eternal.

At 1 o'clock and 19 minutes p. m., the President retired from the Hall of the House.

At 1 o'clock and 21 minutes p. m., the Members of the Cabinet of the President of the United States retired from the Hall of the House.

At 1 o'clock and 22 minutes p. m., the Members of the Diplomatic Corps retired from the Hall of the House.

At 1 o'clock and 23 minutes p. m., the Speaker announced that the joint session was dissolved.

Thereupon, the Vice President and the Members of the Senate returned to their Chamber.

REPRESENTATIVE JOHN J. COCHRAN

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution (H. Res. 32), and ask for its immediate consideration.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, JANUARY 8, 1943

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Most merciful God, the loving Father of mankind, hold us to the realization that there is a destiny that makes all men brothers. In pensive and in quiet mood we would understand that enduring happiness and contentment must be born of pity, of tenderness for the poor and distressed, and that the whole round world is bound by golden chains to the feet of the Divine; by service, hallow our joy and gratitude. Show us how the lowliest becomes lofty if inspired by the glorifying motive of love for our fellow men. In the spirit of our great Exemplar, who deeply lived and suffered, lead us clear and safe into new light and a new life.

Give us consciences so fine that they shall be sensitive to all untruth that make falsehood easy. We pray that our earliest passion and our latest ambition shall be to follow the summons of the countless crosses around which the winds moan and sigh while Rachel weeps for her children. Forgive our selfishness, rebuke us when we are untrue, recall us when we go astray, and cleanse us from all secret faults. Not by things seen but by faith is life deepened, sweetened, and dignified and is the power of God unto salvation. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD by inserting the results of the Washington Naval Treaty of February 6, 1922.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SALE OF GOVERNMENT-OWNED SILVER

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 or 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, on January 6, I introduced a bill (H. R. 743) to authorize the use, for war purposes, of silver held or owned by the United States.

Under the New Deal's subsidy program for the benefit of the silver-producing States, the Government is hoarding huge quantities of silver vitally needed for the war effort as a substitute for copper and tin, and other critical metals of which there is a shortage.

This silver program was inaugurated in 1934, in the early days of the New Deal. The bill was jammed through the House without anyone knowing what it was all about, or what its effect would be. It provided that the Government should buy all domestically produced silver at a price approximately double the then market price. Hence the legislation was definitely inflationary in character. Silver certificates were issued against the silver held by the Treasury, and to the extent of approximately half their face value they represent fiat money. The only beneficiaries of the program are the silver producers who are paid twice what their silver is worth on the market. Everyone else suffers.

At the present time, the chief sufferer is the war production program, because under the Silver Purchase Act the silver which the Government acquires must be used as backing for the silver certificates and cannot be used by war industries. Silver has been aptly called the slacker metal. The purpose of my bill, which is similar to others dealing with the same subject, is to permit the sale of this Government-owned silver, now buried in vaults at West Point, for use in war production. Most such bills, however, require the Treasury to maintain at all times the ownership and possession of an amount of silver equal in monetary value to the face amount of all outstanding silver certificates heretofore or hereafter issued. I have omitted this provision from my bill because I believe the Government should retire these silver certificates as the silver is sold.

The silver purchase program is inflationary; it is an unwarranted subsidy to silver producers; and above all it constitutes a definite impediment to the success of the war effort. In my opinion, it should be speedily repealed.

In a separate measure, which I am today introducing, I have provided for the repeal of the Silver Purchase Act of 1934, as well as section 4 of the act of July 6, 1939, relating to the coinage of domestically produced silver.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE DEMOCRATIC WHIP

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 seconds.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to announce to the House, and I am sure the announcement will be received on both sides with a high degree of pleasure, the appointment, or perhaps I should say the reappointment, of our distinguished and beloved friend from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK] as Democratic whip of this Congress.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after the conclusion of other special orders heretofore made the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of other special orders today I be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by the insertion of an editorial entitled "Railroads in the War."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KNUTSON. Also, Mr. Speaker, another extension reciting some of the trouble that the farmer is having under this unnecessary gas rationing.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WASIELEWSKI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by the insertion of two editorials.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting some editorials on the death of Mr. E. J. Lynett, owner and editor of the Scranton Times, a leading Democratic newspaper in the State of Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

STUDY OF PEACE PROBLEMS

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and also to extend my remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I solicit your support of a House resolution I have introduced today providing for a special investigating committee consisting of 15 Members of the House. The idea is to have the committee make a thorough and orderly study of peace problems, offers, and settlements. Such a committee should be able to help expedite the successful conclusion of the present war and help to prevent future wars. I shall discuss the subject further in a day or so. Meanwhile, Members may find time to scan an informal statement concerning the resolution which I permitted to be published yesterday and which I shall insert in the Appendix of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

SALES OF DAIRY HERDS

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Speaker, 50 percent of the farm population in my district have either been drafted into the Army or have entered the defense plants of America. I present to you now a sign of an auction sale, and many others of the same sort will be seen on the farms all over my district before this trouble is over unless an immediate remedy for it is brought about.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Yes.

Mr. REED of New York. Simply to say to the gentleman—and I think everyone agrees with me who comes from the dairy districts—that those signs are on every pole and tree throughout the dairy districts of this country. Yet they are crying out for milk and putting regulations on the farmers so that they cannot produce the milk, butter, and cheese that are needed. I am glad the gentleman has called attention to this, and it ought to be called to the attention of the House every day.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I agree with everything the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] has said, and we have now had notice of the release by the Army of 96,000,000 cases of powdered milk that they bought and they do not now need. As to farm sales, in Minnesota we have for many years averaged about 300 annually. This year the estimate runs as high as 10,000 sales.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. And this situation has become so serious that these auction sales are no longer regarded as special occasions. The ladies of the particular community I refer to, where the auction is being held, are serving luncheon during the sale. Are these economic disasters soon to be heralded in every corner of the country as a signal for social gatherings to accentuate the fallen grandeur of individual ownership and private enterprise? These auctions signify the death knell of that American era.

AUCTION

My son having gone in the Army and being unable to secure help, I am compelled to sell this purebred dairy, which is second to none in Chenango County, on what is known as the Hayden farm, situated 2 miles north of McDonough village on the improved road leading from McDonough to Pharsalia Hook, Tuesday, October 27, commencing at 12:30 sharp, the following:

Forty-four purebred Holsteins, consisting of 12 close-up springers, 4 first-calf heifers due soon, 7 recently fresh, balance due between now and spring; 7 yearlings, 3 spring calves.

The majority of this bunch of cows was raised by me on the farm and carry a butterfat test of 3.6. For the past 4 years the test has averaged from 3.6 to 3.7.

Two herd sires—Senior sire: Man-o-War Premier 27th; son of Man-o-War Premier; junior sire: Thendara Onyx Pledge Tarus, from Frank Decker's good herd.

We would be pleased to have any interested party call at this farm and see this dairy at any time, night or morning, before the sale. Why buy grades when you can buy purebreds at the same price. Papers and signed transfers will be furnished with each animal. Remember the date, and remember the place, and be there.

This farm of 380 acres, well watered, and under good cultivation, is offered at private sale.

The ladies of McDonough will serve lunches beginning at 11:30.

Sale under cover.

Terms: Cash.

ARCHIE W. CALDWELL.
WILL EVANS, Auctioneer.

WAR PRODUCTION IN 1942

Mr. JONKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JONKMAN. Mr. Speaker, one of the most gratifying statements in the President's message of yesterday was that comparing the stupendous war production of 1942 with that of 1941.

It must not be overlooked that a vital, if not a controlling, factor in this revolution was the abandonment of the New Deal concept of production as personified in O. P. M. and the delegation of war production to private enterprise and the W. P. B. under Donald Nelson immediately at the beginning of 1942.

It must not be forgotten that it was the hammering of Congress all through 1941, culminating in the Truman report of January 1942, that smashed the bureaucratic inertia and reinstated the traditional American way of getting things done through private initiative.

It was American industry, that great institution of labor and management, each working reciprocally in its orbit, freed largely from bureaucratic control, that enabled us to build in 1942 6 times the number of machine guns and antitank guns, 5 times the amount of small arms and ammunition, and 10 times the amount of artillery ammunition that we did in 1941.

It is this great American institution of free enterprise, its defects pruned by Government regulation, which must and will solve not only our all-out war production but form the firm fundamentals of a peace economy when the victory shall have been won.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include an article by David Lawrence.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CONGRESS RESUMES ITS PROPER FUNCTIONS

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, the Seventy-eighth Congress has opened under conditions which have never before confronted this Nation.

We are engaged in a deadly struggle for our liberty and our lives. Free constitutional government is threatened with extinction. The United States, with the aid of its allies, must win this war. The United States, with the aid of its allies, will win this war.

While the war is being fought we are having to exercise great care that our American representative system of government, our American system of free enterprise, and our American system of free society are not displaced by some form of totalitarianism arising through the necessary strictures upon liberties due to the war. We must exercise great care that these strictures are not perpetuated after the war, as the regular order of our American way of life. The auspices under which the Seventy-eighth Congress opens are such as to encourage the American people, because statements by both the Republican and Democratic leaders in the Congress make it certain the Congress means to recover its prerogatives, to resume its functions, and to become again an active, efficient, and assertive branch of the Government.

The Seventy-seventh Congress passed through a period in which a tremendous planned assault was made upon the legislative branch of the Government as an institution. That assault has just about subsided, because the November elections demonstrated that the American people are determined to continue our American system, and that they mean to support the Congress as their special instrument of control over their Government. Those who apparently believed they could persuade the people to discredit and render impotent their instrument of control over their Government and their governors have had an awakening. They now realize their propaganda did not succeed. They have, therefore, gone underground in their efforts to sap the foundations of our free American governmental economic and social system, but they will be no more successful in the future than they have been in the past.

It is clear from the statements of both the Republican and Democratic leaders that the new Congress will be a body wholly united in an effort to win this war as quickly as possible. It is safe to say that there is not a Member of the Congress in either House who does not fully realize that every day the war can be shortened will mean the saving of thousands of men from death or wounds.

It is equally clear from the declarations of the leaders that the Congress will move to take back its prerogatives and to put an end to the defiance by bureaucrats of the expressed will and obvious intention of the legislative body. Government by decrees is coming to a close insofar as it has been attempted by the bureaucrats, and the Congress is going to have much more to say in the future about how the Government is run, how the country is governed, how the war is operated, than it has had in the past. There is no question but that the morale of the American people will be greatly strengthened when they realize that the new Congress is going to insist that all other considerations be set aside and all energies devoted to the winning of the war and the successful transition back to a peace basis, while at the same time avoiding economic chaos.

There is no question but that Congress will lead the way for the people and that a marked improvement in the whole situation will result from the forthright declaration of the congressional leaders that the legislative department is still an integral and effective branch of our Government.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein a sermon by Rev Clifford E. Barber.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks on the new Alaskan highway and to include some short verses descriptive of the same.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE DAIRY INDUSTRY

Mrs. BOLTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mrs. BOLTON. Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to have an opportunity to speak a word for the dairy industry of the country. I know from experience that a dairy herd cannot be built up in a day, indeed, it takes about 5 years to build a productive herd. Due to the exodus of labor from the farms, valuable herds representing many years of careful, patient work are being sold under the hammer. The releasing of a quantity of dried milk will help the immediate shortage but will not replace broken dairy herds. If we are to continue to have milk, butter, and cheese in sufficient quantities to supply the needs of our troops and of our children and fill the requirements of other countries we must find ways to keep such labor as still remains on the farms right there on the job and must work out a clear-cut program for the whole basic industry of food production.

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ANDERSON of New Mexico. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include therein a resolution by an American Legion post.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'BRIEN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include an editorial from the Washington Star.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. WICKERSHAM, Mr. FULMER, and Mr. HOPE were granted permission to extend their own remarks in the RECORD.)

SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON DEFENSE MIGRATION

Mr. TOLAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Special Committee on Defense Migration may have permission to file its final report and that the same be printed on or before next Monday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BLACKNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein an article with reference to the Blue Star Mothers, appearing in the Flint News-Advertiser of January 1, 1943.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix and to include a newspaper article.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

DRAFTEES OVER 38 YEARS OF AGE

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, under the present Army program it is clear that men over the age of 38 are, generally speaking, less adaptable to modern military conditions than our younger soldiers. To release these men from military service, the Army now requires advance information that a position is open to them in a war plant. Many men are in no position to obtain such assurance, even though there may be many openings available in their home communities. I propose that these men, whom the Army is seeking to release, be honorably discharged and directed to the United States Employment Service offices nearest to their homes where work shortages exist.

By this method we should simultaneously eliminate many men from the Army who are not essential to its improvement and aid in the relief of labor difficulties in many areas of the Nation.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that in extending the remarks I just made I may include therein the auction-sale notice to which I referred.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after the special orders previously entered today I may proceed for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE DAIRY INDUSTRY

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, in line with the sentiments expressed by my colleagues concerning the dairy industry, I wish to say that I received a letter yesterday from a widow in my district who owns a 100-acre farm with 20 cows. Her son, who attended those cattle, was taken into the Army. She has only a 16-year-old boy at home, who is in high school. It is an impossible situation.

On the 30th of last month I was compelled to sell my own herd, which I was 20 years in building, in order that I might discharge my responsibilities here. Somebody will say, "They brought enough money to pay you to sell them." That is true, but these herds cannot be replaced when once disposed of. That is another dangerous thing. Butchers are offering such high prices for these cows that it is going to be unprofitable to keep them, and patriotic farmers are paying such high prices that they can never make them pay. Then, too, about the time a farmer has put on a few more cows his help leaves him. All this is wrong.

This House should impress upon the men down the Avenue that this system must be changed in order that agriculture may render its proper effort in the winning of the war.

This drafting of experienced farm labor is going to have its effect more ways than one. For instance, the Department of Agriculture reports less wheat sown this fall. Next July will tell the story about that. That may mean a wheat shortage. Many farmers are now making plans for next summer, and those plans are not being made on the basis of what they want to produce or on what their farm can produce but on what they can handle.

There is no use for a farmer to sow or plant what he knows he cannot harvest. Then many of them have been working 15 hours a day, 7 days a week, without any extra or double pay. He has not asked for more. But when he knows that the coal miners are striking and working only 35 hours per week, and he is not able to buy the fuel he needs, then the farmer asks the question, and rightly so, Why?

LET US GIVE THE FARMER A SQUARE DEAL

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, the gentlemen who have just spoken have no monopoly on the troubles of the dairy farmers. I represent probably the outstanding dairy district in the South, and we are having the same trouble there; they are stripping our farms of their young men to where many farmers are being compelled to sell their herds of fine Jersey cows—herds that in many instances it has taken a generation to build up.

I will put my district up against any other district in the whole country. We have furnished as large a proportion of our white men to the service in this war as any other district in America, and they are suffering as many casualties. As a rule they are the men who came off these farms. I am tired of seeing four or five men on one job in a shipbuilding plant, a defense industry, or any other kind of industry, while these farms are being stripped of their young men and these herds destroyed. If we cannot get relief otherwise, then Congress should act to put a stop to these injustices.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, everyone of us recognizes the seriousness of the dairy farmers' problem and the tragedy it will be if we permit anything to prevent maximum production of their all-important products. I should like in 1 minute to give what seems to me to be a practical guide which I think should govern the policy of everybody that has to do with this problem; and that is that no policy ought to be adopted by any governmental agency which has the effect of restricting the production of dairy products or any other needed product for that matter.

One matter immediately under consideration is the question of a higher price for manufactured milk products. The question as to whether or not a higher price will be allowed depends upon whether a higher goal of milk production is to be striven for. It seems to me this question ought not to be debated for a single moment; that if a higher price is necessary to get increased milk production and to enable the dairy farmer to do it, then a higher price ought to be one of the answers. It is, of course, not the whole answer, but it is one of them, in my opinion.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD by including a letter from the national commander of the American Legion; also to extend my remarks by including an editorial on the National Youth Administration.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

FARM LABOR

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, in one of the largest cities of Kansas recently 16 grocery stores closed. I mention this just to get away from the farm problem for a moment. These stores closed because they could not pay the wages that Madam Perkins saddled on this country in defense areas. That is what is happening to help in grocery stores in a lot of sections. The employers cannot pay that standard.

The reason farmers are short of help is partly because the boys have gone to service and because the boys have gone to defense plants, which pay four or five times what farm hands normally get. The defense plants have drawn the boys away from the farms. It is a wicked waste brought about by the wage scale Madam Perkins has fixed in defense areas, added to the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act for time and a half for over 40 hours. The asininity of this situation is not equaled any place, yet we heard not a word said yesterday of the wicked waste—not a note of sympathy sounded for the man at home who is losing his shirt, or for the taxpayer, who is not only losing his occupation because of priorities but a chance to pay future taxes. Not a word against the wicked, unnecessary waste.

THE FARMERS' DIFFICULTIES

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my own remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan is next on the list for recognition under his special order.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I shall not take that time now, but ask instead that after Members who desire to speak today have spoken I may proceed for 35 minutes. I will not waste my time now; I may learn something. In the meantime I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the requests of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS] thinks the remedy for the shortage of dairy products lies in raising the price of milk, butter, cheese, and dairy products generally. Now, if he knows any way to get butter and milk out of a dry cow, or out of a cow that has been killed for beef by raising the price of milk or butter, I should like to have him tell us about it.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. The trouble about dairying is just this: You have taken all the boys off the farm, the boys who cared for the dairy herds, and, as stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROSS], the dairy herds are being butchered. One thing is certain, you are not going to get butter and milk out of a cow that has been processed and put in a tin can.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Your wife cannot go to the grocery store here in Washington and buy a pound of butter, you cannot get any butter any place at present. I received a letter from one of my constituents yesterday saying the S. C. C. was distributing butter to the farmers out there. One man who has 24 cows was given 2 cans of condensed milk, and butter was distributed to the children in a country school.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? The gentleman mentioned me by name.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Think of it! Taking milk and butter to the few farmers who still have dairy herds. What are you going to do about it? That is what I want to know. What is the majority party going to do about it? Will you make it possible for the farmers to farm? Or will you continue to permit the New Dealers to carry on their wrecking program? What are you going to do about it?

THE FARM SITUATION

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH]?

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I concede that the farmers have contributed tremendously to our armed forces, but this also applies to labor. As to dairying, I venture to say that 10 times as many dairies and dairy herds were sold under the hammer in 1930, 1931, 1932, and in early 1933, when many foreclosure sales were stopped by force and in some instances sheriffs and judges were driven with guns from farm premises, as are being sold now. Why are they selling their herds at this time? Because they are getting twice and three times as much for the cows as they did in past years and they are taking the profit that they may live in comfort in the future.

Personally, I am willing for the farmer or the dairyman to get a fair price, but let us also take into consideration the consumer who is now paying twice as much for milk, cream, cheese, and butter as heretofore.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH]?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I was very much interested in listening to that great dirt farmer from Chicago, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH], talk about his dairy herds, I suppose grazing in the City Hall of Chicago and being milked by the city hall gang.

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. HILL. Do they not milk the public every day in the city of Chicago?

Mr. KNUTSON. And wreck them.

Mr. SABATH. The gentleman should speak for himself.

Mr. FISH. I am surprised at the remarks of the gentleman from Chicago, who has always pretended to be such a friend of the farmers and the forgotten dairymen.

Mr. SABATH. And I am.

Mr. FISH. Everybody knows, Democrats and Republicans alike, that our dairy farmers are eking out a very precarious living. They are working 12 and 14 hours a day and overburdened with taxes. They have large investments and they are striving to maintain those investments and continue on their farms in order to produce milk and food for the American people and our armed forces throughout the world.

Mr. Speaker, it is up to the Congress, regardless of party, to help the farmers instead of attacking them here on the floor of the House. Our farmers are doing their utmost to help win the war but they cannot hire farm help unless they receive a fair and adequate price on what they produce.

Mr. ANDERSON of New Mexico. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. ANDERSON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDERSON of New Mexico. Mr. Speaker, all of this discussion about the dairy farmers and the dairy industry is tremendously interesting to one who operates a dairy. I have just checked the list which I made up while I was at home prior to Christmas and I find that I have 175 dairy cows, 90 heifers, and 52 young calves. I am not sending any of them to the butcher. I find that these calves which were worth a few dollars a year or two ago are now worth double the former amount. My producing dairy cows that were worth $60 a year ago are now worth $125 apiece. I was getting 48, 52, and 56 cents per pound of butterfat for fluid milk then, while today I am getting 85 cents per pound of butterfat. Under those circumstances, I cannot complain.

I realize there is a labor shortage all over this country. It is inconvenient at my farm, but I hope that throughout the country we may approach the dairy situation from the standpoint of urging the dairy farmers to save their herds. The dairy inventories are larger today than they have been in all the history of the country. Milk prices to the producer are better. Dairy cattle are worth more. I believe it would be helpful if that sort of information were given to the House.

Mr. GROSS. What kind of labor does the gentleman have on his farm?

Mr. ANDERSON of New Mexico. The gentleman asks me what kind of labor I have on my farm. I have lost practically all of my former dairy labor, but the people in this country must have ingenuity. We take a truck now and drive each morning 6 miles to an Indian reservation and pick up some of the finest farm labor I ever saw in my life—labor that I did not employ heretofore, but I am getting along with it now.

Mr. GROSS. Are the cattle going to be worth as much 6 months from now if you have nobody to attend them?

Mr. ANDERSON of New Mexico. I cannot tell you what the cows will be worth, but the dairy herds of Denmark and Norway are being wiped out. There is going to be a demand for dairy cattle from this country for export to Europe, and I am saving every heifer calf I can. I have not sold a heifer calf for 2 years. I may be foolish, but I believe there is going to be a demand for dairy cattle from over on the other side of the Atlantic and I am going to help supply that demand at good prices when the time comes. We should not be talking about selling dairy herds. We should be building them up and we should encourage our farmers to hold onto their dairy stock.

RATIONING

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK]?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, in last Sunday's Boston Herald there appeared an interview with Maj. Donald L. Dickson, United States Marine Corps, who had returned to Boston after serving 109 days in Guadalcanal. During his interview he said:

> Tell your readers to stop squawking about rationing, he said casually. They should live on Jap fish and rice awhile if they think they aren't well treated.

A young man whose name is James LeGrice, motor machinist mate, first-class, called at my house. He had formerly worked in the General Accounting Office. He enlisted in the Navy. He had been wounded twice at Casablanca and he was home because of wounds. After he was wounded he was placed in a hospital ship, which was torpedoed. He landed on a raft and he was there about 3 hours. He did not know how long he would be on that raft.

Later he was on another hospital ship which was torpedoed, and he was in the water for an hour and a half. I said, "How did you do it?" He said, "I was a good swimmer, and I was able to paddle around." I said, "What were some of your thoughts? Would you mind telling me?" He said, "Well, Congressman, I will never forget one thought that was in my mind. When I was on that raft for 3 hours I did not know whether I would ever be rescued or not, or how long I would be on that raft, and the question of food was very important to me." He said, "I looked to see what I had, and I had three little crackers; and, Congressman, those three crackers looked like a million dollars to me."

SPECIAL ORDERS

The SPEAKER. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] is recognized for 35 minutes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 35 minutes at the conclusion of the other special orders of the day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under a previous order of the House the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that we have so many new Members, it is suggested that some addresses ought to be made this afternoon. May I say to these new Members, "You could not expect, could you, that the speakers would come from the other side of the Chamber? They would necessarily, of course, at this time, have to be alibi speeches, which are not pleasant for them to make."

On yesterday we listened to a reassuring message. I find little in it to find fault with, but I find much fault with the omissions. We were very happy to listen to its optimistic statements, and we are proud that we have accomplished so much in our war effort. No recommendations for legislation were made, as is customary in a President's message.

Recently I read some of the Harrison and Cleveland messages. Always many matters were brought to the attention of the Congress.

When the President addressed us yesterday, the entire Nation could listen in and be informed. Now messages recommending action by the Congress will be brought to us in driblets, and they will get little notice or attention from the Nation. I marked one passage in the message which was of tremendous interest to me, when he said that "the country knows where I stand." Therefore, if you are in doubt next year as to a candidate for still another term, "you know where I stand." I regret that premature announcement.

A sincere welcome to you new Members. I have been here a long time. I have usually objected to the passage of 2 or 3 days at the beginning of a session, when no business was ready to be taken up, without opportunity to express ourselves on the state of the Nation. I have usually contributed, but I earnestly wish you to believe that I am not seeking publicity. I feel deeply my responsibilities, as you do, and I try to think for myself, although I often see a shortage of necessary equipment in arriving at definite conclusions. I know that you are anxious to do real service for your country. For a time you will be extremely impatient at the snail-pace procedure of the House. You will need to be patient and tolerant. The present procedure is the result of many years of experience in handling legislative matters.

You may find fault with us older ones who have been here so long and have learned caution. The young men of the New Deal seem to think that old men are fools. Old men know that young men are fools. That is an old adage. The New Deal is now generally discredited. I shall do nothing that will hinder the winning of the war. However, it has often been said lately that "we must win the war from the New Deal." On yesterday our President dared make mention but slightly of his heralded social-security program. We know something of what he has in his mind. We want to win the war, but our "heads are full of quarrels" on domestic issues. You are bound to hear expressions of them, but nothing will be done by the minority that will interfere with the winning of the war. I am not and have not been an isolationist. For a long time I have been quite the contrary. I was one of the first to vote for the repeal of the embargo.

We have recently been given a shock by our State Department. I can hardly express my amazement when I refer to the so-called White Paper. Have you read it and digested it? It was given to you with great éclat as if it were something to the credit of this administration. This administration has long pointed a finger of scorn at you isolationists but at the same time were doing the most they could in the way of appeasement and never daring to say "Put up or shut up." Now they claim to have known all along the purposes of the Axis Powers, but they sold them the scrap iron in huge quantities and bought their gold and furnished the sinews of war to those who they now declare were known to be our real potential and expected enemies. It would seem that our State Department were the worst isolationists of us all. What a policy to pursue while claiming full knowledge of the intent of those who are now our mortal enemies. Preaching preparedness to us, but actually preparing our enemies to destroy us. What vision.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Did I understand the gentleman correctly to say a moment ago that yesterday the President said "You know where I stand"?

Mr. GIFFORD. He did say that.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Well, as I recall, not long ago he issued a statement in which he said that no man would be forced to join a union in order to work in the defense of his country. Recently the boards created by him have ordered Montgomery Ward and other companies to employ union men only and have them pay dues. Will the gentleman tell me where the gentleman stands on the right of an American to work in defense of his country without paying tribute to some organization, which in turn contributes hundreds of thousands of dollars to his campaign?

Mr. GIFFORD. I can only assume where he stands. I have a right to assume, because of what he has stood for in the past, and I can only perhaps properly judge by what he has done in the past. However, he was first elected on an economy program. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] has just now told us about the public debt. The President was elected on a platform promising not to increase, but to decrease, the public debt. Why such a turn-about-face? Only 2 years ago he promised the mothers of the country that no boy would be sent to foreign lands to fight. Yesterday he told us that a million and a half had already gone abroad to fight. Of course, he must have been sincere and earnest in those promises. Circumstances have forced him to change his mind on this last matter. Of course, a "foolish consistency" is the product of little minds. He has a great mind and consistency is not a fault of our great President. So we do not know but what he may change his attitude in the matter of paying tribute to an organization to work on defense projects. But when he changes, hear the roar of anger up from Lewis and all the others. The roar has already gone up from John Lewis, but it will be greatly augmented if any correction at all is suggested. Even the farmers the other evening said openly, "He is no longer the friend of the farmers." Heaven forbid that labor should say the same thing. There ought to have been some alibi speeches here today explaining the recent elections. Even now the roar of discontent is being heard.

Mr. WOORUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] a moment ago charged that the W. L. B. was the agency which forced Montgomery Ward & Co. to accept the demands of union leaders. I wish to remind him and the House that action was taken by the President of the United States himself and not by any board which he had appointed.

Mr. GIFFORD. I have expressed myself many times on that phase of it. I recall the sit-down strikes. I recall the attitude of the administration, but we will not go into that now. At the present moment, where are we and what are we going to do about it?

I want to refer again to that social-security item in the President's message yesterday. How guardedly he spoke of it, but it is there. C. W. A., P. W. A., F. E. R. A., and all the others come to my mind. All I can say is that it had "a very ancient, fish-like smell, to me." But if needed, the same procedure would be followed again, no matter what it would cost. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] implies that now, because of our great debt, we must not do that any more. But, the President has told you so many times, "What of our national debt? It is an internal debt. We owe it only to ourselves. What of it?" He rejoiced that "the silly dollar sign has been removed from the lend-lease legislation."

I admire him as a war President, of course. The Speaker of the House lauded him yesterday: "If you searched the country over, you could not have found such as he as a war leader." Let us accept that, but his economics are terrible.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. GROSS. Did not the President yesterday leave the inference or impression that social security was in the next campaign to take the place of W. P. A.?

Mr. GIFFORD. He left that impression perhaps among many, but, as I say, the thing smells, as I expressed it. He will continue to want blank checks. He wants no restraint in the checks to be handed out to the people. How the people loved those checks. How he fed even our wealthy towns checks as Christmas presents. No regard as to whether or not those communities needed assistance. Any community which asked for it got it. That is why he was reelected and reelected. There was not so much of that type of money in evidence lately. Votes were lacking They have not been so liberal lately. Good old Senator GLASS and many other Democrats have said, "Oh, yes; these have been bought elections; it is all perfectly plain."

But this is getting to be a little political, is it not?

Mr. REED of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. REED of New York. What I have to say is not political. The gentleman well knows the subterfuge that has been resorted to of taking these pay-roll taxes and spending the money, and some day the people will have to pay it over again. The spenders feel that on the theory that they are making the public feel that they are performing a humanitarian service, they propose to open up social security, widen it, get those taxes in and spend them. Some day the people will have to pay them all over again.

Mr. GIFFORD. How often have I drawn that sorry picture. The Congress has lost its power and its dignity. It has handed over to the President of the United States so many blank checks that the public now seems aroused about it. We must act differently. Now, how differently will you act? I have often taken the floor, for the reason that my colleagues have seen to it that I was given the chairmanship of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments. I am still ranking Member on that committee. They point their finger at me and say, "Why do you not do something?" I say to you new Members that I offered, day in and day out, orders of investigation in 1933, 1934, and 1935, and those orders would be referred to the committee. Then the chairman would write to the department and they would send a brief whitewash explanation, and then before the 10 days expired it moved to lay the whole matter on the table. The majority would not let the committee make one single investigation. They refused to investigate their own doings.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I wish to touch on a phrase in the President's speech of yesterday which I do not think is political. I am reluctant to bring my friend into a discussion of this delicate issue. The President said there are but few in our midst who place appetite above patriotism.

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes; I was going to refer to that.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I want to ask this question: What was the primary cause of revolutions throughout the history of the world? Was it not want of food, want of warmth? What were the primary causes?

Mr. GIFFORD. Those were the primary causes, but not all the causes. Another cause of revolution was the effort to gain power. To turn a government out they would stir up a revolution, as they used to in countries in South America, and in perhaps 3 days, with little bloodshed, the existing government would be overturned and a new one established. I refer back to Theodore Roosevelt's time. When any nation got power by revolution he paid little attention, because he said that was the only way in some countries that the bad could be turned out and the good get in.

But he was watchful as to how they carried on after they got into power. Mr. Wilson came in and changed that version: He would not recognize any Government that gained power by revolution and refused so consistently that we had a war with Mexico and got in bad with Haiti and several other nations all because of his doctrine that he would not recognize any government that came into power by that route.

Mr. CRAWFORD. May I proceed?

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes; certainly.

Mr. CRAWFORD. What are the greatest enemies of physical man? Are not hunger and cold the two greatest enemies of physical man?

Mr. GIFFORD. When a people are hungry and cold they will resort to any measures; yes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. And they forget patriotism almost invariably.

Mr. GIFFORD. The gentleman is entirely correct.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I want to develop that point a little.

Mr. GIFFORD. I fear they would be forced to put their appetities above their patriotism. Already deaths and intense suffering from freezing weather are recorded in Boston.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Always. Let us take the young man who is on the raft, the situation referred to by our distinguished majority leader: What did he think about? He thought about two or three crackers, whatever it was; he did not think in terms of sacrificing his life for his country; he thought in terms of food to put into an empty stomach, an empty intestine. That is what we are going back to, the law of self-preservation, the law of the preservation of the species. We cannot get away from it. Now, let me ask the gentleman this question: On page 7 of this copy of the President's message I now have, referring to economic opportunities after the war ends, it states:

When the boys come back after winning the war they expect the opportunity to work, to run their farms, their stores, earn decent wages. They are eager to face the risks inherent in our system of free enterprise.

What is there in the present program that is destroying the small industries of this country? What is there in the present program that is making it more impossible for the little farmer to operate? I do not refer to the irrigation farmer who operates in terms of hundreds of acres or thousands of acres with Mexican labor and Indian labor where it can be resorted to; I refer to the fellows in the so-called bread basket and in the diversified farming areas. What are we now doing to preserve the capital structures of those agricultural operators and those small enterprise operators? Does the gentleman care to comment on that?

Mr. GIFFORD. The message carefully avoided all that. The gentleman knows perfectly well from past experience that the New Deal cares little about capital structures. Has not that been demonstrated constantly? Capital has constantly been attacked the last 8 years. They wanted T. V. A.'s; they want now to put them on the Danube and on rivers all over the world. They did everything they could to kill private capital invested in power and then boasted to us "how fortunate we are to have a T. V. A." They have done everything to ruin the capital structures of business enterprises. The businessman has been harassed to the point of nonendurance.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit me to enlarge on that?

Mr. GIFFORD. Certainly.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Let us take the Puerto Rican situation. They go down in Puerto Rico and take over the private industries. The Boston court, I believe, rendered a decision forcing them to let go of the industries because they had acquired them illegally. What do they do now? They turn right around and recapture those private industries away from the owners without due process of law and contrary to the opinion of the court. That is what is happening to private business now.

Mr. GIFFORD. Exactly.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is what has happened even in Puerto Rico, let alone the United States itself.

Mr. GIFFORD. What has happened to the Congress? What has happened to the courts? What happened to the Supreme Court under the New Deal? Because a man was elected, reelected, and again reelected: We must now harken to the voice of the people. It is said that "the voice of the people is the voice of God." What should Congress do? Has the time now arrived when we should assert ourselves? Will those brave words of our Speaker come true and will Congress reassert itself? I doubt it.

For many years I have seen the leaders over here who are supposed to lead go to the White House, take orders, come back and actually drive you. To you new Members let me say that we have witnessed many times when there was a bill before this Congress which many of them did not want to vote for according to their conscience. At the end of the day's debate the last two speakers, the majority leader and the Speaker, would be recognized and say to them: "These Republicans want to destroy our President." They have not only pleaded with you, they have driven you, these leaders whom you have elected. We must demand that our leaders lead, not drive. I have spoken of this before.

I trust the new Members will help us. We cordially welcome you new Members. I also see new ladies here. I welcome the ladies, although I realize that it presents a difficulty to us. The ladies have a tremendous advantage over us. When they think, they must speak. "When a lady's in the case—all other things must give place."

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. The corollary of that is that when the gentleman speaks, they must think.

Mr. GIFFORD. Every bird loves to hear himself sing. Do not I?

Mr. DITTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DITTER. It seems to me the gentleman from Massachusetts has framed a very severe indictment against the New Deal. I am wondering whether the gentleman has been impressed as I have that the disciples of the New Deal should attempt to interrogate the gentleman from Massachusetts or defend their past misadministrations and maladministrations. It seems to me that some of the bold defenders, the erstwhile disciples if not the present disciples, would take this occasion to interrogate the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts. The silence which prevails is very significant to me.

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield now, if there is any gentleman who wishes to challenge any statement.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I would like to say that I have 15 minutes following the gentleman for whatever it may be worth.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman tell us whether he is a New Dealer or not?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I will in my 15 minutes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will it take you 15 minutes to explain it?

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, the New Deal has been simply a process of swapping old troubles for new, and most of the time the new troubles are worse than the old. Now, a word of warning from the Bigelow papers: "A genuine statesman must be on his guard. If you must have beliefs, don't have them too hard." Do not be disappointed if you do not seem to attain great influence in this body, but speak your mind plainly, then you will at least have a conscience that will comfort you.

If you come here to protect tomatoes, your conscience can be educated rather easily against anything that would militate against tomatoes. You may feel forced sometime to vote with somebody else for something he wants so he will be sure to vote for your tomatoes. Avoid this all you can, but it will be a great temptation.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. I do not want to take up any of the gentleman's time——

Mr. GIFFORD. The gentleman is very welcome to interrupt.

Mr. RANKIN. But I will take some time in a few days to answer the gentleman's argument and the arguments of anyone else in the House relative to the Tennessee Valley Authority. The T. V. A. is worth more to this country today than any other development that has yet been accomplished by any administration in your day and mine.

Mr. GIFFORD. The gentleman has so often stated that he is dead against socialism, yet that is the most outstanding socialistic experiment that has ever been attempted.

Mr. RANKIN. The trouble with the gentleman from Massachusetts is that he does not seem to discriminate between what is socialism itself and what is real democracy, and what is real, sound public business. The power business is a public business—especially when it handles water power that already belongs to the public, as is the case of the T. V. A.

Mr. GIFFORD. I am glad one man will stand up here and show up my weaknesses while I am still talking and not wait until I take my seat.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I wonder if the gentleman from Mississippi thinks it takes the T. V. A. and the expenditure of millions of dollars, $50,000,000, $100,000,000, or $115,000,000 to throw any light on the New Deal and what it has been doing to us?

Mr. RANKIN. May I say to the gentleman from Michigan that I am not sure that all the electricity generated by the T. V. A. would throw sufficient light on his mind to make him confess his errors.

Mr. GIFFORD. I am in quite a bit of difficulty. It would take a surgical operation to change the gentleman's mind.

Mr. HOFFMAN. While the gentleman from Mississippi is trying to convert me, will he explain why it is, with all the T. V. A. and all the money of the northern taxpayers that has been sent into Mississippi, you still have the highest percentage of people who cannot read and write down there? Turn some of that light on down there where it belongs so that they may have an opportunity to read.

Mr. RANKIN. Let me say to the gentleman that he is wrong about that. They may not be able to write so he can read it and understand it, but they can read and write. Let me say again that the T. V. A. program, or the Rural Electrification program, which grew out of the T. V. A., has done more for the farmers of the district of the gentleman from Michigan than he would do, at the present rate, if he stayed here 50 years.

Mr. GIFFORD. And it has bled people in Massachusetts in inverse ratio. Let us have no more of it.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I want to inject a note into this T. V. A. discussion, and I would like to ask the gentleman from Mississippi this serious question. Can the gentleman tell us now the approximate tonnage, the annual production, or give us any tonnage figures of fertilizer or superphosphates now being turned out down there?

Mr. RANKIN. Let me say to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD] that I have not kept up as carefully with that phase of the T. V. A. development as I have with power production. When I entered this Congress all of the American people were using 40,000,000,000 kilowatt-hours of electricity a year. Today the T. V. A. is producing 10,000,000,000 a year, and if it were not for that 10,000,000,000 kilowatts we would be suffering terribly for want of electricity in connection with the manufacture of aluminum and the carrying on of our war program. The T. V. A. has justified itself every day of its existence.

Mr. GIFFORD. Let us hurrah for the T. V. A. and have no more of it.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I would like to ask the gentleman why it is that the seven Congressmen from Mississippi received so few votes; why apparently the voters of Mississippi did not vote for Congressmen. Is it because of the great ability of your candidates or because you do not let the folks vote down there, or because they have no interest in their elections?

Mr. RANKIN. I am glad to answer that. It is because the people had so much confidence in their Representatives that they did not get out and run all over the district to get somebody to run against them, or to try to defeat them.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If the gentleman will yield further, can the gentleman from Mississippi in his remarks on the T. V. A. on the next occasion give the House information with respect to the production of commercial fertilizer or superphosphate that is now flowing, and can he obtain the figures with regard to the prospective production as well? I have been unofficially informed that England has requisitioned from us under lease-lend a greater quantity of fertilizer for the coming year than our total production in the United States. I have been officially informed by the T. V. A. literature as late as this week, from Mr. Hall, that the total 6-year production is approximately 275,000 tons, and that about 100,000 tons of this has been distributed to approximately 30,000 farmers over a great number of States, probably 24 of them.

It seems to me that if there is any way we can possibly materially increase the production of superphosphate in the T. V. A. at the present time we should do so to help alleviate the foodstuffs situation.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 additional minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. GIFFORD. I seem to have opened up a real discussion, as I hoped I would. I know that some will take the floor after me and claim that I have not made many constructive suggestions. We must only hope that the majority members are equipped to do that.

When I came here—perhaps you would not believe it—I was a radical; but I found so many dangerous radicals here that I seized the conservative end of the rope and have since pulled with all my might to save my country from the blessings of the New Deal.

Mr. CALVIN D. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CALVIN D. JOHNSON. May I say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that I personally feel that rural electrification is one of the most essential programs in our Nation today for this reason: The farmers of my community find it necessary to work both day and night in order to make a living, and we feel they are entitled to electric light in order to do that. Realizing that they cannot do this indefinitely, what relief has the administration to offer them?

Mr. GIFFORD. I listened to the many 1-minute speeches made today on the dire straits of the dairy farmers and would now like to extend my heartfelt sympathy to the Vice President. How will he be able to live up to his implied promise to furnish a quart of milk a day to the needy ones of the entire world? This is not facetious. It is illustrative only.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS] is recognized for 15 minutes.

THE DUTIES OF THIS CONGRESS

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, the Seventy-eighth Congress has the opportunity of being one of the very greatest if not the greatest Congress in the history of this Nation. In my judgment, we must do better if we are to live up to that standard than we have done so far today. I believe this place from which I speak now must continue to be the well of the House and not a wailing wall. Criticism there will have to be, but in times like the present it should in every case be accompanied by constructive proposals for the correction of what is wrong.

I also believe, and I say this with all earnestness to both Republicans and Democrats, that this is not an hour in which debate should be carried on by attempts at labeling one another, but rather by each of us standing up and telling where we stand as exactly as we know how.

Transcending the things that have been said here in the House today, there stands out one great paramount fact. Throughout this world young men and old men, women and children, are struggling in the most colossal war in all the history of humanity. The people have never so struggled in any war in all history but what they struggled with ideals welling in their hearts and with the conception in their minds of a better world tomorrow. Anybody who neglects those considerations fails in his duty. If this Congress would be truly great it must not only stand for its own powers and prerogatives but it must also be continually at work on constructive programs of its own for the winning of the war first and for the meeting of the very great problems of the peace second.

It does not seem to me now that we can carry through the work of this Congress as we ought to do it unless we do two things.

I am perfectly ready to join with anybody in criticism of the maladministration of parts of this Government program. I happen to be the Member, answering partially what was said a little while ago, who introduced the bill in the last session to provide for the deferment from the draft of all agricultural workers who had even one dependent. I think I have been as active as everyone else in insisting that in the administration of the rationing program, authority and discretion should be placed in the hands of the local boards, instead of depending upon decisions from Washington or Detroit, as to how much gasoline a farmer or a truck operator should have, for example. I am not afraid to speak my piece and say what I think, and I am going to say exactly what I think wherever the chips may fall, and I appeal to anybody on either side of the aisle to do likewise. But the second thing that I recognize as my responsibility is to bring forth a constructive proposal every time I make a criticism, and to do my part in explaining to the people the reason for certain measures and programs, if, indeed, they are really necessary to the winning of the war.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey, because I believe I know what he is going to say, and after that I request not to be interrupted.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. The gentleman says that he always likes to let the chips fall where they might.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Yes.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Even though they may fall upside down, although that is beside the point. That gave me an excuse to refer to a speech that the gentleman made the other day, and I think it is an opportune time to refer to it now. The gentleman made the statement that the final report of the Dies commitee was presented to the members of the Dies committee on a take-it-or-leave-it basis.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. That is correct, substantially. There was no opportunity for discussion of it.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. But the gentleman from California knows that we had the same length of time to amend or correct that report that we have had on any report.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Oh, no.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey rose.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Oh, the gentleman has asked his question and I have only 15 minutes.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. I am coming to the question now. I think that the gentleman was very unfair to the chairman of the Dies committee when he made that statement, because every other member of the committee that I have spoken to knows that we had plenty of time to amend that report, and that it was not given to us on a take-it-or-leave-it basis. Furthermore, the gentleman also knows that on the Axis report, which was fully made up, and to which the gentleman from California wrote the introduction, the only reason that report was not submitted to the House was because the majority members of the Dies committee could not agree to the introduction which the gentleman from California wrote.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I refuse to yield further. I will answer that by saying that in the first place my complaint about that annual report was that in previous annual reports, the committee has met and considered the reports, and had an opportunity to express our views on the matter. This time there was no such opportunity. I have signed every previous annual report since I have been a member of the committee. In every case the committee met together for their consideration.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. It was not——

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Oh, I refuse to yield further. The only opportunity a member of the committee had was to say "Yes" or "No" to the report as submitted, and there was no chance to meet and discuss the matter. I am not blaming anybody. I hope I have not been unfair to anybody. I have only stated a fact.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey rose.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Oh, I refuse to yield further.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. The gentleman is afraid to yield.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I am not afraid to yield. With regard to the other report I worked hard upon it. The fact is the report has not been issued. I did my work at the request of the chairman of the committee. It is probably true that some members did not agree with some of the things in that report. I should like to have had a meeting on that report, so that it might have been possible to discuss and issue it.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Will the gentleman yield to me? Let me ask one question.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. All right.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Does not the gentleman also agree that the introduction that the gentleman wrote for the Axis report was nothing more than a whitewash of the New Deal?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I do not so agree by any manner of means, nor did it have anything whatsoever to do with that question. Furthermore, I am altogether ready as the gentleman must know to discuss changes in that report which other members may believe should be made in it.

Now I want to proceed with my speech.

I offer no excuses when I say that in so colossal an undertaking as the defeat of the Axis Powers will be, inevitably mistakes will be made. Mistakes have been made. Inevitably there will be privations and difficulties through which the people will have to pass. Any man who will do only a part of his job, namely, point out the difficulties, point out the failures, point out the maladjustments, without at the same time taking responsibility for suggesting where those things can be corrected, and being constructive in the approach that he takes toward those problems, it seems to me is not doing all that he should. In connection with the keynote that was sounded at the opening of this session of Congress, I want to place myself squarely on record in support of things that have been said by the Speaker of the House and others about the importance of the Congress having the right to initiate legislation and assuming its full and proper place in the scheme of American government. I would go further than that. I would suggest, as a case in point, that I believe that most Members of Congress have been conscious of the fact for a long time that in addition to the taxes which we have to levy, a compulsory savings program will be necessary in this country before we have finished with the war. I wish most earnestly that regardless of recommendations that may have come from elsewhere, the Congress might have legislated on that matter and put into effect such a program. I give that only as an illustration.

Mr. GIFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I am very anxious to proceed.

Mr. GIFFORD. The gentleman said he was going to follow me. I expected him to tear my speech to pieces. Are you going to ignore me entirely?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Surely I do not intend to ignore the gentleman. If he will be patient for a moment, perhaps what I will have to say will answer some of the things he has in mind.

Mr. GIFFORD. I wish you would refute them. If I did not speak out and let the chips fall where they may, I will ask for forgiveness.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I will say to the gentleman from Massachusetts I have a great deal of respect for the gentleman from Massachusetts. And no one certainly would ever accuse him of not speaking out or that he was not ready to let the chips fall where they might.

Mr. GIFFORD. I am glad of that.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. My appeal was a general appeal in which I hoped that Members on the Democratic side might be free to criticize the things which the administration did wrong, and at the same time that the gentlemen on the Republican side might take as constructive an attitude toward the matter as we do on this side. We have very real problems here, the greatest America has ever faced—the task of girding a free democratic nation to fight a total war. In connection with the war itself, I think it is important for the Congress to take a more active and continuous hand in straightening out matters that are wrong. I have introduced a resolution that provides that standing committees of the House should be constituted as agents of the House to conduct a continuing review of special agencies set up as a result of the action of those committees, to see whether in the committees' judgment their work is being carried on in accordance with the intent of Congress and to recommend such further legislation as in their judgment may be necessary.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I would like to proceed for a moment, if I may. I believe with all my heart and soul that we face in the future the absolute necessity of the restoration of powers that have been granted specially to the Executive in connection with this war. I know that as long as the war lasts it is necessary for Congress to lodge in the Executive extraordinary powers. I know there is no escape from that. The proposal which I have made in this resolution is an attempt to enable Congress to discharge both its duties, not only the duty of granting extraordinary power but also the duty of seeing to it continuously that that power is exercised, not arbitrarily, but in accordance with the intent of Congress and in accordance with the needs of the American people, who are as earnestly and deeply desirous of carrying forward this war as they have ever been of anything in all history.

A little while ago I said that the one great outstanding fact that confronts us is the fact that men, women, and children of this world are engaged in this great war. Those people have hopes regarding the future. One of those hopes is that freedom and liberty shall live. Inevitably, if freedom and liberty are to live, the vigor of the legislative branch of this great Nation has to be preserved and builded.

I have made a couple of constructive suggestions here as to how that can be done. Inevitably also, however, the people of the world have the right—indeed, they have the need—to look forward after the winning of the war to the preservation of a just and lasting peace; yes, and to a better world in which there will be greater security for everyone of them than there has ever been before.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield.

Mr. DITTER. I sensed in the opening part of the gentleman's statement that which might be characterized as an admonition. I am wondering whether the gentleman is presently, assuming the role of a pedagogue. If there was the admonition in pedagogic suggestion, the opening statement, I want to remind the gentleman that if they were intended for the benefit primarily of the new Members, the largest part of the new Members are on the Republican side and they probably will have their own pedagogues available who will admonish them if need be.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that if what I had to say seemed to be pedagogical, I did not intend it so. I will say also that not one word was directed at any new Member of this House. As I sit here in these opening days, however, I do think about the new Members of the House, and one of the reasons I am making this speech now is because of the fact I think it tremendously important that the new Members of the House should hear the same type of constructive program as we heard from the Speaker and from the minority leader on the opening day of the session. I should like to see things carried on continuously on the plane they set. I should like to see that high idealism carried on throughout the session.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from California may have 5 additional minutes. He has yielded beyond the bounds of courtesy, and I would like to hear a connected presentation of his constructive statement.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what does the gentleman mean by saying that he yielded beyond the bounds of courtesy?

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, I understand the gentleman has a constructive speech. He has not been able to reach it yet. I should like to hear that speech.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Arizona that the gentleman's time has already been extended 5 minutes. The gentleman from California may proceed.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. There is one thing I hope for with all the earnestness in my heart and that is that this Congress on both sides of the aisle will recognize the intimate connection between a lasting peace on the one hand and the establishment of the right to work upon the other. One thing is certain. There must be and there will be good places in the economic life of this Nation for every man who returns from the winning of this war.

I put in the RECORD yesterday a column by Mr. Walter Lippmann which I hope everybody will read. In that column Mr. Lippmann makes the point that the one thing the people—above all, men in the fighting forces—will be thinking of when the war is finally won will be opportunity to take up again their own pursuits of business, to work at a real job, not an emergency work program, but a real job. This is a fundamental problem that has got to be solved in some manner which will not imply or include an extension of the powers of Government bureaus or agencies over the everyday lives of the people. There are other ways in which that can be done, and it can be done if we found our policy on one fundamental principle and that is this: That whenever the supply of needed goods exceeds the demand we will always increase that demand on the part of the people and never reduce the supply. So long as the war lasts there is one cardinal principle to be followed by our Nation and that cardinal principle is the principle that we will do all those things which will increase production for war and nothing that will reduce it; and when peace shall have at last been won again the cardinal principle that we have got to follow is the principle of full employment of all our resources and above all full employment of all our people on a basis of justice and equality to agriculture and small business as well as to other groups, and within the framework of a free economy. The achievement of these things is not easy, I know, but it is toward their achievement that I would beg us to work, and I would beg us to recognize this fact, too: That we must guard not only the prerogatives of the Congress but the name of the Congress as it goes before the people of this Nation. We must make clear to them that it is to their Congress as well as to their officials that they can look for constructive leadership.

There exists the danger that progress for the common men will become strangely associated in the minds of many people with increased Executive power and the creation of new agencies of government. That danger the Congress can remove if it is both wise and courageous. But only by advancing a program which will assure continuously a full flow of consumer buying power and the assurance at all times that that buying power will never fall below the point where it constitutes a full market for the products of agriculture and industry. That goal can, in my judgment, be reached by a wise and far-sighted monetary and fiscal policy by a program of national insurance against poverty in old age and similar contingencies by the removal of monopoly controls and bottlenecks. It can be accomplished without the imposition of governmental direction of the economic life of the people. But that hope that a better day after the suffering of this war be given to the people, that is my great concern, and the agency of government that offers that hope will be the one which will command the future. It is this thought, Mr. Speaker, that, above all, I want to leave with the House today.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield.

Mr. KEEFE. Do I understand from the gentleman's last statement that he is abandoning the advocacy of a planned economy based upon economic scarcity and is now advocating that in the postwar period there must be an economy based upon a program of increased production?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. If the gentleman will examine my statements in the House or elsewhere over a period of years he will find I have emphasized over and over again that very principle.

Mr. KEEFE. In other words, the gentleman may have overemphasized that principle, but from some of the votes he has cast on bills which brought about this very managed economy of scarcity it would not seem so.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. The gentleman is mistaken. Such influence as I have had has been exerted through the years against scarcity, artificial or otherwise. I have striven as hard as I knew how for a program that might end needless poverty and want in the future for our people.

Mr. KEEFE. And I am wondering if the gentleman supported these various control programs. If he did vote for them he is not now advocating them, is he?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. No; quite the contrary.

Mr. KEEFE. I understand that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] is recognized for 35 minutes.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next, at the conclusion of the legislative business in order for the day and after other special orders, I may be permitted to proceed for 35 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN]?

There was no objection.

REPORT OF SELECT COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE AIR ACCIDENTS

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Select Committee of the House of Representatives to Investigate Air Accidents for the Seventy-seventh Congress, I ask unanimous consent to file two reports and that they may be printed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. HINSHAW]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next, after disposition of all business on the Speaker's desk and at the conclusion of any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL]?

There was no objection.

SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, there are two or three issues I wish to cover in my brief remarks today. Certain documents have been executed and certain statements have been made and all within the recent past. I shall refer to them in this order:

On January 6, 1941, the "four freedoms" speech of the President, and then the calling for the enactment into law of the lend-lease and the facilitating or implementing of that law by an original $7,000,000,000 appropriation, which has since been expanded up to about $60,000,000,000.

The execution of the declaration of nations by some 28 countries.

The execution of the British master agreement.

The execution and announcement of the Atlantic Charter.

Those have since been followed by the release of the so-called White Paper by the State Department.

It seems to me that during the coming 2 years this Congress and our people will have to deal with the principles involved in those five basic steps. There is a gentleman up in Minnesota, Governor of that State, Mr. Stassen, who spoke in Minneapolis on the evening of the 7th of this month, and he expounded his views with reference to a post-war international program. I think his views are highly significant because of the high position he holds in national politics. At the moment I am in no position to go along with Mr. Stassen as he outlined his program. Perhaps someone can educate me into following what he had to say.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Did the gentleman notice this morning's paper, first page, and the picture of the Governor of Minnesota together with his statement about the after-war situation?

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is what I am referring to.

Mr. HOFFMAN. And a parliament of all the nations of the world?

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is what I am referring to.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I wish the gentleman would go into that a little further and tell us where we are going to come out.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Those are the things we will have to deal with during the coming 2 years. While I was home during the 2 weeks' vacation period I made it a point to discuss at every opportunity these five propositions I have just referred to. I find they are just as hot issues as is butter, bread, and milk, and other foodstuffs. These subjects will increase in interest in the months to come.

Our people are going to have something to say about these arrangements that are to be made in the post-war period, make no mistake about that. They involve politics, they involve economics, and there is no way we can escape the issue.

Mr. DEWEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DEWEY. I heard the gentleman's reference to a parliament. It might behoove some of the Members to read Mr. Streit's Union Now With Great Britain. There is nothing new in Mr. Stassen's suggestion.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is correct.

Mr. DEWEY. It is all contained in that book.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I think it is all in there.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. My friend from Michigan is not a knock-down artist, I know that, and I respect him when he disagrees with me. When he disagrees with Governor Stassen I know it is an honest disagreement. Without regard to party affiliations, I am sure the gentleman from Michigan will agree that Governor Stassen has made a contribution that men and women who want to try to take a step forward may well give consideration to, and in disagreement impersonally discuss it with profound respect to the man who is trying to make a great contribution.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I think it is tremendously important that Governor Stassen made that statement at the present time. I am glad he did make it. Remember what I said a moment ago—at this time I am not in agreement. I am subject to being educated, however, and the older Members of the House know my approach to many of these matters. I do not know what the people of this country are going to demand out of all this turmoil, and I make this statement today so that the people of my district will have an idea as to my general approach to the question. They may proceed to educate me, if they want to do so. I want these discussions on the coming post-war period to take place.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD]?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, there are two other things I would like to touch on at this time. I heard the statement of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] today, and I shall not repeat it. I also heard one or two remarks of the gentleman from California. I wish to say that if we are to avoid inflation in this country we must meet our deficit, after paying taxes, through the citizens and their corporations—not including commercial banks—buying the bonds to make up the difference, if I make myself clear.

I am informed by the Treasury Department that during the past month the Treasury placed in the banks alone over $4,000,000,000 of that $11,000,000,000 issue. To me this $4,000,000,000 is the highest type of inflationary fuel that has been added to the fire. The December financing, plus the tax payments that are to be made within the next 60 days, along with the sale of savings bonds and purchase of tax-anticipation certificates, may run the Treasury to about the 1st of March next. I notice that during the first 6 days of January we have disbursed for war activities alone over $1,130,000,000, and for the month of December over $5,824,000,000. Members of the House, that is money on a large scale. Now, let me repeat in order to emphasize my thought: If we are to avoid inflation, the deficit remaining after such increases in taxation as Congress sees fit to provide must be financed out of the savings of individuals and the savings and uninvested accumulations of corporations. The exact form which these savings take is unimportant as long as they result in a reduction of consumer expenditure.

So we face a vast increase in taxation, as the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] has indicated, and I am of the opinion that this Congress shall be forced to enact legislation calling for the purchase of Government securities to an extent far beyond the present imagination of our people. The rope is now beginning to tighten about our economic necks and from here on the flow will be outward if inflation of the most disastrous type is to be avoided.

Why should we expect the O. P. A. to stabilize living costs as referred to in the President's message yesterday? I do not expect Mr. Brown, if he is made Administrator, to do any better job there than has Mr. Henderson, because I do not expect the men in the O. P. A. to do the impossible. But I think when you ask them to maintain stabilization of the cost of living when we, the people, operate our fiscal policy so as to put three or four billion dollars per month into the commercial banks in the form of inflationary money, it just does not make sense. I suggest that you call up the Treasury and ask them what in their opinion is necessary for us to do if we are to avoid inflation, and see if they do not give you exactly the formula I have just given you.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The gentleman was speaking about Mr. Stassen. I, too, am glad that he made that statement. If he wants to take his position alongside Mr. Willkie, who became a stalking horse for the Democratic Party or the New Dealers, and aid in trying to put over another Democrat as the Republican nominee, that is all right. However, the gentleman spoke about being back home. Did he find anyone in his district, anyone at all, who wants to surrender our independence and enter an international combination?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Not one man or woman.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. It seems rather strange that a Democrat should rise to the defense of a Republican, but I am doing this for the man whom I have had the pleasure of meeting, the man himself, whom I respect. Does the gentleman from Michigan, who has the floor, entertain the opinion that Governor Stassen would be a stalking horse for anybody?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I have never met the gentleman. I do not believe he would. I certainly would not charge him with that.

THE FARM MANPOWER SITUATION

Mr. Speaker, a lot has been said today about manpower on the farms. We are in the middle of a very bad situation. The act of November 13, 1942, amending the Selective Service Act provides that every registrant found by a selective-service local board, subject to appeal in accordance with section 10 (a) (2), to be necessary to and regularly engaged in an agricultural occupation or endeavor essential to the war effort, shall be deferred from training and service in the land and naval forces so long as he remains so engaged and until such time as a satisfactory replacement can be obtained. Theoretically, may I say that language was intended to arrest the rapid induction into the military and naval forces of the young trained agriculturists of this country. But the young boys and girls of the towns and cities and the men and women over 38 years of age of the towns and cities are not offering themselves for sacrifice on the altars of the farms of this country. These town and city people prefer to remain inside the towns and cities where wages are high, hours are short, and comforts are available. But the farm boys, patriotic as anyone, preferring to not be stigmatized as slackers, ask for no deferment. The draft boards under pressure to meet their quotas proceed to draft the farm boys. Farm labor becomes scarcer from day to day; the demand for foodstuffs increases, and we move straight toward a "food Dunkerque." This is a vital question that should be settled by this Congress before the next 45 days roll around and before the time for spring planting has arrived. Unless we do settle this issue, the people of this country and other countries will go hungry on many an occasion. It is as important to fly E pennants over the homes of farmers and decorate farm workers as it is to follow such a course with respect to industrial plants and workers.

FARM MACHINERY

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me we are rapidly gaining a lot of national unity now, when we have prominent Democratic Members lauding prominent Republicans, and I think that augurs well for the future. I hope the list can be made more inclusive.

However, I did not take this time today to enter into that type of colloquy but to report back to the House on the developments which have taken place during the interim between the adjournment of the last Congress and the resumption of our activities, from the standpoint of the farm machinery situation in America.

On the last day the Seventy-seventh Congress was in session, December 16, I addressed the House on the subject of L–170, which was the limitation order of the War Production Board reducing the production of new farm machinery to 20 percent of the quotas available in 1940 and also establishing new quotas for farm machinery repairs. I pointed out at that time as best I could the positive inability of the farmers of America to meet the food demands of the United Nations and of this country unless they were to be given the machinery essential to farm operations.

At that time I read at some length from a document prepared by the Department of Agriculture and by the Farm Machinery and Equipment Branch of the War Production Board, which they submitted to the Division of Civilian Supply, insisting that limitation order L–170 was too drastic and that it would jeopardize our entire food-for-victory program.

I pointed out how these governmental departments and agencies closely related to the agricultural problem were in direct conflict with the Division of Civilian Supply, which had as its Director a lawyer from New York City who is not familiar with the problems confronting the farmer.

Two days after that I wrote a letter to Mr. Donald Nelson, the Chairman of the War Production Board, calling attention to my remarks on the floor and offering additional reasons why, in my opinion, it was imperative that action be taken at once to relax Limitation Order 170 and to make available new farm machinery and additional repair parts.

I am happy to report back to the House now that under date of December 28 I received a letter in reply over the personal signature of Mr. Nelson, acknowledging receipt of my communication of the 18th and acknowledging recognition of the position I had presented on the floor of the House. I will quote one or two sentences of Mr. Nelson's letter, because it seems to me it gives those of us representing agricultural States and gives the American people a new hope, because food is tremendously important in the conduct of this war. I quote now from Mr. Nelson's letter in response to the one I have mentioned:

> You will be glad to know further that the production of farm machinery in the quantities established by our Order L–170 has been accelerated through the efforts of our Division, which has been able to find more material for the manufacturers than at first appeared available. * * * The machinery-equipment manufacturing program originally expected to be complete by October 31, 1943, is now headed for completion June 30. * * * This is really equivalent to increasing the amount of machinery by at least one-third.

Mr. Speaker, I have not had an opportunity to check Mr. Nelson's arithmetic on this but I sincerely hope the promised one-third increase in new farm machinery is made available without delay as it will mean much to the food-for-victory program which American farmers are now promoting so vigorously.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert at this point the complete text of my letter to Mr. Nelson and his reply, and of a letter I wrote in reply to that one, stressing the importance of the farm-machinery repair situation and urging additional action along these lines.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

The letters follow:

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., December 18, 1942.

Mr. DONALD M. NELSON,
Chairman, War Production Board,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. NELSON: As you recall, I have conferred with you in the past primarily on matters pertaining to the impact of war activities upon our small businessmen in the Middle West and you have shown a very considerate attitude toward the problems I have presented. This letter is to call to your attention a very serious situation which has arisen in the farming regions of America and to request you to take action which will provide a remedy for conditions which seem likely to imperil the Nation's entire food-for-victory program. I have discussed this situation with many of the men under you. I now call it to your personal attention because I believe that only by securing your personal attention to the problems involved can the necessary correctives be secured.

On the closing day of the present Congress I discussed America's growing food problems on the floor of the House, and my remarks will be found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of December 16, starting on page 9977. You may or may not have had them called to your attention or have seen press statements reporting them. To be sure that this problem comes to your personal attention and to make the direct request that you take action to relieve the serious shortage of farm machinery which now threatens to jeopardize America's farming operations, I am writing you this letter and making a brief summary of some of the pertinent factors involved. I am positive that you appreciate the vital part that food supplies play in the winning of this war and the highly important role they will play as "American aces in the hole" when the opportunity comes to bring peace to the world. There may well come a time when ample reserves of food will speak more effectively than bullets in convincing some of our adversaries that unconditional surrender followed by nourishing food for starving families is preferable to continued resistance followed by eventual defeat, additional casualties, sustained hunger, and pestilence. Thus food may come to play a part in this war fully as important as munitions and implements of war. America must not—dare not—run the risk that unwise or unduly stringent curtailment of the farm machinery needed to produce this food prevents our having our larder full if such a time should come.

It happens that there has come into my hands a copy of the official memorandum submitted on June 23, 1942, by your own officials in the Farm Machinery and Equipment Industry Branch of the War Production Board working in conjunction with the Department of Agriculture. This memorandum proposes what these experts in the problem of food production consider to be a bare and irreducible minimum amount of new farm machinery which our farmers must have in 1943 if they are to meet the food quotas established for them. These recommendations were prepared after careful surveys of all the factors involved—existing inventories of new machinery, existing machinery now in use on the farms, replacement needs, food quotas established by the Government, availability of manual labor, and the possibility of substituting horse-drawn machines for present power machinery. This study was made by the men best qualified in our Government to make it and with a full realization of the necessity of utilizing our supply of raw material in such a manner that it can make the greatest possible contribution to the war effort.

Unfortunately—and it seems to me very unwisely—the Division of Civilian Supply of War Production Board, however, over-ruled the findings of these experts in farm production. Instead of alloting the irreducible minimum of 50 percent of 1940 farm machinery production for 1943 as the agricultural experts recommended, the Division of Civilian Supply reduced this quota down to 20 percent of the 1940 levels. The official memorandum to which I have previously referred bluntly states that this 20 percent will not do the job. Since producing the food needed to win this war and to promote an earlier victorious peace is a vital necessity, the job must be done.

I do not know where the fundamental difficulty arises. It may be from the fact that farm machinery is apparently classified as a "civilian supply" whereas it is actually an "implement of war" since men must eat to shoot and food equals ammunition in importance when it comes to long-time planning in wartime. If this is the primary difficulty, I respectfully recommend that farm machinery be given a military rating and a corresponding priority so that adequate supplies of new farm machinery can be made available.

Perhaps the difficulty has its genesis in other sources. During my remarks on the floor of the House on Wednesday, Congressman CARLSON, of the great farming State of Kansas, stated that export quotas of farm machinery were being increased while domestic allotments were being decreased. It is possible that further investigation will throw some doubt on the wisdom of such a policy as it is certainly more important to increase the supplies of food which we can control and have easy access to than to curtail those supplies of food while placing over much reliance on foreign sources of food which we cannot control and which comprise a serious transportation hazard. It would be gratifying if we could increase both our exports and domestic quotas of farm machinery; however, if both objectives are impossible, I believe the policy of suppressing our own production while speculating on foreign assistance is open to serious question. I doubt that it is fundamentally any more sound than would be reducing our own production of bombers in order to ship plane-building machinery to other countries with the hope they would make our bombers for us.

Whatever the origin of the problem facing us in the matter of a very possible and probable food shortage, we must find an answer to it or provide some authority higher than the Department of Agriculture to assure American citizens that the Department's findings are wrong and that the Division of Civilian Supply is solely right.

My own observations in actual contact with the farmers who live on the land and who must produce our food leads me to believe most sincerely that the experts who have advised the War Production Board that the 20-percent limitation is too severe and will jeopardize our very war effort by imperiling our food supply have presented a true and valid report. I have seen old, used farm machinery selling at auction sales at prices far higher than corresponding new machinery would bring if it were available at normal or even ceiling prices. That means, Mr. Nelson, nothing else than that farmers are desperate in their need for farm machinery. I have seen good, responsible, experienced farmers leaving their farms and productive land lying idle because of the dual difficulty of securing either adequate farm help or necessary farm machinery. The problem of farm labor is beyond your jurisdiction but the problem of farm machinery will be solved by you and your advisers or it will plague us all and portend possible disaster for our cause. Therefore, I plead with you to give this matter your immediate personal attention and to relax the restrictions on farm machinery sufficiently to assure the fighting forces of America of a full mess kit and our workers of a full dinner pail.

I realize that you are a very busy man administering a complex organization which might well demand your full attention if you could divide yourself into quintuplets. I know that you cannot give personal attention to all the decisions and regulations of the officials working with you. However, I know, too, you have a well-earned reputation for not hesitating to act when emergency requires it. I respectfully submit, Mr. Nelson, that this is such a time and that the foregoing briefly summarizes such a case. America must not commit the unforgivable travesty on good management of failing to utilize the vast productive sources of its rich agricultural expanses at a time in our national history when ample reserves of food may well mean more to us than at any previous time. Therefore, I respectfully urge that you take early and effective action to correct the present situation and to make the necessary farm machinery available to our American farmers in order that both those who fight abroad and those who serve at home may be assured of adequate and proper food.

I assure you of my continued cooperation toward this objective and I feel confident that this call for action will not fall on barren ground.

With kindest personal regards and a keen appreciation of the great service you are rendering America in your monumental responsibilities, I am,

Cordially yours,

KARL E. MUNDT,

DECEMBER 28, 1942.

Hon. KARL E. MUNDT,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: Your letter of December 18 has been read with care and deep interest. The views which you express are generally in agreement with my own.

You will be interested to know that at my direction our Farm Machinery Equipment Division is following the matter of adequate supply of such items in closest cooperation with the Department of Agriculture and that I am in contact with Mr. Wickard, Food Administrator, on matters pertinent to this subject quite frequently, often several times a day. You will be glad to know further that the production of farm machinery in the quantities established by our Order L–170 has been accelerated through the efforts of our Division, which has been able to find more material for the manufacturers than at first appeared available. What this means is that the machinery-equipment manufacturing program originally expected to be complete by October 31, 1943, is now headed for completion June 30. Besides matching farming season better, this is really equivalent to increasing the amount of machinery by at least one-third, which will give a result even better than that originally requested by the Department. One of our joint problems with the Department has been the distribution of these products and repair parts, but that is having the attention of the two groups and is well on the way to solution. Furthermore, the over-all problem is being treated comprehensively and arrangements are now under study to provide that there shall be no interruption of the production of this class of equipment, but, rather, that the program for 1944 shall be started immediately on the completion of that for 1943.

I believe you can feel safely assured yourself and can communicate to your constituents that the food sector of our national effort is recognized to be equally important with the military sector, is being subjected to only such limitations as our supplies of materials imposed on all parts of the program, and that the plans for producing repair parts and food-producing equipment will be prepared and executed with the highest degree of skill which can be brought to bear upon them.

Thanking you for your interest and your helpful observations, I am,

Sincerely yours,

DONALD M. NELSON,
Chairman.

JANUARY 8, 1943.

DONALD M. NELSON,
Chairman, War Production Board,

DEAR MR. NELSON: Thank you sincerely for your good letter of December 28, written in response to my communication of December 16. I sincerely appreciate the careful and personal attention which you devoted to my correspondence and to the remarks which I made on the floor of the House on December 16.

Your assurance, under date of December 28, that you were taking steps to accelerate the production of farm machinery so that it would be "equivalent to increasing the amount of machinery by at least one-third" is indeed gratifying. Your office has frequently given very helpful and considerate cooperation in matters which I have brought to your personal attention, and I am sure that an increase of 33⅓ percent in the amount of machinery available to America's farmers for this season's farming activities is a wise and prudent move. Certainly none of us want to leave any stones unturned in making positive the fact that those fighting with us in the United Nations, our own armed forces, and the people of America have an adequate food supply to maintain a healthful and strength-producing diet. Manpower and machinery are basic considerations if farmers are to be able to keep our breadbasket full.

It is also gratifying to learn from your letter of December 28 that the highly important problem of providing for the distribution of both new farm machinery and repair parts is receiving your special study I would like to emphasize at this time the direct relationship between the dealers in farm equipment and the availability and adequacy of repair parts. By far the greater percentage of America's crops will be handled by used machinery at any given period of our history; consequently, the job of keeping these machines properly repaired is both a colossal and an inoperative one.

This has been recognized by the officials with whom the War Production Board has consulted on the matter of farm production. The Department of Agriculture experts, and the experts of the farm machinery and equipment industry branch of the War Production Board itself have emphasized the importance of maintaining an adequate dealer organization for keeping them supplied with repair parts. The Selective Service Administration has now arranged to provide deferments for essential repairmen in the farm-machinery field; however, for this deferment to be effective it is essential that dealer organizations be maintained.

I trust that you will keep this problem of maintaining farm-equipment dealers in business by giving them an adequate supply of repair parts before you until it is solved. It is absolutely impossible for farmers in many parts of the argicultural section of the country to keep their farm machinery in repair unless the retail-dealer outlets for farm machinery and farm machinery repair parts are kept open. I am sure that the manufacturers of farm machinery throughout the country would be able to suggest methods of achieving this in the event that your own organization runs into obstacles which it considers impossible to solve.

Please be assured of my continued cooperation in every way to help develop a program for handling farm machinery and repairs which will prevent America's food-for-victory program from being jeopardized at the very source of its supply. With continued best wishes and kindest personal regards, I am,

Cordially yours,

KARL E. MUNDT,

Mr. MUNDT. I quote now just briefly from the same document from which I quoted on the 16th day of December, the day the old Congress adjourned, this interdepartmental communication prepared by authorities of the Department of Agriculture and by those Members of the War Production Board who are most directly connected with agriculture and who understand best the problems of the farmer. I read from this interoffice communication:

From the foregoing arguments it will be seen why the Farm Machinery and Equipment Branch cannot concur in the small amounts of farm machinery and equipment recommended by the Division of Civilian Supply for production in 1943.

In my remarks on the 16th of December I pointed out the paucity of information from the standpoint of the farmer and the food needs of the country which are reposed in the Division of Civilian Supply, and pointed out how it is in the hands of men from the big cities who do not understand the problems of food production. So I am very happy that this letter I have read indicates, according to Mr. Nelson's own statement, that we are to get one-third more farm machinery available on the farms than was contemplated originally. That will help correct one big error of the Division of Civilian Supply in insisting upon its original order, L–170.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MUNDT. Yes.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. As I understand it the man in charge of the civilian supplies is a man named Weiner.

Mr. MUNDT. Yes; Joseph Weiner, of New York City.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. He is from Brooklyn, is he not?

Mr. MUNDT. From New York City proper, I believe, but either city is a long way from the farming sections of America.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I think one of the big troubles that we are experiencing in agriculture and the failure to solve the farm machinery and manpower problem is due to the fact that there are a great many from the larger cities who formulate these policies, who do not understand anything about farm production.

Mr. MUNDT. Yes, I agree.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. It occurs to me, and I have had repeated conferences with those gentlemen in both the Department of Agriculture and the W. P. B., that they should put men in those positions who appreciate that it takes manpower and machinery to produce food, and that if they do not supply that, there will come a chaotic condition in this country, and famine or starvation for the people.

Mr. MUNDT. The gentleman has made a pertinent point and he is representing a great farming district. He knows that mine is also one of the great farming districts. We have great respect for the ability of farmers, but neither he nor I would like to see a situation where farmers were taken from the farms in South Dakota and Minnesota and brought here to Washington and put in charge of war plants to manufacture bombers or tanks. It is equally wrong when they bring people from Brooklyn or New York City and put them in charge of a food-production program. They are not familiar with the problems involved. They cannot develop programs which are based on the realistic situations confronting our farmers.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I think some of our farmers would do just as well, or probably better, if they were in charge of some of these other programs. At least they would use some horse sense in regard to the matter.

Mr. MUNDT. Yes; if they would put farmers in charge of food-production programs and farm-machinery quotas, the results would be better.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MUNDT. Yes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I compliment the gentleman for bringing to us the additional information in respect to farm machinery. Did not our recent amendment to the Selective Service Act provide that the farm boys were not to be inducted into the service until substitutes were available to take their place, or words to that effect?

Mr. MUNDT. Yes; I think that is correct.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Men and women over 38 years of age who live in the towns and cities are not offering themselves to the farm, are they, and the young men and young women who live in the towns and cities who have not gone into the military service are not yet offering themselves to the farms?

Mr. MUNDT. Obviously not, because they can earn very much more money in the city.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Then where are the substitutes to come from in order to permit men to be deferred, so that we may maintain our food production? That is a practical problem that we face at this moment on this question of farm manpower. It seems to me that this country faces a food Dunkerque before we will meet the manpower problem with reference to food production, and I think this Congress can well afford within the next 45 days, before the planting season occurs, to recast the Selective Service Act and get down to brass tacks and leave the boys on the farm who are there now and who are being classified and reclassified as 1–A in almost every draft area in the United States, because the draft board says that they have to make such a report.

Mr. MUNDT. It should be as clear as night follows day that if you give the farmer neither manpower nor machinery he will be unable to produce the food that is needed in this country.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. The notion of the administration in this proposal seems to be that they are going to take experienced men off the farms and replace them with Mexicans and old men and old women from the villages and cities of the country.

Mr. MUNDT. Who are not offering themselves voluntarily.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is right; and in the face of involuntary servitude, how are you going to put them on the farm?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes more.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MUNDT. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Has the gentleman heard anything to the effect that in the process of rationing the farm machinery, discrimination is being practiced against farmers who have not signed up with the triple A?

Mr. MUNDT. No such complaint has been brought to my attention.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. The gentleman would certainly be opposed to any such discrimination?

Mr. MUNDT. I certainly would be opposed to any practice of discrimination as between farmers who are trying to fill the bread basket of America.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MUNDT. I yield.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Has the gentleman given any consideration to the idea of moving about a million Federal employees out on the farms to aid in the production of food?

Mr. MUNDT. I think there are perhaps nearly a million Federal employees that could well be moved out of Federal employment and put somewhere where they might produce, but I doubt very much their efficacy on the average American farm.

Now, continuing the matter of farm repairs, which comes closely to the question of farm machinery, and farm labor and quoting further from this interoffice communication, I read this:

Considering the machines and equipment that must be replaced yearly due to fire losses or completely wearing out, the greatly increased shortage of labor, the continual decrease in horse and mule population, the increased acreage in normal crops, and the greatly increased acreages in new crops, we believe that such a small amount of equipment will not suffice—

Remember, this word "we" refers to the authorities in the Government agencies who are directly charged with the administration of farm problems and who know farming conditions best—we believe that such a small amount of equipment will not suffice to keep the farmer's productive ability anywhere near a normal level; yet a food production level more than 10 percent above 1941 is required.

I submit to you it is a serious problem confronting every Member of this Congress when officials of the Government, charged with the food production of this country, state in a Government publication that they believe we cannot even keep the food production normal under these conditions this year, and you know and I know that the Administration is asking for a 10-percent increase in food production.

I quote further:

Furthermore, aside from the difficulties of actual production, we cannot overlook the key role played by the dealer. During the past several years, when ample stocks of new machinery and equipment could be bought to meet every requirement, it is reliably estimated that from 92½ to 95 percent of the crop production was accomplished by used machines and equipment. New equipment, though high in relative value, thus accounted for only 5 to 7½ percent of the total. This serves to emphasize the tremendous importance of maintaining a somewhat adequate dealer organization, both to control the proper distribution of repair parts and to provide the skilled labor service which has become so vitally necessary lately to the farmer owing to the increased amounts of power machinery. It is not unlikely that a program so low as to disrupt this dealer organization would be extremely detrimental to the farm production program.

The producing of repair parts by farm machinery and equipment manufacturers is quite complicated because they are continuing to service machines in the field that are from 30 to 40 years old. Repairs for such old machines, naturally, are not maintained in stock in nearly the proportions as for those of more recent manufacture. This means a large storage of patterns, tools, jigs, dies, gages, flasks, core boxes, drawings, etc. For one large implement plant the space required for such core boxes and flasks alone occupies a full city block piled 6 to 8 feet high. At this one plant over 200,000 different parts are made, and 1,500 men are required full time the year round on repair parts alone.

Such storage of equipment to produce parts for old machines must be maintained in a very orderly and fully cataloged manner to permit locating instantly any pattern, jig, etc., required. Proper maintenance of such equipment is a major task at any plant which has produced in large quantities over a period of years and the most economical and practical way of producing such parts is at the plants equipped to handle the work.

I wish to emphasize this situation, because the agricultural implement dealer renders a genuine service to the farmer who lives away from a large city. Unless dealers are located in these smaller communities there is no opportunity for farmers to get a repair part necessary to put his machine back in operation.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MUNDT. I yield.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. The gentleman is aware of the fact that if the farmer breaks a part of his machinery, no matter how small it is, he may have to drive as far as 100 miles to get a priority to buy a 50- or 75-cent article. He cannot get it any other way. Am I correct?

Mr. MUNDT. The farmer is not only confronted with a priority order, but unless some recognition is given to the situation of the dealer, he will be unable even to find a dealer within 100 miles, in order to get the part.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Not only that, but he may have to make several trips sometimes in order to get one part.

Mr. MUNDT. Yes. He has to squander and waste other critical materials such as gasoline and rubber in order to secure a part essential to his farm operations.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MUNDT. I yield.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. It is often necessary for this farmer to get a repairman from the local machinery man to come out and install the new parts?

Mr. MUNDT. I am glad the gentleman mentioned that point. It gives me an opportunity to say that the Selective Service Administration has done a commendable piece of work in that connection, because they have recently issued directives permitting local draft boards to defer mechanics who are skilled in repairing farm machinery. But the value of that concession will be entirely wiped off the boards unless some action is taken to keep the dealer in business, to enable him to have something to make those repairs with, so he can employ this repairman whom the Selective Service Administration is now willing to have deferred.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MUNDT. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. You say the selective-service officials have issued directives permitting the draft boards to defer these mechanics?

Mr. MUNDT. I think it is more than permissive. I think it is recommending that they be deferred.

Mr. CRAWFORD. All right. It is my contention that when a draft board is placed under a squeeze to make up the quota, they will make up the quota, irrespective of permissive directives. We have to stop the drafting of experienced farm workers if you are going to have your food supplies. Starve to death if you want to. Take your choice.

Mr. MUNDT. I would like to go further than that. It seems to me that this Congress should take steps to keep the Selective Service Administration in Washington from passing the buck, in making difficult decisions, to the local draft boards, who serve without pay, who live in the local communities, and who patriotically give their services to the Government, and consequently should be given specific instructions from the proper agency in Washington on which they can make their decisions. Too many of the so-called directives issued by the Selective Service Administration here in Washington should be called suggestives instead. They simply comprise suggestions for meeting difficult problems and these Washington instructions to local draft boards frequently create more confusion than they cure. It is my conviction that it is the responsibility of the Selective Service Administration here in Washington to make its policies clear-cut and definite enough so that local draft boards will know that they are expected to defer essential farm labor and that other regulations as well should be so constructed that local boards will find it easier to administer their tasks. It should be made clear that an essential farm worker doing his best to help produce the food needed for victory by working 10, 12, and 15 hours on a farm is in no sense a draft dodger but is fully as important a factor in our war program as the man in the mine or working on the production line.

However, Mr. Speaker, let us not lose sight of the main object of this discussion. We are at the moment engaged in urging that the War Production Board make available as much new farm machinery as is needed to do the job and as many farm-machinery repairs as are necessary to keep existing farm machinery in usable form. We are also urging that steps be taken to retail this material and these services through established farm-implement dealers so that these dealers can afford to keep repairmen in their employment and to maintain their establishments so as to provide farmers with the service necessary to the maintenance of their farm machinery. I appreciate the interest in this problem displayed here today and also the many Members who have conferred with me about my talk of December 16 and the steps thus far recommended for solving the farm-machinery situation. I sincerely hope that all of you who represent farm States will give this problem your serious and personal attention and that you will join me in further appeals to the War Production Board for the development of a program which will assure the Nation that its farmers will have the tools with which to work.

At no time, in no place, and with no other group could the words "give us the tools and we will do the job" be used more truthfully and effectively than they can in connection with the pleas of the American farmer to be supplied with the machinery needed to fill the breadbaskets of the United Nations. Bureaucrats will have only themselves to blame if food shortages develop and if people go hungry in America because of an unwise and unwarranted curtailment of farm-machinery units and repair parts at a time when we are actually exporting to other countries these same types of farm-machinery equipment.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include a resolution I am introducing in the House today.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Wednesday next, after the conclusion of other special orders, I be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, referring to the remarks of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MUNDT], I want to say that in the far Southwest we find, too, that the farmers are hampere in the production of food by some of the very difficulties which he has enumerated. I, too, would like to see that phase of our war effort helped by making possible the furnishing of more farm equipment and repairs for farm machinery, so that the farmers may produce the food which we need to win the war.

I did not ask for this time, however, to say that.

A few moments ago the gentleman from California was occupying the Well of the House and had reserved some 15 minutes. I felt that he was about to make a constructive suggestion which he did not have time to reach because of yielding two-thirds of his time. I anticipated that the gentleman from California would probably have something to say in his prepared remarks concerning one means by which Congress in the role of a national legislative policy-determining body might shape a program following the war.

Much is said these days as to whether we ought now to think about or plan post-war matters. I belong to that school which believes that first things ought to come first and second things second, rather than that second things should not come at all. It is not too early to do the right kind of planning now. I am reminded of a husband and wife who had some children. The wife said, "Now, John, we must give the children music lessons." The Scotch husband said, "No, wife; wait until they are 21 years of age and they can decide for themselves whether they want music lessons or not."

I should like to ask the gentleman from California—I see he is here—if it is not true that in the last Congress he had some rather definite plans? I am anxious to know whether he contemplates a similar measure in this Congress.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK. I yield.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I thank the gentleman very much because I had with me when I made my speech, and hoped to discuss, this resolution in addition to the other one I mentioned. It is my profound belief that with so many agencies now working on the matter of post-war problems, the Congress of the United States, to which body primarily belongs the task of determining the policy that America should pursue in meeting the problems of demobilization and reconversion of industry, and the insurance of a condition of economic health, should itself take the initiative in this regard. This resolution would provide for a commission of congressional members first with associate members representing the broad economic and population groups of the Nation, to be a national commission on post-war reconstruction. It is my earnest belief that the initiative with regard to these matters and the central focus of them should be in the Congress rather than elsewhere.

Mr. MURDOCK. Such a move is in keeping with the suggestion we have heard from our leaders, that this Congress must function as a Congress and not wait for legislation to be placed on the Speaker's table from the departments. I am in perfect agreement with the gentleman both as to the need for such action now and that the Congress should initiate it. I wish to ask the gentleman from California one more question: This, I take it, is not a new thought with him; has not the gentleman been working on this for several months?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I may say to the gentleman from Arizona that this bill was before the last Congress from the first day of the Seventy-seventh Congress. I have reintroduced it in somewhat changed language but in practically the same form as it was before. The main difference between this measure and the other is that in this measure the commission itself is entirely congressional and the other members are associate members of the commission. Outside of that it is the same measure I introduced before.

Mr. MURDOCK. I have not had an opportunity yet to study this plan of organization and purpose fully, but from such study as I have made of it, I am convinced that any plan for post-war reconstruction to be taken up ought to be studied and sketched by Congress, both Houses, and by Members on both sides of the aisle in this Chamber and in the other Chamber, as well as the usual process of enacting legislation. I think it is high time that we started some such study now that Congress may legislate wisely when the time comes for legislation.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 3 minutes p. m.) the House, pursuant to its previous order, adjourned until Monday, January 11, 1943, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE

MONDAY, JANUARY 11, 1943

The Chaplain, Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father God, with all the deep and dire needs of our inner lives unmet by material bread alone, we turn unfilled to Thee. As jaded pilgrims journeying across burning sands gratefully pause under protecting shade and at refreshing springs, so we would come to Thee who art as the shadow of a great rock in a weary land, and where alone are fountains of living waters which can quench the thirst of our yearning souls.

Here at this noontide altar of devotion which our fathers builded and on which they cut deep with their founding faith the devout confession "In God we trust," we humbly bow with the deathless assurance that turns tragedy to triumph: "The eternal God is our refuge and underneath are the everlasting arms." Facing the duties of demanding days, we would grow quiet enough for the still small voice to tell us what our besetting sins are and in what ways our selfish attitudes are hurting others, lest we bar our fellows from more abundant life and thus betray our own souls and fall short of our high calling. We would be the true servants of Thy will in this troubled time. For Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory. Amen.

ATTENDANCE OF SENATORS

SHERIDAN DOWNEY, a Senator from the State of California; JAMES M. MEAD, a Senator from the State of New York; CLAUDE PEPPER, a Senator from the State of Florida; and ROBERT F. WAGNER, a Senator from the State of New York, appeared in their seats today.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, January 7, 1943, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries.

ADMINISTRATION OF OATH TO SENATOR GLASS

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary of the Senate has a report to submit which he will read in person.

The SECRETARY (Edwin A. Halsey). Mr. President, having been authorized by the Senate, in accordance with the provisions of Senate Resolution 4, agreed to on January 7, 1943, to administer the oath to the Honorable CARTER GLASS, Senator-elect from the State of Virginia, I wish to report that I have performed that service, and now hand to the President of the Senate a signed copy of the oath, which is in addition to the oral affirmation made by the Senator as required by law.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The signed oath submitted by the Secretary of the Senate will be placed on file.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. HILL. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

(For Budget message of the President, see p. 98, House proceedings in the RECORD.)

REPORT ON EMERGENCY RELIEF APPROPRIATION ACTS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying report, referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington.

To the Congress of the United States:

As required by the provisions of the Emergency Relief Appropriations Act, fiscal year 1942, I present herewith a report of the operations under this act to the end of the fiscal year 1942.

This report contains summary and detailed statements of the Treasury Department reflecting expenditures made, obligations incurred, and the status of funds under the above-mentioned act. In addition thereto, the information is presented covering the Relief Acts of 1935, 1936, 1937, 1938, 1939, and for fiscal year 1941. These statements compiled as of June 30, 1942, constitute the eighth annual accounting to the Congress for relief and work-relief expenditures. Such reports have been submitted at the beginning of regular sessions of Congress as provided for in the above-cited Emergency Relief Appropriation Acts.

Reports of operations of the Work Projects Administration and the Employees' Compensation Commission in connection with funds appropriated under these Emergency Relief Appropriation Acts are also included.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

JANUARY 11, 1943.

REPORT OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE—FOREIGN SERVICE RETIREMENT AND DISABILITY SYSTEM

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith a report by the Secretary of State, showing all receipts and disbursements on account of refunds, allowances, and annuities for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1942, in accordance with the Foreign Service retirement and disability system as required by section 26 (a) of an act for the grading and classification of clerks in the Foreign Service of the United States of America, and providing compensation therefor, approved February 23, 1931, as amended.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 11, 1943.

[Enclosure: Report Concerning Retirement and Disability Fund, Foreign Service.]

REPORT OF ALLEY DWELLING AUTHORITY FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia:

To the Congress of the United States:

In accordance with the provisions of section 5 (a) of the District of Columbia Alley Dwelling Act, approved June 12, 1934, I transmit herewith for the information of the Congress the report of the Alley Dwelling Authority for the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1942.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 11, 1943.

[NOTE.—The report accompanied a similar message to the House of Representatives.]

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following letters, which were referred as indicated:

REPORT OF SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY ON STATE OF THE FINANCES

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, pursuant to law, his annual report on the state of the finances for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1942; to the Committee on Finance.

PERSHING HALL MEMORIAL FUND

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury transmitting, pursuant to law, an itemized report of transactions for account of the Pershing Hall Memorial Fund (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

LANDS OF THE COLUMBIA BASIN PROJECT

A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to amend the act approved May 27, 1937 (ch. 269, 50 Stat. 208), by providing substitute and additional authority for the prevention of speculation in lands of the Columbia Basin project, and substitute and additional authority related to the settlement and development of the project, and for other purposes (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation.

DISPOSITION OF EXECUTIVE PAPERS

A letter from the Archivist of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, a list of papers and documents on the files of the Department of the Navy which are not needed in the conduct of business and have no permanent value or historical interest, and requesting action looking to their disposition (with an accompanying paper); to a Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Papers in the Executive Departments.

The VICE PRESIDENT appointed Mr. BARKLEY and Mr. BREWSTER members of the committee on the part of the Senate.

PETITIONS

Petitions, etc., were laid before the Senate, and referred as indicated:

By the VICE PRESIDENT:

A letter from Alfred M. Kunze, of New Rochelle, N. Y., relative to his plan for securing the peace of the world; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

A resolution of the New Castle County Industrial Union Council, Wilmington, Del., favoring the prompt enactment of legislation to provide periodic payments and medical care—in the event of injury or death in the performance of duty—to civilian defense workers, such payments and benefits to apply with respect to any death and injury sustained by such workers subsequent to December 6, 1941; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A resolution of the Common Council of the City of Milwaukee, Wis., favoring the enactment of anti-poll-tax legislation; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A resolution adopted by a mass meeting of citizens of Knoxville, Tenn., as a tribute to the public services performed by former Senator Norris, of Nebraska; ordered to lie on the table.

WARTIME PROHIBITION—PETITION

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, without all the signatures attached thereto, a petition signed by a number of citizens, members of the Hopewell U. P. Missionary Society, of Laurel, Pa.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD without all the signatures attached, as follows:

DECEMBER 17, 1942.

Senator JAMES J. DAVIS,
Washington, D. C.

Hon. JAMES J. DAVIS: Mothers have worked and prayed that their boys might be kept from evil since we are in the war, and our boys are called to serve their country. We think they should be protected from evil influences while in the service of our country.

Realizing the great harm alcoholic drinks are doing the people of our country and especially to the boys in the Army camps, we beg of you to urge President Franklin D. Roosevelt to give us wartime prohibition as Woodrow Wilson did in World War No. 1.

MEMBERS OF HOPEWELL
U. P. MISSIONARY SOCIETY,
CHURCH OF LAUREL, PA.,
MABEL E. KINARD,
FLORENCE E. HYSON,
CARRIE A. LOFFLER
(And sundry other citizens).

REPORT OF SENATE SPECIAL SILVER COMMITTEE

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, from the Senate Special Silver Committee, to which was referred the resolution (S. Res. 20) continuing Senate Resolution 187, Seventy-fourth Congress, agreed to August 16, 1935, as amended by Senate Resolution 261, Seventy-seventh Congress, agreed to June 29, 1942, relating to the Silver Purchase Act of 1934, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1) thereon.

ADMINISTRATION AND OPERATION OF WATER SYSTEM OF THE DISTRICT

Mr. McCARRAN, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported an original resolution (S. Res. 31), and, under the rule, it was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, as follows:

Resolved, That the authority conferred by Senate Resolution 169, Seventy-seventh Congress, agreed to March 2, 1942, and Senate Resolution 337, Seventy-seventh Congress, agreed to December 16, 1942 (relating to the administration and operation of the water system of the District of Columbia), is hereby continued until the end of the Seventy-eighth Congress.

ADDITIONAL COPIES OF HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON FINANCE ON PUBLIC LAW NO. 528, SEVENTY-SEVENTH CONGRESS

Mr. GEORGE, from the Committee on Finance, reported an original resolution (S. Res. 37), which was referred to the Committee on Printing, as follows:

Resolved, That in accordance with paragraph 3 of section 3 of the Printing Act approved March 1, 1907, the Committee on Finance be, and is hereby, authorized and empowered to have printed for its use 1,000 additional copies of the hearings held before said committee during the Seventy-seventh Congress, second session, on Public Law No. 528, section 403, Seventy-seventh Congress, second session, an act making additional appropriations for the national defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1942, and for other purposes.

S. 319. A bill to authorize the acceptance of a permanent loan to the United States by the Board of Trustees of the National Gallery of Art, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I introduce several bills which I ask to have referred to the appropriate committees. Among the bills are three which the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS] and I introduced at the last session, relating to administrative law procedure. In connection with the bills which I now introduce I merely desire to say that they are presented in order that the Committee on the Judiciary may continue the jurisdiction it heretofore has had over bills of this nature.

In justice to the members of the subcommittee I desire to say that during the last session of the Congress we held long hearings on the entire subject of administrative law. Those hearings have been published. They comprise some five volumes, and comprise probably the best textbook on administrative law which has been published in this country. I have introduced the bills in the hope that the Senate Committee on the Judiciary will continue its study and may report some appropriate bills on this most perplexing subject.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bills referred to by the Senator from New Mexico will be received and appropriately referred.

By Mr. HATCH:

S. 320. A bill for the relief of Bradbury & Marchant; to the Committee on Claims.

(Mr. RADCLIFFE (for himself and Mr. TYDINGS) introduced Senate Joint Resolution 17, which was referred to the Committee on the Library, and appears under a separate heading.)

GEORGE WASHINGTON CARVER NATIONAL MONUMENT

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, the past week marked the passing of a great American. George Washington Carver—born in slavery, schooled in adversity, and honored in eminence—has gone to his final rest. This patient scholar, this creative scientist, this kindly teacher was one whose humbleness toward knowledge, whose reverence toward God, and whose tolerance toward man molded him into one of America's most beloved characters. His ceaseless quest for learning led him always into the paths of service; his unyielding faith in God built up in him a kind of loving tolerance; his material discoveries brought untold wealth and solace into the world. Yet this honored man lived out his years in a simple, unpretentious dignity.

It is only too seldom that such a mellowed character as this emerges from the passing pages of time. In the death of George Washington Carver, America has lost a noble son, the world a great benefactor, mankind a faithful servant.

His genius will be missed by the Nation and especially the South, where his work for humanity, and particularly his race, had such splendid results.

He took the insignificant peanut, which, up to his discoveries, had been used mostly for fattening hogs, and elevated it to be head of its class. He succeeded in making over 300 discoveries of useful products from the peanut, many of them most important for their medicinal value. He had remarkable initiative in developing something from nothing, as it was mostly the waste products from the southern farms with which he worked. He refused a fortune many times for his discoveries and experiments, explaining that they were for God and humanity and not for worldly gain. He did not want gold but he did want to help his fellow man. He was spiritual in his undertakings and never failed to thank God for his ability to make a new discovery. He was as humble as the lowly peanut which he made serve humanity, and he followed the commandment of Jesus Christ "Love thy neighbor."

I introduce a bill to provide for the establishment of the George Washington Carver National Monument.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill introduced by the Senator from Pennsylvania will be received and appropriately referred.

The bill (S. 312) to provide for the establishment of the George Washington Carver National Monument was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

FRANCIS SCOTT KEY

Mr. RADCLIFFE. Mr. President, today is the one hundredth anniversary of the death of Francis Scott Key, author of the Star-Spangled Banner. I introduce a joint resolution in which my colleague, the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], joins, and ask that it be printed in full in the body of the RECORD, and that it be given appropriate reference.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the joint resolution will be printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 17) memorializing the name of Francis Scott Key was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Library, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas this date marks the centennial anniversary of that day when the God of Peace called Francis Scott Key to a well earned rest and to that everlasting reward for which he had so well prepared himself; and

Whereas by his life, exemplary, distinguished, and devoted to the service of his community, his State and his Nation, he made a lasting impression upon all whose privilege it was to know him and left a rich and enduring heritage for succeeding generations; and,

Whereas it is fitting that there be recorded brief reference to his life and work:

Francis Scott Key, son of John Ross Key and Anne Phoebe Penn Dagworthy Charlton Key, was born August 1, 1779, at Terra Rubra, located on Pipes Creek in the county of Frederick, now a part of Carroll County, in the State of Maryland. At the age of 10, he entered St. John's College, Annapolis, Md., and as a member of the first graduating class of that institution received the degree of bachelor of arts in 1796 at the age of 17. He delivered the valedictory address, using Eloquence as his topic. And 4 years later he received the degree of master of arts.

In 1827 when St. John's College faced a critical period because of the withdrawal by the State legislature of its financial support, Mr. Key was one of the foremost leaders of the movement to organize the alumni. He made the principal address at their first meeting on the subject of public responsibility to institutions of learning, so forceful that it resulted in a renewal by the State legislature of financial aid to the college in an even larger measure. Earlier he had become a member of the Georgetown-Lancaster Society, an organization having for its principal objective the furtherance of free public schools. He served for a number of years as member of and chairman of a committee charged with this particular phase of its program.

Shortly after Francis Scott Key graduated from St. John's College, he entered the law office of his uncle, Phillip Barton Key, in Annapolis, Md., where he served the usual apprenticeship of 4 years. His regular attendance at sessions of the Maryland Court of Appeals, the Legislature, and of the nisi prius courts served him in good stead in later years. He soon became a worthy opponent of the best lawyers of his day and an adversary to be reckoned with before the bar. He was admitted to the bar in the town of Frederick, Md., in the year 1800, where he practiced for the next 5 years, moving to Georgetown, District of Columbia, in 1805. In 1806, when but 27 years of age, Mr. Key made his first appearance before the United States Supreme Court, John Marshall being its then Chief Justice. His appearances before this high tribunal became more and more frequent in the first half of the nineteenth century. In 1833, President Andrew Jackson appointed Mr. Key as United States attorney for the District of Columbia, the only public office which he ever held. While serving in this capacity, the President sent him as a special mediator to Alabama for the purpose of settling a dispute which had arisen there between the local authorities, the Federal Government, and the Creek Indians over a question of jurisdiction. Although this controversy had been pending for some months when Mr. Key arrived and had reached such a fever pitch that armed conflict between the Indians and the United States Army seemed inevitable, he was able to make a favorable report to his superiors within 6 days and returned home after 6 weeks, completely successful in having settled the dispute.

Francis Scott Key was a devout Christian, using as his daily creed the precepts of the Sermon on the Mount. He served for a number of years as lay delegate to the diocesan conventions of the Episcopal Church in Maryland, and also as lay delegate to the general conventions of that church. His letters to his mother, to members of his family, and to his friends frequently show the depth of his religious convictions. Two of his religious poems are published in the Common Service Book and Hymnal of the Lutheran Church, namely, Lord With Growing Heart I Praise Thee, and Before the Lord We Bow. At one time, Key gave deep thought to the subject of entering the ministry. In 1813, the Reverend Dr. James Kemp, then rector of St. Paul's Episcopal Church, Baltimore, offered him a position at that church, an offer which he declined only after "prayerful consideration." Five days before his death, while traveling from Georgetown to Baltimore by stagecoach, he composed his final poem, a work which bespeaks his belief in the life to come, and some lines of which were almost prophetic of his end.

On February 19, 1802, Francis Scott Key was married to Miss Mary Tayloe Lloyd, of Talbot County and Annapolis, a member of one of Maryland's outstanding and best-known families. Of this union there were born 11 children, 6 boys and 5 girls. Most of Mr. Key's leisure time was spent in the bosom of his family. He was a true and devoted husband and an inspiration to and companion of his children.

While yet attending St. John's College, Francis Scott Key met Roger Brooke Taney, later Chief Justice of the United States Supreme Court. There immediately sprang up between them a deep friendship, a bond subsequently strengthened by the marriage of Mr. Taney to Mr. Key's only sister, Annie. It was to his brother-in-law that he told the story of experiences incident to the writing of the Star-Spangled Banner, which story is related by Chief Justice Taney in a book of Key poems, published in 1857.

The masterpiece of his many poems, sonnets, and couplets, is, of course, our National Anthem. He reached the zenith of his career as a lawyer and orator when, by his compelling arguments, he succeeded in securing the release of Dr. William Beanes from the commanders of the British Army and Navy, then planning and ready to execute their attack upon the city of Baltimore. No less did his prowess as a poet soar to new heights as, from the deck of an American truce ship, "one of Ferguson's Norfolk packets," anchored some 3 miles off Fort McHenry, he watched the destiny of his country hang in a balance. When the 26-hour bombardment ended abruptly just before dawn on the morning of September 14, 1814, his heart must have sunk within him. Certainly, he thought the fort had been forced to surrender and that, when the morning's sun cast its first glow over the eastern horizon, he would see the flag of the enemy floating over the little battlement at the entrance of Baltimore's harbor. It was during this period of doubt and anxiety that Francis Scott Key wrote the first verse of his immortal poem. Then, as dawn began to break, he was able to get faint and fleeting glimpses of our ensign of democracy. As he writes in his second verse: "On the shore dimly seen;" another line, "Now it catches the gleam of the morning's first beam." With what relief, pride, and triumph, he must have written the last two lines, "'Tis the Star-Spangled Banner! O, long may it wave, o'er the land of the free and the home of the brave." Only in the third verse does Key speak disparagingly of the enemy, but even in this his verse of sarcasm, he does not mention it by name. This is well, for the defense of Baltimore was the last official engagement between the armed forces of Great Britain and the United States. There has since followed an era of peace and amity between these two nations and, having been allies in the World War No. 1, they are now fighting shoulder to shoulder in a second world conflict.

In the fourth and last verse of his immortal poem, Francis Scott Key pours forth his true Christian spirit, giving praise to the Heavenly Powers for the victory and invoking the blessing of God that our cause may ever be just:

O! thus be it ever, when freemen shall stand
Between their lov'd homes and the war's desolation;
Blest with victory and peace, may the Heav'n-rescued land
Praise the Power that hath made and preserved us a nation.
Then conquer we must, when our cause it is just,
And this be our motto: "In God is our trust."
And the Star-Spangled Banner in triumph shall wave
O'er the land of the free and the home of the brave.

On March 3, 1931, President Hoover approved H. R. 14 (Public, No. 823, 71st Cong.), designating this immortal poem as the National Anthem of the United States, thereby making official that which the public had already done for the citizenry had years before taken the song into their hearts, paying it the same homage as if it had been the adopted Anthem.

Francis Scott Key breathed his last at about 8 p. m. on Wednesday, January 11, 1843, at the home of his daughter, Elizabeth Phoebe Key Howard, located on Mount Vernon Place and Charles Street, Baltimore, within the shadow of the first monument erected in honor of George Washington. Flags were flown at half-mast until his burial in John Eager Howard's vault in St. Paul's Cemetery, Baltimore, Maryland, on Saturday, January 14. The United States Supreme Court adjourned in tribute to him. In 1865, his remains were removed to Mount Olivet Cemetery, Frederick, Maryland, in order to fulfill one of his lifetime wishes: "May my remains rest within the shadow of the everlasting hills of Frederick County which I love so well." In 1893, an imposing shaft was erected at the entrance to the cemetery, and the remains of Francis Scott Key and his beloved wife were placed in a tomb at its base. Near the monument there flies a United States flag, night and day a symbol of those fateful hours on the night of September 13 and 14, 1814.

Fort McHenry, over which Francis Scott Key saw the "stars and stripes" so proudly and defiantly waving on that morning after the bombardment, is now reserved by the Federal Government as a national monument and historic shrine. The Star-Spangled Banner Flag House, 844 East Pratt Street, Baltimore, wherein Mary Young Pickersgill made the mammoth flag (30 to 52 feet) which Mr. Key named the "Star-Spangled Banner" in his poem, is now maintained by the patriotic people of Baltimore as a historic shrine. Both of these institutions of inspiration and education are visited annually by thousands of persons.

Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, etc., That—

1. The name of Francis Scott Key, poet-lawyer, Christian gentleman, devout citizen, and noble character be, and it is hereby, memorialized and just tribute paid to him and his deeds of service to humanity and to the young Republic which he served so well.

2. His gentle kindness to those less fortunate than he, his tolerance of the views of others, his fortitude in the hour of stress, his love of his country and, above all, his humility before his Divine Creator should serve as an example today and give us strength to face the trying months ahead until we shall be victorious for "Conquer we must, when our cause it is just, and this be our motto: 'In God is our trust'."

3. If we, as a people, profit by Francis Scott Key's inspiring words, his life, and his example, then the Star-Spangled Banner shall continue to wave, "O'er the land of the free and the home of the brave."

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS

Mr. REYNOLDS submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 32), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized, during the Seventy-eighth Congress, to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer at a cost not exceeding 25 cents a hundred words to report such hearings as may be had on any subject before said committee, the expense thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during any session or recess of the Senate.

LABOR POLICIES AND THE LABOR SITUATION—ARTICLE BY ERNEST LINDLEY

Mr. REED. Mr. President, in the Washington Post for December 23, 1942, appeared the calmest and most impartial statement of labor policies and the labor situation that I have seen anywhere. It was written by Ernest Lindley, one of the fairest and most able of the newspaper columnists. I ask unanimous consent to present and have printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks Mr. Lindley's statement entitled "Unequal Sacrifice."

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNEQUAL SACRIFICE—ORGANIZED LABOR FACES ROUGH WEATHER

(By Ernest Lindley)

Captain Rickenbacker says that if the men on the fighting front and the workers in factories changed places war production would be doubled. Statistically, the statement may be wide of the mark but it represents a feeling which is not peculiar to Rickenbacker, and which cannot be overcome by the impressive figures on the volume of American production.

There is no way of equalizing burdens and risks in a war, especially one fought at a distance from the home base. Even if the people at home work as hard as the men at the front, which not many do, they are not subjected to the same risks and in most cases they receive higher pay.

A sense of inequality of sacrifice leads men who are reasonably patriotic to fight for position and gain within the civilian economy at home. The labor unions point to corporate profits and high salaries for executives. The farmers point to the short hours and high wages of the workingmen. And in this they are joined by the industrialists and middle classes generally.

Such sentiments have intensified the political struggles in Washington, often leaving the impression that nobody is interested in anything except his pocketbook. They have helped to write many black pages in the history of the Seventy-seventh Congress, and in decisions on policy by administrative agencies and departments.

Of all the economic groups, that which is now most widely and bitterly criticized is organized labor. The feeling that the labor unions have been favored by the Roosevelt Administration before all other groups seems to be almost universal except perhaps among some of the union leaders and members. Of course, that feeling had taken hold before the war. And, in a large way, it was true. The election of Roosevelt in 1933 was a transfer of political power from the financiers and managers of industry to labor and the farming groups. Agriculture gained much, but in time began to drift away, or to be forced away by certain of the labor policies of the Administration.

The growth of labor unionism, encouraged by the Administration, brought sharp changes in industrial practice. Unfortunately the transition had not been completed when the rearmament program began. Many managers and union leaders and members had not found their proper places in the new type of industrial relation.

Both industrial managers and labor leaders have been frightened by extreme demands. Nothing has done more to keep the conflict alive than the recurrent threats of legislation which would strike at the roots of unionism. But, whatever the balance of blame or credit over a longer period, the unions have come near to isolating themselves from the sympathies of other groups, while the prestige of the leaders of industry has revived, and industry and agriculture seem well on the way toward restoring their old alliance under the banner of the Republican Party.

Little has been said, at least in public, by labor leaders to indicate that they realize their isolation. Some of them have their own internal political problems in handling the extremists. Some of them have made constructive suggestions concerning war production and the war effort generally. But such considerations do not carry much weight with the people who feel that labor has won special benefits out of the war, or who know about the strikes and slow-downs which still occur.

The production still lost from strikes may be only a trifling percentage. But the fact that any strikes at all occur, especially when agencies favorable to labor exist to compose disputes, is abhorrent to the public generally. The full use of manpower is held back by the 40-hour week and by various union restrictions of the "feather-bed" variety. And even if the higher wages now earned by many workers are not much if any above what our national economic machine, working at capacity, can afford, they represent a marked change in relationship to other groups. During the war, labor, especially in the war industries, has gained economic advantage while, by and large, after taxes, other groups have lost ground.

Organized labor now faces very much the same political perils that beset American financiers and industrialists in the early thirties. The question is whether it will make the same mistake made by so many of the leaders of finance and industry; of refusing to acknowledge their mistakes and of resisting changes required in the general public interest. More enlightened leadership in American finance and industry would have saved years of painful and, sometimes, destructive fighting to prevent the inevitable.

Organized labor cannot work out of its present political hole by declaiming against the mistakes of management or by threats to resort to strikes or other forms of direct action. (There have been hints from labor circles that the unions will abandon their no-strike pledges if this or that which they want is not done, although it is difficult to believe that they were inspired by responsible union leaders.) It can regain the sympathy of nonunion members only by cleaning its own house—disciplining the leaders and men who strike, abolishing union rules which prevent the most efficient use of manpower, and working out some modification of the 40-hour week where employers cannot afford to pay the higher rates for overtime. In addition, union leaders could show their grasp of the problem of inflation by urging a combination of higher taxes and enforced savings on smaller incomes. Many unions have made excellent records in selling war bonds by the pay-roll deduction plan, but this is only a sample of what is needed.

Organized labor faces some rough weather. It can profit by studying the political mistakes of American industrial and financial leaders, and avoiding them.

REFERENCE TO COMMITTEES OF NOMINATIONS AND TREATIES

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, as in executive session, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution, which I submit and send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That on calendar days of the present session of Congress when no executive session is held, nominations or treaties received from the President of the United States may, where no objection is interposed, be referred, as in executive session, to the appropriate committees by the Presiding Officer of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The routine morning business is concluded.

DEATH OF HON. AUGUSTIN P. JUSTO, FORMER PRESIDENT OF ARGENTINA

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish for just a moment to call the attention of the Senate to the death of the Honorable Augustin P. Justo, former President of the Republic of Argentina. Mr. Justo while he was President of the Argentine Republic and before and since he was President of that great Republic was an outspoken friend of the United States and of the people of the United States. He was likewise in sympathy with the program of American solidarity, by which I mean the solidarity of the entire Western Hemisphere in its attitude toward international problems and toward problems affecting the Western Hemipshere.

In view of his outspoken and practically lifelong attitude, I feel that it is not inappropriate now in the Senate of the United States to make reference to his recent death and to express our sympathy at his demise and our appreciation of his broad-minded statesmanship while he was in public office as well as when he was in private life.

While I regret the death of former President Justo and express, insofar as I can, my sympathy and the sympathy of my colleagues to the people of the Argentine, I felt that it was a matter of pride to call attention to his attitude and to his good will and friendliness toward the people of the United States and toward the western world in general.

NOMINATION OF EDWARD J. FLYNN TO BE MINISTER TO AUSTRALIA

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, the headlines of the morning newspapers of Saturday, January 9, unfolded a very unusual happening in the history of this country. The headline in one newspaper read, "Diplomatic surprise. Flynn says he's been named Ambassador—Australia bound."

In my judgment, the naming of Mr. Flynn as Ambassador or Minister to Australia or any other country on the face of the globe is an insult to the people of America and to the people of the country to which he is named. He is the notorious Edward J. Flynn, formerly known as "Boss" Flynn, and more currently known as "Belgian Paving Block" Flynn.

When "Paving Block" Flynn announced to the world his appointment as Ambassador and personal representative of the President of the United States, he said:

I have more or less a roving commission in the South Pacific as the President's personal representative and ambassador.

It is a very disgraceful state of affairs when it becomes necessary to subpena the chairman of a major political party before a grand jury of any State to answer to a criminal charge. I do not blame the Democratic Party of this country for wanting to get rid of Flynn; I do not blame the President of the United States for wanting to get rid of Flynn as chairman of his party. He has been a weight around the President's neck for some time; but I do not believe in promoting him in order to get rid of him.

It is an interesting coincidence that at the particular moment when "Paving Block" Flynn is seeking diplomatic immunity, Tom Dewey has just been inaugurated governor of New York. Tom Dewey is a noted prosecutor of criminals, and the Citizens' Union of New York has just petitioned Governor Dewey to reopen the Flynn case.

I wonder if in this instance we cannot put two and two together? The Citizens' Union of New York suggests that it is now a year since city employees using city-owned paving blocks paved the courtyard of Boss Flynn's palatial country estate, and, so far as I know, "Paving Block" Flynn still has the blocks that gave him his name.

"Boss" Flynn apparently thinks that the 8,000 paving blocks on his palatial New York estate are getting a little too hot to rove upon. I have no objection to sending him five or six or seven or eight thousand miles away if he wants to be a rover, but in that section of the world New Hampshire boys and other American boys are giving their lives for the cause of freedom in the world; they are giving their lives for something different than what Boss Flynn has stood for in this country. His appointment is a slap at every American boy in the service.

Tom Dewey has already accommodated some of Mr. Flynn's friends, among whom is Jimmy Hines. Another friend of "Paving Block" Flynn's was Dutch Schultz. No doubt he will be remembered. When Flynn was high sheriff in New York he appointed Dutch Schultz, noted for his criminal activities, as his deputy. That is the type of selection Mr. Flynn has made in the past when he was high sheriff in the Bronx. What is there to lead us to believe he would now associate himself with a different type of individual?

I believe the President of the United States should be able to appoint as minister to any nation a man of his own choosing, but I think that anyone the President appoints to a high diplomatic post to represent this country should have the basic American qualities of honesty and integrity and should be free of criminal entanglements, because the people in other lands are apt to judge America and Americans by the caliber of men who represent us.

Just who wants Flynn to go to Australia, anyway? Do the boys in our armed forces want Mr. Flynn over there? Does our gallant General MacArthur want him to help out over there? Does Cordell Hull, our esteemed Secretary of State, want Mr. Flynn as an ambassador or minister over there? Does Sumner Welles want Mr. Flynn there? Does Premier Curtin, of Australia, want Mr. Flynn?

My own State of New Hampshire has given the country many of its distinguished sons to serve in the diplomatic field. John Winant, my predecessor as Governor of New Hampshire, who is now Ambassador to the Court of St. James's, is one of them. I cannot imagine John Winant, knowing him as I do, swelling with pride at having "Paving Block" Flynn become one of his associates in the diplomatic field. I cannot imagine Joseph Grew, our great ex-Ambassador to Japan, swelling with pride at having "Boss" Flynn associated with him. I cannot believe that Mr. Moffat, our Minister to Canada, thinks a great deal of having Mr. Flynn become an associate of his as Minister to a country in the British Commonwealth of Nations.

I do not think we need to wonder what is behind this appointment. We in the Senate have got to answer to the boys who are giving their lives so that we can win this war and bring about a lasting peace, and, in my judgment, the winning of this war and laying the foundations for peace cannot be accomplished by sending to Australia or to any other country in vital battleground areas of the war a man of the caliber and type of "Paving Block" Flynn.

This is no time for the diplomatic service to harbor a man whose past clearly shows him to be wholly unfit for any high position. This is no time for the Senate of the United States to close its eyes. To win this war, the armed forces of the United States need the ablest officers and soldiers we can produce, and in the diplomatic field our Government needs the ablest and most experienced and intelligent representatives it is possible to obtain. "Paving Block" Flynn does not meet any of these specifications; he does not fall in this category.

Mr. President, I cannot imagine that many of my colleagues on the other side of the aisle can be very proud of this nomination. I sympathize with them. I think it is a disgrace. I join with them in the desire to rid the country and rid any political party of that type of leadership, but I hate to see a man such as "Paving Block" Flynn promoted in order to attain that end.

Along this line, I should like to introduce into the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, an editorial from the New York Times, of today, entitled "Mr. Flynn as Minister," and an editorial from the Washington Times-Herald of June 18 last entitled "Head of Jury in Flynn Case Gets United States Job."

The head of the jury which whitewashed Flynn was shortly afterward rewarded by appointment to a Federal position.

I also ask to have printed an article from the New York Times entitled "Citizens Union Sees Flynn 'Whitewash'; Asks New Inquiry."

I also ask to have printed an article from the New York Herald Tribune under the headline "Kern Says City's Men, Material Were Used on Flynn's Estate."

Kern was at the head of the Civil Service Commission in New York City.

I present also an article of the New York World-Telegram entitled "Civic Groups Press Flynn Investigation."

I also submit an editorial from the Chicago Tribune entitled "The Whitewash Is Getting Thin."

I present also an editorial from the New York Herald Tribune under the headline "A Second Pail of Whitewash."

I submit also an article written by James M. Minifie entitled "Flynn Says He's Been Named Ambassador—Australia-Bound."

I ask that all these articles and editorials be printed in the body of the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the matters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times of January 11, 1943]

MR. FLYNN AS MINISTER

Our prestige abroad, and our morale at home, would both be harmed by an action so cynical as getting rid of the political embarrassment of Edward J. Flynn's presence as national chairman of the Democratic Party through the device of making him Minister to Australia. This is so evident that we shall prefer not to believe that this appointment has been offered definitely and irrevocably to Mr. Flynn until the President himself confirms the fact.

In that case there will be no proper course of action for the Senate except to reject the appointment.

HEAD OF JURY IN FLYNN CASE GETS UNITED STATES JOB

NEW YORK, June 17.—A letter was sent to the United States Civil Service Commission today advising that Daniel A. Daly, foreman of the Bronx grand jury which exonerated Democratic National Chairman Edward J. Flynn in the Belgian paving-block case, soon would take a job in Washington. The Citizens Committee to Reopen the Flynn Case questioned whether "Mr. Daly is being rewarded for services rendered to Mr. Flynn" and said people were "beginning to wonder if the road to Washington is paved with Belgian blocks."

[From the New York Times of May 7, 1942]

CITIZENS UNION SEES FLYNN "WHITEWASH"; ASKS NEW INQUIRY—APPEALS TO LEHMAN TO NAME SPECIAL PROSECUTOR TO LOOK INTO "SERIOUS CRIME"—KERN IS "NOT SURPRISED"—CALLS PRESENTMENT "SHOCKING"—SAYS HE WILL CONTINUE TO TRY TO EXPOSE LEADER

Following the failure of the Bronx County grand jury last Tuesday to return indictments against any of the persons involved in the paving charges against Edward J. Flynn, the Citizens Union joined yesterday with Paul J. Kern, author of the charges, in labeling the action a "whitewash."

The executive committee of the Citizens Union decided at a meeting yesterday afternoon to ask Governor Lehman to supersede District Attorney Samuel J. Foley of the Bronx in a new investigation. In a telegram to the Governor the Citizens Union said:

"The Flynn grand jury presentment is an obvious whitewash. Its findings prove that a serious public crime was committed, but it fails to fix responsibility and indicts no one. Some one accepted the stolen paving blocks for the Flynn estate and someone in the city government ordered them delivered. Both should be punished to make clear that such practices will not be tolerated and that important political figures do not enjoy special immunity. When we asked you earlier to supersede District Attorney Foley in this case because of his close associations with Mr. Flynn you replied:

" 'I have personally talked with the district attorney and he has given me his assurance that he will proceed without fear or favor. There can be no failure to discharge his constitutional obligations before he has even been given a chance to act. As Governor I would not be justified at this time in superseding the district attorney.'

"The district attorney has now had his chance. He has failed to secure a proper fixing of responsibility for the crime. We renew our urgent request that you instruct the attorney general to appoint a special prosecutor, not affiliated with Mr. Flynn, to do so."

NOT SURPRISED, KERN SAYS

Mr. Kern, deposed president of the municipal civil service commission, said he would not abate his efforts to expose the "Flynn-flamming" he attributed to the chairman of the Democratic National Committee. In a statement on the Bronx grand jury's action Mr. Kern said:

"The presentment is shocking, but not surprising. It could hardly be expected that a district attorney elected by the Flynn machine would find anything wrong with Edward J. Flynn. Certain irrevocable facts stand as follows:

"1. City employees using city-owned paving blocks and equipment, including trucks, paved the courtyard of the Edward J. Flynn estate at Lake Mahopac on November 14, 15, 17, and 18, 1941.

"2. Edward J. Flynn was present in person during this operation and was identified by six city employees and said it was a nice job.

"3. No payment to the city or restitution of any sort took place until after I disclosed this matter under oath on January 16, more than 2 months after the job was completed. If restitution after disclosure is now a defense to grand larceny in the Bronx, every thief is saved from prosecution merely by returning what he took if he is caught.

"4. Although investigators assigned by the mayor had done nothing on the case after December 18, I was three times ordered by the mayor to cease my own investigation of this matter on January 20, 21, and 26, 1942.

INSISTS CRIME WAS COMMITTED

"These 8,000 paving blocks did not fly to Lake Mahopac on their own initiative to enjoy the country air. They were sent there. The presentment is silent on who sent this city property to the Flynn estate. Such action was a crime under any circumstances, for no borough official of the Bronx has power even to loan, rent, or sell city property.

"A finding by Bronx politicians that politics is pure in the Bronx is not convincing. The brazen use of city property for the private benefit of Overlord Flynn would make the 'great McGinty' blush.

"Fortunately we are still living in a democracy, and the people of the State will shortly have an opportunity to appraise the public character of Edward J. Flynn and his political machine. I shall continue my personal efforts to expose this 'Flynn-flamming' further."

Mr. Flynn's office reported yesterday that he had no comment to make on the grand jury's disposition of the case. Mayor La Guardia was similarly silent. Early in the investigation the mayor asked District Attorney Frank Hogan of Manhattan to proceed against him if it could be proved that he had blocked the inquiry, or to proceed against an afternoon newspaper that printed that charge if it were found untrue. In view of the Bronx inquiry Mr. Hogan took no action on the mayor's request.

[From the New York Herald Tribune of March 8, 1942]

KERN SAYS CITY'S MEN, MATERIAL WERE USED ON FLYNN'S ESTATE—CHARGES 27 MUNICIPAL WORKERS BUILT COURTYARD IN DEMOCRATIC LEADER'S LAKE MAHOPAC HOME; SAYS MAYOR WAS TOLD "NEARLY 4 MONTHS AGO"

Paul J. Kern, ousted president of the municipal civil service commission, charged yesterday that 27 city employees built an antique Belgian courtyard last November on the Putnam County estate at Lake Mahopac of Edward J. Flynn, chairman of the Democratic National Committee, with property which Mr. Kern asserted was "stolen" from the city.

Mr. Kern said that the civil service commission had examined upward of 30 city employees, including the 27 who built the antique Belgian courtyard, and had a subpena made out and ready to serve on Mr. Flynn when Mayor F. H. LaGuardia suspended Kern and the other two members of the commission on February 6.

Mr. Kern said: "This favor to Mr. Flynn cost the city in excess of $2,000," and he asserted that Mayor LaGuardia had the information contained in his accusing statement "for nearly 4 months."

Mr. Flynn was registered at the Roney Plaza Hotel, Miami Beach, Fla., last night. There was no response to telephone calls to his room and other efforts to reach him for comment on the Kern charges also were unavailing. Mr. Flynn is in the South on business for the Democratic National Committee.

At the home of Mayor LaGuardia, 1274 Fifth Avenue, a New York Herald Tribune reporter sent a note to the mayor asking him whether he cared to comment. The mayor replied that there would be no comment last night.

Mr. Kern further charged that Mr. Flynn was present during the building of the antique Belgian courtyard and was quoted as saying in the presence of at least one city employee: "It is a nice job."

The civil service commission's examination of the city employees began on January 16, and Mr. Kern said that some time thereafter some of the city employees who had been paid by the city "also received checks from Flynn's gardener."

"This belated confession of guilt," said Mr. Kern, "coming only after fear of exposure was imminent, and 2 months after the job was completed, may have been to fabricate an alibi that these city workers were off duty on the days in question and being paid by the city for accumulated overtime."

After he started his examination of witnesses, and "when this story was completely" in his possession, Mr. Kern alleged he had been "assailed by many threats and entreaties to suppress it, on the grounds, among others, that it might embarrass the national administration in the midst of its war effort to have the chairman of the Democratic National Committee so involved."

Mr. Kern had been on close terms with the Mayor for 12 years, serving as his secretary when Mr. LaGuardia was a Member of Congress.

The break in their friendship came when the commission tried to force out four employees in the city register's office, replacing them with persons selected by civil-service examination. Mr. Kern held the employees had been handpicked by politicians. The mayor said they were entitled to their jobs.

DENOUNCED CHANLER

The case went into court where Corporation Counsel William C. Chanler deserted Mr. Kern, who thereupon argued his own case and lost. The commission voted to appeal the decision and issued a statement denouncing Mr. Chanler.

Mayor LaGuardia suspended the commission on charges of insubordination and after a stormy hearing announced February 16 that Mr. Kern and a fellow commissioner, Dr. Wallace S. Sayre, had been removed from office. The third member of the commission, Ferdinand Q. Morton, Negro, was reinstated because he was ill at home and had no part in preparing the statement denouncing Mr. Chanler. Mr. Kern and Dr. Sayre have taken their removal to the courts, asking reinstatement.

Mr. Kern said he was moved to make his charges, because "the public is absolutely entitled to know these facts, casting light as they do upon the character of one of their national leaders in this crisis, and that a great President, absorbed with the tribulations of a terrible World War is entitled to political leadership superior to that emanating from Lake Mahopac."

The antique Belgian courtyard was paved with about 9,000 old granite paving blocks from three municipal storage yards in the Bronx, and were laid in a quadrangle about five-eighths of an inch apart so that the grass would grow between them Mr. Kern charged. The work was supervised by a landscape architect hired by Mr. Flynn, according to the charges. Mr. Kern said that Work Projects Administration wagons and employees were also used, but that he could not investigate this phase of the work.

He said the plans for the antique Belgian courtyard were agreed upon last September when Robert L. Moran, Bronx Commissioner of Borough Works, took a municipal foreman to Mr. Flynn's county estate in Putnam County.

When the statement was read to him last night Mr. Moran said: "We in the borough president's office are investigating those charges, and until we finish the investigation, I don't think it would be proper to make a statement. We are not looking to get into a controversy with Mr. Kern."

TEXT OF KERN'S STATEMENT

The text of Mr. Kern's statement follows:

"About the middle of last September, Robert L. Moran, Bronx Commissioner of Borough Works, took Fred Dennerlein, a general foreman of the city service to Lake Mahopac, N. Y., to look over and lay out an extensive construction and paving job proposed to be done by the city at the country mansion of Edward J. Flynn, chairman of the Democratic National Committee.

"Moran is second in command in the Borough of the Bronx to James J. Lyons, borough president and product of the Flynn political machine.

"On about November 13, a typewritten message was left in Dennerlein's official pigeonhole at the main office of Bronx Borough Works, directing him to go ahead with the Flynn job.

"On the morning of November 14, 1941, two city trucks of 1½ tons, Nos. 62 and 63, from the city garage at 181st Street and Webster Avenue, were assigned to the private job on the Flynn estate and left for Lake Mahopac. The assignment continued for some days thereafter. The trucks were supplied with large quantities of city gasoline to make several round trips to the Flynn mansion, a round trip distance of 108 miles.

"On the same morning, November 14, a considerable quantity of city equipment, including wheelbarrows, shovels, rakes, rammers, brooms, etc., were taken to the Flynn estate for the job. This continued daily for some days thereafter.

"On the same day, November 14, 11 civil-service employees were assigned to work full time on the Flynn job upstate as follows: Otto Haselman, foreman; Joseph Theiss, paver; Paul Quinn, paver; Thomas Walsh, paver; Ralph Fioralli, rammer; Frederick Ueberacher, paver; John Motto, laborer; John Drigel, laborer; William Hickey, laborer; William Kramer, laborer; and James Finn, laborer.

SENT BY SUPERIORS, HE SAYS

"This assignment continued for some days thereafter, and general foreman Dennerlein oversaw the job daily. These men were paid by the city for the days worked on the Flynn job at a cost to the taxpayers of several hundred dollars.

"After this case was broken by the civil service commission on January 16, 1942, some of these men also received checks from Flynn's gardener. This belated confession of guilt, coming only after fear of exposure was imminent and more than 2 months after the job was completed, may have been to fabricate an alibi that these city workers were off duty on the days in question and being paid by the city for accumulated overtime. Suffice it to answer this phony hypothesis by saying that these city workers were sent to the private job by their city superiors, not by private employers; that they were paid in full by the city for the days worked; that they received 'not so much as a drink of water' on the job; that the official pay-roll sheets filed with the comptroller late in November saw no notation of any charge for overtime; that it is admitted that no written record of such overtime exists in the office of the Bronx borough president.

"On the same day (November 14) two other gangs of city employees, Nos. 33 and 34, were assigned to loading city-owned paving blocks onto trucks for transportation to the Flynn job. About 9,000 such city-owned blocks were loaded at the Gulden Avenue storage yard at Gulden Avenue and Two Hundredth Street during that and succeeding days. These were reclaimed blocks with a market value to the city of about $100.

"The 2 gangs of civil-service workers assigned to this loading job were concrete gangs 33 and 34, whose foremen were Eugene Farrell and Joseph Verdecanna. In addition to the foremen, 2 truck drivers were assigned to take these gangs to the Gulden yard for loading the blocks on trucks for the Flynn job (not the same trucks used for transportation of the blocks). These were Aubrey J. Cross, who drove gang 33 in truck 47 to the loading point for the Flynn job; Michael McConnville, who drove the combined gangs in truck 22 for the same purpose.

GIVES LIST OF MEN ASSIGNED

"The 10 civil-service employees assigned to the loading itself were Daniel Corsillo, Giuseppi Capeluppi, Leonardo Marinaccio, John Greco, Vincenzo Pasqualo, Anthony Capolino, Vincent Pizzano, Dominick Cozenzo, James Tracy, and Calogero Rizzo.

"These men were all paid by the city for the work of loading city-owned blocks onto the trucks for the Flynn estate, and in one case where certain of them worked on the Flynn loading job on a day normally off, they were given another day off at city expense a week later to compensate them.

"It should be carefully noted that as far as the record shows of these men and the other workers involved were merely honest civil-service employees doing the job assigned to them by their superiors. No participation in the fraud on the city can possibly be imputed to them. All of these employees were truthful, though some were reluctant witnesses when called.

"Altogether the record shows 27 city employees were assigned in one way or another at either end of the Flynn job over a main period of 4 days.

"Mr. Edward J. Flynn and Mrs. Flynn were present at the job while it was progressing; were identified by some of the men, and Mr. Flynn is quoted as saying that 'it was a nice job.'

"Mr. Flynn, incidentally, furnished a few loads of sand for the job at his own expense while it was in progress, and by this public-spirited gesture no doubt reduced somewhat the cost of the whole project to the city taxpayers.

"No precise estimate of the cost of this private job at public expense has yet been made, but, on the basis of the number of employees involved, the trucking costs, the amount of city equipment used and the supplies furnished, plus overhead, it seems certain that this favor to Mr. Flynn cost the city in excess of $2,000. A small part of this was charged against the private plumbers of the Bronx, since the borough president charged some of the labor to a fund provided by plumbers to repay the city for the cost of paving cuts made by plumbers.

"The record of investigation shows, incidentally, incredibly sloppy methods of record keeping in the office of the Bronx borough president. It shows, for instance, about 20 laborers charged to the labor gangs, but actually assigned to driving cars, many of them passenger cars for officials. It shows false entries regarding certain of the transactions here recorded, and a complete failure of record keeping regarding other matters.

"The record indicates, furthermore, in addition to the assignment of large amounts of city equipment, the probability that the Work Projects Administration was charged for at least part of the trucking costs of carrying the 9,000 stolen city paving blocks from the Gulden Avenue storage yard to Lake Mahopac, 54 miles away. About 8 trips were apparently made by heavy trucks on this part of the project, and the records of the Work Projects Administration for November indicate the possibility that this trucking was charged to them. No jurisdiction existed in the civil service commission to examine this phase of the case, however, and specific information in my possession in this regard is withheld for fear of aiding the establishment of an alibi.

"TELLS OF THREATS

"Since January 16, when this story was first completely in my possession, I have been assailed by many threats and entreaties to suppress it, on the ground, among others, that it might embarrass the national administration in the midst of its war effort to have the chairman of the Democratic National Committee so involved.

"I have carefully considered these threats and entreaties at length, and have rejected them. Full public information is, to my mind, the bulwark of democracy. It is therefore my view that the public is absolutely entitled to know these facts, casting light as they do upon the character of one of their national leaders in this crisis, and that a great President, absorbed with the tribulations of a terrible world war, is entitled to political leadership superior to that emanating from Lake Mahopac.

"If this story assists to either end, I shall feel amply rewarded for the personal cost at which I made it public.

"The mayor has had this information for nearly 4 months."

CIVIC GROUPS PRESS FLYNN INVESTIGATION

Although the March Bronx grand jury has handed up a second presentment clearing Democratic National Chairman Edward J. Flynn in the use of city paving blocks and laborers on his Lake Mahopac estate, the critical reaction of civic groups showed today that they have no intention of dropping the matter.

Prof. Herman A. Gray and Sydney S. Baron, of the citizens committee to reopen the Flynn case, called the new presentment "blundering and brazen."

THREATS ALLEGED

They said that there were "threats of contempt or criminal proceedings" against the juror who in an affidavit to the committee last week stated that District Attorney Samuel J. Foley's advice to the grand jury had "prevented it from seriously considering an indictment," and that it took the grand jury 10 hours yesterday to convince the "recalcitrant" juror he acted under "misapprehension."

Revelation of the juror's name to the grand jury was forced by the grand jury through its subpena power, the committee spokesmen said. They added they would give Governor Lehman reasonable time to answer their request, based on the juror's statement, to order a new investigation of the Flynn case, and if they met with a refusal or received no answer they would consider what steps to take to force a reopening of the investigation.

George H. Hallett, Jr., secretary of the Citizens Union, which twice asked Governor Lehman to supersede Mr. Foley, announced that the executive committee would meet later in the day to discuss the Flynn case, in particular, the application of Robert L. Moran, Bronx Borough works commissioner, for retirement.

He said the union probably would urge the board of estimate at its meeting tomorrow to investigate Mr. Moran's part in the case before it grants him a pension.

LEOPARD'S SPOTS UNCHANGED

Speaking of the grand jury's new presentment, Mr. Hallett said:

"Apparently the leopard hasn't changed his spots. It is more of the same thing."

Paul J. Kern, ousted head of the municipal civil service commission, who was the first to expose the Flynn case, commented:

"Two coats of whitewash on Mr. Flynn will not conceal what one coat failed to hide: that is, city-owned paving blocks were laid by city employees with city equipment at Mr. Flynn's Lake Mahopac estate November 14, 15, 17, and 18, 1941, and that no restitution of any kind had been made until I exposed this case more than 2 months later."

The statement issued by Professor Gray and Mr. Baron follows:

"We expected that the dirty old whitewash would get a new coat, but nothing quite as blundering and brazen as this. On Friday morning we made public a sworn statement, voluntarily made by a grand juror, that Foley advice to the grand jury had prevented it from seriously considering an indictment. If that statement were untrue, Foley could and should have denied it promptly. He hasn't done so yet. The jury itself, at Foley's call, met Monday morning in extraordinary session for more than 3 hours. But it couldn't produce so simple a thing as a denial. Instead it forced the revelation of the juror's name through its subpena power.

"Meanwhile there were threats of contempt or criminal proceedings against the juror. Then followed a continuous session of 10 hours on Tuesday before the juror could be convinced that he had acted under 'misapprehension.' Apparently it was a hard nut to crack. What happened behind that closed door? What arguments were used to persuade the juror of his 'error'?

"Foley can tell us. He isn't a grand juror and may speak freely. Let him tell.

"When the juror's statement was made public we offered to present him to the Governor so that he could tell his story. Wouldn't that have been the better way?

"We look to the Governor for action. It must now be clear who it is who is undermining our judicial administration—whether it is the termites working in the dark or the 'well-meaning citizens' who seek to let in light and air."

CONDUCT IS DEFENDED

In its second presentment, the Bronx grand jury defended its conduct during the investigation, excoriating the press and the citizens' committee.

JUROR MADE RESEARCH

The juror's affidavit pointed out that Mr. Foley told the jury that he and his "capable" staff would go through the evidence in the Kern and Herlands investigations and "would bring to the attention of the grand jury any discrepancies which might be found."

"From some personal research I made in the Herlands testimony," the juror stated, "I do not think that that promise was carried out, especially with regard to one very important instance." This brought this reply, in last night's presentment:

"Upon consideration of paragraph 4 of the affidavit, we find that all of the discrepancies which were known to us were brought to the attention of the respective witnesses by the district attorney or by individual members of the grand jury and each point cleared up to our satisfaction and there can be no criticism concerning this point."

"This grand jury refuses to be coerced by any politically minded group of politically motivated individuals," the presentment concluded. "The grand jury clearly and concisely set forth its findings in its prior presentment; it represented their views then and does so now."

THE WHITEWASH IS GETTING THIN

Ed "Paving Blocks" Flynn's golfing partner and political man Friday, District Attorney Samuel J. Foley, of the Bronx, reached the conclusion that his coat of whitewash which his grand jury applied to the Democratic national chairman wasn't sticking any too well. The grand jury had been forced by publicity to investigate the theft of city-owned paving blocks, which later were laid by city labor in a courtyard in Flynn's country estate. Flynn made restitution after the graft was exposed and the grand jury brought in the strange report that although the crime had been committed, no one was indictable for it.

Much light was thrown on the incident when one of the grand jurors made an affidavit that Flynn's district attorney, Foley, had instructed the jurors that an indictment could not be voted if allegedly stolen property had been returned before the grand jury indicted. That is the old pickpocket's defense of offering to return the victim's wallet if he will refrain from testifying in court and has no standing whatever in the law.

When the affidavit was made public Mr. Foley called his grand jury back into session. There was no further attempt to investigate Flynn. Instead, the grand juror who spilled the beans was, according to members of the New York Citizens' committee, threatened with citation for contempt or criminal prosecution in an effort to force him to withdraw his statement.

Foley's first coat of whitewash couldn't conceal Flynn's venality and the second only served to wash off the first. In the words of Paul J. Kern, who was fired from his New York City job by Flynn's ally, Mayor LaGuardia, for exposing the scandal, the net result of the whole proceeding is to establish in Flynn's borough of the Bronx that stealing from the city is not a serious offense but exposure of the theft is.

A SECOND PAIL OF WHITEWASH

The Bronx grand jury has met again and once more has whitewashed the Honorable Edward J. Flynn, sage of the Bronx, grand panjandrum of the Democratic National Committee and present owner of the 8,000 Belgian paving blocks that mysteriously disappeared from the city's store yards last November. More in sorrow than in anger the grand jury has pointed out that whoever questions its verdict is a nasty man, and that its member who (counter to rules and regulations) made a statement which implied that the jury had been instructed how it should act in the matter of the Belgian paving blocks was nothing but an ignoramus who didn't know the law when he met it face to face in the jury room, and who, besides speaking out of turn, said things which he had no business to say and which, therefore, were not true. With heroic tenacity the grand jury reaffirmed its previous findings in all and every particular. By implication, the Honorable Eddy Flynn is now so white and pure that even the cherubim and seraphim will be envious of him.

This is all very well as an example of table-thumping self-exculpation in the face of criticism which has been as bitter as it has been devastating. Many a child has used the same tactics when told he has made a mistake. Lewis Carroll, in the Hunting of the Snark, quotes "this man that they used to call dunce" as saying:

" 'Tis the note of the jubjub; keep count, I entreat;
You will find I have told it you twice.
'Tis the song of the jubjub. The proof is complete
If only I've stated it thrice."

All that now remains is for the grand jury to convene a third time and a third time to say that all is rosy in the otherwise festered Bronx, and the proof will be complete.

What the gentlemen of the jury, like the Governor and the Bronx district attorney, overlook is that the presentment which has been reaffirmed is in itself a severe indictment. The presentment finds that approximately 8,000 second-hand granite paving blocks, the property of the city of New York, were transported from the city to Mr. Flynn's Lake Mahopac estate and were laid by city workmen who had been transported in city cars. This confirms the charge made before the grand jury met. The presentment then proceeds to recite that "after the issuance of subpenas by the civil service commission indicated that an investigation was forward, all of the city employees who worked at Mahopac received checks covering their full time at the city rate of pay, and approximately 8,000 blocks were returned to the city yards." In other words, when it became apparent that this utterly irregular transaction might become a public scandal, restitution was made to the city. Yet we are expected to believe that this work, which was done by city employees on the estate of Mr. Edward J. Flynn, was not done by them at his request. Apparently Commissioner Moran and his foreman, from the office of the Bronx borough president, supervised the work for purely altruistic reasons, because they loved their friend and protector, Mr. Flynn, so dearly, and suspected that he would be surprised and pleased to find his courtyard paved with city blocks by city employees when he returned from sunning himself in Florida.

The grand jury can reaffirm its presentment a hundred times without convincing the people that mere repetition makes the proof complete. It is a little too much to expect New Yorkers to ignore the fact that the district attorney who had charge of the case, as well as the judge before whom the presentment was handed down, together with one of the principal individuals who took part in the laying of the blocks—Mr. Robert J. Moran—were close political and personal associates of the chairman of the Democratic National Committee on whose property the blocks were laid—as is Governor Lehman, who has done his share to shield Mr. Flynn from a fair and impartial investigation.

DIPLOMATIC SURPRISE—FLYNN SAYS HE'S BEEN NAMED AMBASSADOR—AUSTRALIA-BOUND

(By James M. Minifie)

Announcement by Edward J. Flynn, retiring chairman of the Democratic National Committee, that he had been chosen as President Roosevelt's ambassador and personal representative and as Minister to Australia was received with surprise in American and British circles here yesterday.

Flynn at a press conference in New York, had issued a statement saying:

"The President has today appointed me his ambassador and personal representative, and will send to the Senate on Monday my nomination as Minister Plenipotentiary to Australia.

"I have called a meeting of the Democratic National Committee for Monday, January 18, 1943, at 10:30 a. m. at the Mayflower Hotel, Washington, D. C.

"At that meeting I will resign as chairman of the Democratic National Committee.

"I have also called a meeting of the executive committee of the democratic county committee of Bronx County for tomorrow, Saturday, at 11 a. m., at which time I will resign as chairman of the executive committee of the democratic county committee of Bronx County."

Flynn said he understood President Roosevelt would give out the text of the letter in Washington yesterday, in which he said it would be explained that "I have more or less a roving commission in the South Pacific as the President's personal representative and ambassador."

The White House was obviously a little put out at being beaten to the gun on the announcement. No confirmation of the nomination was available there, although it was not denied. William D. Hassett, White House secretary, said: "There will be nothing from the White House tonight on it."

Asked whether it was not somewhat unusual for the announcement of an appointment of this nature to come from the recipient rather than the White House, Hassett said: "I shall let you be the judge of that."

It was treated with outright skepticism at the Canadian Legation, where a representative of the senior Dominion pointed out that "surely the word 'Ambassador' must be wrong. There is no law, of course, but the invariable custom of the junior members of the Commonwealth has been to send and receive ministers, not ambassadors."

At the Australian Legation, officials at first turned down inquirers with the formal "No comment," but when asked if they knew Flynn, replied: "Well, he is a public figure to some extent. His name is known."

State Department officials declined to be drawn into any discussion of the nomination, pointing out that this was a purely White House matter. No comment could be obtained on reports that earlier proposals to appoint Flynn to one of the smaller South or Central American republics had been sidetracked by the State Department.

President Roosevelt previously has given the rank of ambassador to personal representatives sent abroad, as in the recent case of William Phillips, veteran diplomat, who on last December 11 was sent to troubled India as the President's personal envoy.

Earlier, Myron C. Taylor had been given a similar title, with unofficial rank as ambassador for social purposes, when he was sent to the Vatican.

But the Flynn appointment, as announced by Flynn, would be in a different category, since in neither of the earlier cases was there an American Minister already on the ground.

The present Minister to Australia is Nelson T. Johnson, who is a career diplomatist, with long experience in China before he was appointed to his present post. It is believed that he will retain that post.

Flynn said he expected to leave for Australia the first week in February.

"I am very happy," he declared. "I think it is a splendid opportunity to do a great deal of work connected with the war."

However, there have been strong reports in the Capital that Postmaster General Frank C. Walker would become chairman if Flynn resigned.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I do not wish to take the time of the Senate at this moment to discuss the nomination of Mr. Flynn to be Minister to Australia. I realize, as we all do, I suppose, that the fact that Mr. Flynn was involved in some way in the use of some paving blocks in the State of New York constitutes a convenient political peg upon which to hang criticism. I have no knowledge of that transaction except as I have received, from one who knows, information which I regard as reliable. The matter involved was investigated by two grand juries in the State of New York. I suppose at least on the surface, and prima facie, we have to assume that those grand juries were honest. Whether it is necessary to investigate again before a grand jury of New York I do not know, and it is not any concern of mine whether the processes of justice in New York City or New York State require further grand jury investigation.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. The nomination of Mr. Flynn has been sent to the Senate by the President, and it has been referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. I think the Senator from New Hampshire at least might await the investigation and report of that committee before he comes forth with a tirade against Mr. Flynn. I realize that the Senator from New Hampshire will get the first headlines in the papers tomorrow by his attack upon Mr. Flynn, and that is always a position of advantage; but in all sincerity it seems to me that the Senator from New Hampshire and the Senate itself might well await the action of the Committee on Foreign Relations. I can state to the Senator, not only on my own behalf, as I happen to be a member of the committee, but I can assure him also, I think, on behalf of the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], that whatever may be involved touching the propriety of this appointment, or the efficiency or the qualifications of Mr. Flynn to be Minister to Australia, will be inquired into by the committee to which the nomination has been referred. It seems to me we might very well await the findings of that committee with respect to the matter.

Mr. BRIDGES. Will the Senator yield now?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. The Senator says the Senator from New Hampshire might well have waited until the Foreign Relations Committee had acted. Let me say that it might have been proper for Mr. Flynn to have waited until Mr. Roosevelt sent in his nomination, rather than make the announcement himself, which is the customary procedure.

Mr. BARKLEY. In other words, the Senator from New Hampshire is taking Mr. Flynn, whom he criticizes, as an example for what he does here now in advance of the action of the committee.

Mr. BRIDGES. I hope that if the majority leader looks into this case throughly, and finds the facts of it, he will be leading the opposition against Mr. Flynn.

Mr. BARKLEY. I make no prediction about that. I shall be governed by the facts, and I shall be governed by them, I hope, in fairness and in a judicial manner, and not by reason of political prejudice.

Mr. BRIDGES. I am sure the Senator will not have any political prejudice against Mr. Flynn. I am very sure of that.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator from New Hampshire is more certain of that than he is of many other things which have happened in the Senate which have been sponsored and discussed by the Senator from New Hampshire. I wish to say that I have appreciated the attitude of the Senator from New Hampshire on many things which have been before the Senate of the United States. He has in many instances and in many situations exhibited a broad-minded statesmanship which I have admired, and it is for that reason that I adjure him, if I may use such a word, to be equally judicious and fair in his attitude in this matter.

Mr. BRIDGES. I certainly shall be, and I hope the Senator will adopt the same fair attitude.

Mr. BARKLEY. I shall do that.

Mr. BRIDGES. I shall be interested in the attitude of the Senator from Kentucky and of some of his associates, one of whom—and I hope he is on the floor now—gave an endorsement of Mr. Flynn, which I read in the newspapers. I was certainly amazed that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] should be endorsing "Boss" Flynn. I was not surprised at some of the others who endorsed him, but I was surprised at the endorsement by the Senator from New Mexico, whom I hold in high esteem and who is known to be the author of acts to clean up politics. How he could come out for "Boss" Flynn is more than I can understand.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have said all I care to say about the matter.

EPIC OF A BATTLESHIP—TRIBUTE TO AMERICAN OFFICERS AND MEN

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, out of the vast movements, skirmishes, and battles which are war there emerges from time to time a decisive action—an epic of courage, bravery, and precision which marks a guide post, a turning point in a great struggle. Such an epic action has recently been brought to the notice of the American people by the publication of the daring exploits of Captain Gatch and his crew aboard a United States battleship somewhere in the southwest Pacific.

Mr. President, these are the exploits of a battleship—that much-maligned weapon which our armchair strategists have loudly proclaimed to be an obsolete and utterly useless weapon, untenable in the face of combined sea and air attack. Senators, when the complete history of this war shall have been written we shall find that the battleship has more than justified itself as an essential component of that important concept of "balanced military strength" which Admiral Woodward has so recently and so ably described.

Some time before this story was released for public consumption I received a graphic account of all its glowing details from the lips of a young, alert junior officer who had participated in these actions. This young man had traveled the world over on his own initiative—working his way from port to port during his summer vacations away from college. He is only one of the many thousands of this type of sturdy, young Americans who have so bravely responded to the needs of their country—the type of young American in whom we may all take unbounded pride. What he and others like him are doing all across this embattled world has been very vividly portrayed by this newspaper account of the bravery and daring exhibited by Captain Gatch and his indomitable crew.

That young junior officer is my son.

When this epic battle had ended in the complete and frenzied rout of the enemy, my son's ship put into an American port. After taking leave of his officers and friends, my son proceeded homeward by the first possible means, arriving there in the bleak, gray hours of the early morning. Anxious to see his family, and knowing how much his homecoming meant to me, he roused me from a sound slumber. It was 3:15 a. m. After the great joy of our renewed meeting had somewhat subsided, he unfolded to me the details of this great engagement. He told me of the heroism, courage, and resolution of American officers and men; of their gallant exploits in a violent, seething storm of hell and fire; of the wounds which man and officer bore without flinching from the fight; of the deep respect and abiding faith which all the ship's crew held for their fighting skipper.

What a sterling leader this Captain Gatch. What a gallant captain he, who built up within his brave crew such a profound respect, such an abiding confidence, that they would sail willingly with him into the jaws of lurking death. Such leadership as this must not go uncited and unsung. It is such wise and confidence-born leadership as this that will lead America into that better and more productive era which lies ahead. My son also told me of the heavy destruction wrought upon the enemy, or his ultimate flight, and of our relentless pursuit of his fleeing remnants. This stirring account was not completed until the dawn had fully ripened.

Senators, that was a thrilling story, such a story as can be told by every American father and mother who has listened to the experiences of gallant sons who have been in action on the fighting fronts. It is proof positive that in spite of the many dour rumblings we have heard about the weakness and frivolity of the young American, we may now take great heart in the knowledge that when the chips are down, when the battle lines are drawn, the young American has got it in him. He is a fighting man. He will engage and defeat the enemy.

These are the young men—men from the farm, the factory, and the countinghouse—whose chorus of "Aye, aye!" rang out across the churning ocean when their gallant skipper, Gatch, asked them if they were willing to sail into the menacing mouth of an enemy-laid trap. These are the same young Americans whom our boastful and misguided enemies held up to the world as being so soft, so fragile, so afraid to fight. The answer to those hollow epithets is now being heard round the world. To all those who may still doubt the ability of young America to fight, I say let them read the record—that glorious record written in the rock cliffs of Bataan, the steaming jungles of New Guinea, the endless sands of North Africa, the vast expanses of the seven seas, and the trackless air fronts all across the world.

Yes, the exploits of this generation of Americans are being written in every outpost of the globe. Their deeds are no less worthy, no less honorable than were the deeds of the great American heroes who have gone before.

Let us honor, let us pay tribute to these gallant men. They bear well the standard of courage and freedom which was passed on to them by their unfaltering forefathers. These young men shall not falter in the great cause. With continued victories such as this daring triumph scored in the waters off the Solomons, they shall forever preserve the name of glorious America.

Mr. President, because I believe that this notable victory represents an outstanding epic in the history of sea warfare, an epic which sounds the clarion call of an inevitable United Nations victory in this titanic struggle against tyranny, and because I believe that the inspiring deeds of gallantry and courage performed by these young Americans under the hell of heavy fire will be indelibly written into the history of our times, I feel that the account of this far-reaching victory should become a recognized part of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

When I speak of victory, I do not speak merely of that complete and total military destruction which must come to Tojo and Hitler, and to the evil and oppressive forces which they have loosed upon the world. I mean that full and productive victory above and beyond this military struggle. I mean that social victory of growth, progress, and security, wherein we shall conquer the forces of poverty, unemployment, and their attendant chaos. That is the final victory—the only victory worthy of the price. Wise policy, progressive outlook, and determined application will gain that victory for us. The young men who fight and die on the fields of battle are doing their part. Let us here not fail to do ours.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the article portraying this great event, which was written by Hugh Morrow, and which appeared in the January 4 issue of the Philadelphia Inquirer.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES BATTLESHIP'S SAGA—DOWNED 32 JAP PLANES AND SANK 4 WARCRAFT

(By Hugh Morrow)

WASHINGTON, January 3.—The Navy today proudly revealed the thrilling story of a United States battleship in the southwest Pacific which shot down 32 Jap planes and thwarted the heaviest air attack ever made on a battleship, and less than 3 weeks later sank 3 enemy cruisers and a destroyer or light cruiser.

It was a story of superb equipment—of 16-inch guns which wiped out the 3 Jap cruisers before the foe knew what was hitting them, of antiaircraft guns which destroyed all 20 dive bombers in the first wave of raiders, and allowed only 2 of the 64 planes which came over in the next 2 waves to get within striking distance. Even then, 1 of those 2 planes was destroyed, and its torpedo churned away harmlessly through the sea. In all, the battleship sank or damaged 8 Jap warships.

But it was even more a tale of intelligent and courageous men—of nearly 2,000 voices chorusing "Aye, aye!" when the captain asked if the men were ready for battle; of green enlisted men and newly commissioned junior officers who fought like veterans; of Negro and Filipino mess boys who manned antiaircraft guns and kept them blazing while a Jap dive bomber cut loose a 500-pounder only 100 feet above their heads.

It also was the story of a square-jawed, 51-year-old fighting lawyer, who was stationed at the Philadelphia Navy Yard in 1922 and left his desk in the Judge Advocate General's office in Washington only last February to take over his wartime command at sea.

He is Capt. Thomas Leigh Gatch, of Annapolis, Md., who had an artery in his neck torn open and an arm left dangling uselessly when bomb fragments struck him during the air assault, yet was back on the job in the surface action which came 3 weeks later and turned what the Japs thought would be a trap for American ships into a blazing graveyard for the arrogant warriors of Nippon.

The story of Captain Gatch's ship is a spine-tingling chapter of the engagements leading up to and including the now famous battle of Guadalcanal, fought chiefly off Savo Island at the northern tip of Guadalcanal.

The outline of that battle—in which the Japs lost 28 ships, including a battleship and another battleship or heavy cruiser and we lost 9 ships—has been sketched in previous Navy communiqués.

But the story of the battleship, based largely on Captain Gatch's reports to the Navy Department, served to show even better than the statistical record the kind of men and ships that are going through hell for us—and perhaps, too, to settle the question of whether the battleship is obsolete.

First came the air attack, on October 26. American aircraft carriers, with protective forces, were moving out to meet three Japanese carriers coming from the north of the Solomons. Captain Gatch's battleship was escorting one of the big flat-tops.

"Ask the men if they are ready," Captain Gatch said quietly.

Over the public-address system, the communications officer read the captain's message.

From stem to stern, from engine room to conning tower, welled up the response to the bridge.

"Aye, aye!" chorused nearly 2,000 voices. The men were ready.

Then came the Japs. Downward screamed the planes bearing the insignia of the Rising Sun. The carrier was the first objective. Then the enemy flyers spotted the battleship. Visions of a second Repulse or Prince of Wales (British battleships sunk in the Java Sea) must have passed through their minds. Twenty dive bombers tore for the battlewagon.

But the Japs reckoned without the rows of antiaircraft guns bristling along the battleship's length. They weren't ready for the curtain of steel flung thousands of yards by the secondary battery of larger guns.

Captain Gatch gave his orders to the helmsman.

"Our ship was cutting circles and figure 8's and other maneuvers without names," he reported later. "I was more afraid of ramming the carrier we were protecting than of the attacking planes."

And from that wildly maneuvering warship, flaming steel poured into the heavens. One after another, every one of those 20 dive bombers was sent down flaming or disintegrating into the sea. The first wave was completely wiped out. Eight terrible minutes had elapsed—from 11:12 to 11:20 a. m.

Meanwhile, fighter planes were up from the carrier. They added to the terrific toll of Jap planes. Before the engagement was over, the Japs had lost more than 100 planes.

Half an hour later the second attack came. This time there were 40 torpedo planes and dive bombers. They maneuvered into position to strike together, dive bombers in the lead.

Once again glowing steel curved into the skies. Only one plane—a torpedo craft—got through. All the others fell into the sea or turned back.

But that torpedo plane caused an anxious moment on the battleship.

"It came at the stern of the ship," Captain Gatch reported. "It appeared that millions of tracer shells went right past that plane without hitting it, but some did strike it, and at the right time. They struck just before the pilot released his torpedo.

"The plane was jarred out of its line of flight and its torpedo was released well up in the air. It seemed that the torpedo would drop on the ship, but it passed over the fantail and fell in the sea on the other side aft. The plane's wings were shot off. It struck the water and sank."

About 20 minutes later came the third attack—at 12:19 p. m. It lasted 11 minutes—longer than either of the other two. Twenty-four dive bombers and torpedo planes staged the assault.

Apparently so he could look over his entire ship during the attack, since planes directly above cannot be seen from the bridge, Captain Gatch had left his armored battle station.

"I was out on the catwalk in front of the bridge, where I had no business to be," he said.

One dive bomber got through the antiaircraft fire.

"I saw its bomb released from not more than 100 feet above the forward part of the ship. I hoped it would strike a turret and not the deck, for it was a good-sized bomb, probably a 500-pounder, and it might blow a hole in the deck and kill people underneath; and certainly it would kill many in gun crews on the deck itself," Captain Gatch reported.

"The automatic guns forward were manned by mess attendants, some Filipinos, some Negroes. They never stopped firing for a second. Those men are good.

"The bomb did land on top of a turret. That was the only hit we took, and it was the one that got me."

Damage to the ship since has been repaired, the Navy said.

The bomb fragments and concussion, beside tearing open the captain's neck and ripping the muscles of his shoulder so his left arm hung injured, hurled the captain against the conning tower and knocked him unconscious. The executive officer took over command—and the attack passed. The Japs had had enough for 1 day.

In less than 3 weeks, although his left arm still dangled—and does today—Captain Gatch was spoiling for another fight.

"I don't expect you to strangle Japs," his admiral told him, so Captain Gatch took his battleship into its second action.

This was the night battle of November 14. It was the same battle in which the cruiser Boise, now under repairs at Philadelphia, and the cruiser San Francisco distinguished themselves, although these ships were not in the same task force as Captain Gatch's group of battleships and destroyers.

"We headed into Windy Gulch," Captain Gatch reported. (Windy Gulch is the Americans' name for the strait between Guadalcanal and Savo Islands.) "We got into a far corner and slowed down. We found no Japs, although we knew they were somewhere about waiting for us.

"They had set a trap, and we were trying to find it, so we could go into it and get caught. We wanted to get caught. They weren't expecting us [battleships]. They had set this trap for foxes and we didn't think it would hold bears."

Above the northern tip of Savo, the American ships turned west. The battleship's lookouts spotted enemy ships, faintly visible several miles away.

The big 16-inch guns of the battleship trained on their target. With an ear-splitting bellow, they hurled their deadly missiles over the sea. The shells landed on a large enemy cruiser, and set her afire. The flames lighted two smaller cruisers, following in a straight line.

The Jap cruisers never even got within range of the battleship. The Japs sent up a salvo of star shells, illuminating the sea as they searched for their invisible foe. The shells fell thousands of yards short of the battleship. All three enemy cruisers went down under the battleship's pounding fire.

"They never knew just what sank them," Captain Gatch reported.

"The enemy now sprang the trap he had set. Dead astern of us a destroyer or light cruiser was picked up. Our after turret fired three salvos. We could see the Jap burst into flame. His bow rose to 45°, and he went down stern first."

The American force then passed north of Savo and turned south into a passage west of the island. At full speed, destroyers leading, the force tore through the narrow, shoal-filled and dangerous waters. Near the southern end of the island, Jap cruisers and destroyers, waiting in ambush along the cliffs, launched a torpedo attack on the American destroyers.

Four searchlights from a Jap cruiser lighted Captain Gatch's battleship. Cruisers and a Jap battleship which steamed into the action opened fire.

"Within a second after the searchlights were on us," Captain Gatch said, "our secondary batteries opened up and their searchlights went out. Then 30 seconds later, our main batteries fired. We were fighting the cruisers.

"One of our own battleships ahead of us was pouring shells into the Jap battleship, but now and again the big enemy ship would turn one our way, until the United States battleship ahead silenced it."

One of the cruisers hit the conning tower of Captain Gatch's ship, starting a fire.

"I was on the catwalk," the captain said. "I'd been dying for a cigarette, and now I thought I could have one, so I drew my lighter.

"One of the men shouted, 'Captain, sir! You'll give away our position!' I just looked up at the flames near the top of our mast and finished the cigarette."

Then the battle was over. The fire on Captain Gatch's ship was extinguished. The battleship-destroyer force had sunk one Jap battleship (or heavy cruiser), three cruisers and one destroyer, and had damaged another battleship, a cruiser, and a destroyer.

Later, Captain Gatch sat down to write his report to the Navy Department—a report which he concluded with these words:

"Not one of the ship's company flinched from his post or showed the least disaffection."

ORDER FOR ADJOURNMENT TO THURSDAY

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, there is no business for the Senate to transact at this time. I understand the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS] desires to address the Senate at some length. I therefore ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of his address the Senate stand in adjournment until Thursday next at 12 o'clock noon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HILL in the chair). Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Kentucky that at the conclusion of the address to be made by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS] the Senate stand adjourned until Thursday next? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session,

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, under the resolution adopted earlier today, the Presiding Officer is authorized, on calendar days when there is no executive session, to refer nominations to the appropriate committees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The nominations have been appropriately referred.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I do not recall the provisions of the resolution. I suppose in essence it is the same as the resolution usually adopted at the beginning of a new Congress. I hope there will be no change in the practice which has heretofore prevailed with respect to nominations. At this particular time I have in mind four nominations which will be made. One of those nominations will be to fill the vacancy now existing in the Supreme Court. Another nomination is that of a former Member of the Senate to be Price Administrator, Office of Price Administration. Still another nomination is that of a former Senator to be a member of the Civil Aeronautics Board, and the fourth is that of Mr. Flynn to occupy a position in the Foreign Service. I want all those nominations to be referred to the appropriate committees.

Mr. BARKLEY. I can say to the minority leader that that action will be taken without request being made by any Member of the Senate. The resolution which I presented earlier today, and which was agreed to, is similar to the resolution which is always adopted at the beginning of each Congress, authorizing the Presiding Officer to refer Executive nominations to committees on days when there is no executive session. That is all it amounts to.

Mr. McNARY. Very well. My attention was distracted for a moment, but I thought that was the purpose the Senator had in mind. However, in order to avoid any hiatus occurring in the general arrangement, I want it understood that these four nominations particularly shall be referred to the appropriate committees for hearings.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The nominations in question have been appropriately referred.

ACTIVITIES OF THE BUREAU OF MINES

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, opinions have been voiced that this, the Seventy-eighth Congress, will be in session when the present mighty struggle against wrongdoing and oppression is ended. It is my sincere hope that such prediction will come to pass. But all of us are aware that before peace comes the United States and the United Nations must fight their way uphill against great odds and must free this terror-ridden world of the treachery, dishonesty, and back-stabbing policies of the Axis Nations. We must outfight the enemy wherever we find him, we must outproduce him, we must have weapons to return ten blows for every one received.

Many agencies of the Federal Government have been created to keep the war wheels of our Nation turning at a faster rate—the War Production Board, the War Manpower Commission, the Board of Economic Warfare, the Office of Defense Transportation, the Economic Stabilization Board, and the Metals Reserve Company, to mention a few. There is another Government agency—a long-established one—the Bureau of Mines of the Department of the Interior, which is right up there at the front in the job of keeping our fighting men supplied with weapons and materials.

As a member of the Committee on Mines and Mining, I wish to present for the benefit of the new Members of Congress and for my other colleagues a brief résumé of the aims and work of the Bureau of Mines, an agency which was created in 1910 and which I have watched with more than casual interest because I come from the important mining and industrial State of Pennsylvania and because my first job, when I was 11 years old, was that of an iron and steel worker at Sharon, Pa., and later in Pittsburgh, Pa.

BUREAU OF MINES ORGANIZED FOR WAR

The Bureau of Mines, as organized for war, conducts research in the fields of gaseous, liquid, and solid fuels and industrial explosives, develops and tests metallurgical processes, conducts far-reaching explorations of our mineral-bearing areas, aids producers of minerals and metals in overcoming production problems, and provides the mineral industries and such Government agencies as the War Production Board and the Army and the Navy with an up-to-the-minute economic and statistical picture of the flow of materials from the ground to the production line. The Bureau of Mines also produces helium for our fighting forces; it promotes health, safety, and efficiency in the mineral industries; makes plant-security studies; and controls all nonmilitary explosives and their ingredients to prevent sabotage and interruptions to the output of needed war minerals.

FIELD WORK

Only a small fraction of the Bureau's personnel is at the headquarters in Washington in order to administer the affairs of the organization, guide its policies, and maintain necessary contact with other war agencies. Its principal work is carried out in the field—the 48 States of the Union and the Territory of Alaska, where its engineers, chemists, metallurgists, and other experts work in close contact with the hundreds of thousands of men in the mineral industries who go underground every day to tap our mineral reserves, who work in the intense heat of blast furnaces and smelters, drill for oil, explore for nickel, chromium, or manganese or tear off the earth's crust with mighty power shovels in order to obtain millions of tons of rich coal, bauxite, copper, and other minerals.

Many months ago the Department of the Interior gave the Bureau of Mines the "go ahead" signal on a planned program to put every usable deposit of ore to work. In order to speed the cycle of mine to metal to war weapon, the Bureau established three regional offices to conduct the exploration work, and to operate its network of pilot mills and laboratories. These offices, each in charge of a regional engineer, are at Salt Lake City, Utah; Rolla, Mo.; and College Park, Md. At this moment crews of men, directed by the Bureau of Mines, are drilling, trenching, tunneling, and obtaining samples by other methods in mineral-producing areas in order to ascertain the nature and extent of each bed of ore and to uncover new beds which may contain quantities of metals useful in the war. They are building trails and roads on which to haul heavy equipment to exploration sites and are conferring with prospectors, operators, engineers, and others so as to get a clear-cut picture of the territory in which they are working. Meanwhile metallurgists in the laboratories and pilot plants are examining ore samples and testing ways of treating the ores to separate metals. When the facts are assembled, the Bureau lays its development plans before other Government agencies whose business it is to initiate and control the production and distribution of the strategic, critical, and essential materials. In many instances these proposals are complete. The cost figure for developing a deposit of ore is there in black and white. The suggested metallurgical process is submitted, together with the estimated tonnage to be expected from a certain ore bed, and with these data there is a recommendation for action.

PILOT PLANTS AND LABORATORIES

At this point I should like to mention a few of the Bureau's laboratories and pilot plants, so as to give a typical cross-section of some of the field work being performed in connection with the war-minerals-exploration program.

At Boulder City, Nev., modern pilot plants are operating day and night, utilizing electrical energy from Boulder Dam to make tests of western ores from which manganese, aluminum, magnesium, chromium, and cobalt can be obtained. As rapidly as these metallurgical processes are tested or developed, the results are made available to the mineral industries concerned and to the war agencies of the Government. Processes already in use likewise are studied so that kinks may be eliminated. The Bureau stands ready at all times to advise producers on methods of adapting new worth-while processes.

At Norris, Tenn., where hydroelectric power is available from the Norris Dam, the Bureau operates an electrotechnical laboratory for studying the preparation and leaching of soluble aluminates, alumina reduction, aluminum alloys, and the use of domestic minerals as refractories and insulators, electric furnace design, and the preparation of magnesium oxide and magnesium from domestic olivine.

At the Central Experiment Station at Pittsburgh, Pa., there are special projects, including work on carbon testers, methods of identifying scrap metals, methods of determining temperature of molten metal, and the measurement of the viscosity of molten metal. At Tuscaloosa, Ala., Berkeley, Calif., Minneapolis, Minn., Rolla, Mo., Reno, Nev., Pullman and Seattle, Wash., and at other places, the Bureau likewise is engaged in this broad, coordinated program of investigation, testing, and research to bring into use as quickly and economically as possible the domestic ores and other minerals which are most urgently needed to fight this war. Every month, as a result of the exploration work of the Bureau, tons of ore are added to the known reserves of the United States. Many of these deposits, which were overlooked in past years, are being worked and are producing metals which are helping to make tanks, planes, field telephones, guns, ships, and ammunition for us and our allies.

Some of the Bureau's laboratories and pilot plants are relatively new, but most of them have been operating for years. Thus it was that when Hitler invaded Poland in 1939, the Bureau of Mines already had initiated its work of exploring the vast reserves of ores in the United States, studying new beneficiation methods, improving older techniques, and preparing for the contingency when this Nation may be required to depend almost entirely on its domestic resources for war materials.

Much credit can be given the Bureau for its foresight and long-range planning, which already have paid the United Nations large dividends during the present war years. The Bureau is making a substantial contribution to America's war-time production. More war metals than this country ever had dreamed of producing poured out of our blast furnaces, our smelters, and our processing plants last year. There must be no letdown this year, next year, or so long as this war lasts. That is why Bureau of Mines experts and the hundreds of thousands of men in the industrial field must keep on working on an around-the-clock schedule to explore, develop, and utilize our mineral resources.

STRATEGIC MINERALS

Noting the war clouds hovering over Europe and Asia, the Bureau of Mines and the Geological Survey in February of 1939 issued a document termed "Report Upon Certain Deficient Strategic Minerals." In it the following statement appeared:

> This report discusses the situation of the United States with respect to seven of the minor metals that are so essential in modern industrial activity, that to do without them would require a drastic reorganization in present practices.

The metals listed were manganese, chromium, mercury, tungsten, nickel, tin, and antimony. Pointing out that these metals are essential in peace and vital in war, the Bureau then stated:

> In none of them is the United States self-sufficient. These facts indicate a situation that requires the earnest attention of those upon whom falls the responsibility for the national safety in any emergency that would cut us off from foreign sources of supply.

EXPLORATORY WORK

In the same year Congress passed the Strategic Materials Act, and the Bureau of Mines sent its engineers into the field with orders to map reserves of ores bearing those metals, instructed its metallurgists and chemists to find practical methods of beneficiating them, if possible, and to find possible substitutes. The list of minerals upon which the Bureau has concentrated its work has been increased since 1939, and noted gains have been made in virtually every field.

In the fiscal year 1942 alone several million tons of chromium ore were mapped in Montana, California, Oregon, and Alaska, and three of these deposits now are in production, furnishing chromium for valves, armor-piercing projectiles, armor plate, rifles, and other weapons.

The Bureau of Mines has informed me that in that 12-month period a good find of mercury ore was made in Idaho. Earlier several hundred thousand tons of lower-grade ore, capable of producing some 2.7 pounds of mercury per ton, had been indicated. Bureau engineers continued their quest and uncovered additional mercury ores of good commercial grade, and a bed of high-grade ore which contains several thousand tons, assaying about 8 pounds of mercury per ton. In Oregon a second discovery of commercial-grade ore was made by drilling in an old mine which had closed because of lack of ore.

In the fiscal year 1941 the largest and most important discovery of tungsten ore in the Nation's history was made by the Bureau of Mines and the Geological Survey. This rich deposit now is being developed for the war. In other explorations, the Bureau's engineers, I am advised, charted deposits which indicated probable tungsten ore reserves of 150,000 tons, with reasonable expectations of developing several hundred thousand tons more. Through this work of disclosing new reserves of tungsten ore, some mines, previously closed because it was thought the reserves were depleted, have reopened.

Basing its recommendations on exploratory work and metallurgical research, the Bureau has proposed building plants which would provide enough manganese from low-grade domestic ores to produce 87,000,000 tons of steel annually. Another recommendation was made for an alumina-production program to provide a gradual change from the use of high-grade bauxite to clays, thus making the United States independent of imported bauxite for aluminum. This plan, like the manganese program, was submitted to the War Production Board. By drilling, trenching, and other exploratory work in Arkansas, Georgia, Oklahoma, and other States, Bureau engineers have made known new deposits of bauxite estimated to contain about 5,000,000 tons of ore.

An iron ore deposit of moderate size was indicated after Bureau engineers explored an iron-bearing formation in California. Small deposits were explored in two other areas in Arizona and Oregon, respectively.

The magnitude of the exploratory work being conducted by the Bureau of Mines is revealed in the following figures given me by the Bureau: In a 1-year period alone 740 deposits containing strategic minerals were given preliminary examination and were indexed and rated as to their relative importance.

In slightly more than 2 years the Bureau's exploratory work has increased the estimated reserves of strategic, critical, and essential ores by more than 65,000,000 tons. Last year the reserves of chromite, manganese, mercury, iron ore, tungsten, nickel, bauxite, and high-alumina clay were increased by more than 41,000,000 tons. About 2,000 deposits of war minerals have been studied by mining and metallurgical staffs. During the past 6 months alone active exploration has been in progress on more than 100 of these in 25 States and Alaska for more than 30 metals and nonmetallic minerals. Since 1939 about 180 exploratory projects have been undertaken by the Bureau.

ORE RESERVES CHARTED

Listed among the reserves of commercial or near-commercial grade ores charted by the Bureau are tungsten, 1,000,000 tons; chromite, 4,000,000 tons; manganese, 10,000,000 tons; antimony, 2,000,000 tons; mercury, 1,000,000 tons, and iron ore, 37,000,000 tons. The Bureau estimates that more than 18,000,000 tons of various metals can be extracted from the ore reserves mapped out thus far in its exploratory program.

In fulfilling their assignment, Bureau engineers have overcome many difficulties. Operations were carried on in the sub-zero winter temperatures of Alaska and in the intense summer heat of the desert. To give an idea of the magnitude of the program, the Bureau since mid-1939 has drilled more than 1,000 holes for a total of more than 200,000 feet, and obtained more than 60,000 samples of ore. The records also show that 62 camps have been built and 70 miles of road and some 50 miles of trails have been built; more than 175,000 linear feet and 140,000 cubic yards of trenching was done; and shafts totaling nearly 18,000 feet were sunk.

Meanwhile, the Bureau has been lending a helping hand to prospectors and others who carry on their own exploratory work. In 12 months, more than 7,000 samples of ore were submitted to the Bureau for analysis.

METALLURGICAL ADVANCEMENT

Since many of the ores which have been charted in the United States are complex or low grade, or both, they would lie idle unless methods were developed for treating them. Thus, the Bureau simultaneously is conducting far-reaching studies so that these ores will give up their wealth of metal. Methods already have been developed for the concentration of various manganese ores to ferrograde manganese; for the recovery of chromium and ferrograde chromite from low-grade chromite ores; for the production of magnesia and magnesium; for the extraction of alumina from some clays and alunite; for increased production of lead; and for the beneficiation of ores containing antimony, copper, iron, mercury, tungsten, nickel, zinc, and fluorspar.

Throughout 1942 the Bureau reported regularly to other war agencies the progress of its metallurgical research. For example, further improvements were made in the Bureau's electrolytic manganese process to provide additional impetus to the production of this vital metal from low-grade and complex domestic ores. A company in Tennessee turned out high-purity manganese with this process, and the Bureau continued the production of the metal in one of its own pilot plants. Manganese produced by the Bureau is being utilized by the Federal Government for lend-lease and to replace nickel in the 5-cent coin, thus freeing more nickel for use in war matériel.

In order to study the recovery and processing of minerals from the Pacific Northwest on a broader scale the Bureau has been authorized to establish an electrodevelopment laboratory in that region, where hydroelectric power is available from Bonneville and Grand Coulee dams. Plans call for a staff of metallurgists to seek improved methods of recovering magnesium and aluminum from the ores of the Pacific Northwest and to conduct research in the processing of tungsten, chromium, manganese, vanadium, and other strategic and critical minerals found in that area.

A commercial-size pilot plant for investigating the best methods of producing sponge iron on a commercial scale will be operated by the Bureau of Mines at Laramie, Wyo. On the basis of its studies to date, the Bureau concludes that sponge iron can be utilized as a suitable substitute for scrap iron to mix with ordinary pig iron in manufacturing steel. Sponge iron is the product of a process whereby metallic iron is obtained directly from ore without going through the liquid state. This method, Bureau metallurgists believe, is adaptable to smaller and less expensive plants than the standard blast-furnace operation.

NONMETALLICS RESEARCH

The problem of removing impurities from low-grade bauxite has been tackled, and improved methods of washing the ore have resulted. Under a special appropriation from Congress, studies have been completed on processes for extracting alumina from siliceous bauxite. The lime-soda sintering process was one of the methods thought most practical, and processes were worked out to give high recoveries of alumina of satisfactory grade. As a result, this process is to be tested in a pilot plant. Federal war agencies constantly call upon the Bureau for assistance in the field of nonmetallics, and the Bureau's experts respond promptly.

Anticipating that the metallurgical demands for bauxite will make it necessary to substitute clay for bauxite in making aluminum sulfate for treating water and manufacturing paper, the Bureau has studied methods of treating clays to provide suitable substitutes. Properly calcined kaolin can now be recommended as a substitute for bauxite.

Other problems in the field of nonmetallics have been solved with equal speed and efficiency. Substitutes have been found for Indian kyanite, used for special refractories and formerly imported from Calcutta. The most attractive one is topaz, which can be produced commercially in South Carolina.

Before this Nation entered the war a shortage of flake graphite was foreseen. This material, normally imported from Madagascar, is used to make crucibles and stoppers for steel ladles. Bureau engineers attacked this problem and found that Alabama graphite is capable of supplying domestic needs. The war cut off the importation of Belgian glass sand which supplied Pacific coast glass plants. Again the Bureau sent its experts into the field to solve the problem. Some west-coast sands, when treated by scrubbing off iron stains and removing other undesirable materials, were found to be suitable substitutes, and one of the larger glass companies is constructing a plant in California which will use methods developed by the Bureau and will produce high-grade glass sand in large quantities.

The known reserve of ceramic talc suitable for radio insulators was found inadequate for expanded needs. The Geological Survey searched for proper grades of talc, and the Bureau of Mines tested the samples to remove impurities. As a result, increased production of radio ceramic talc along the lines recommended by the Bureau of Mines is expected.

Substitutes were needed for magnesite brick, a refractory made of material formerly imported from Austria and Greece. Deposits of volcanic rock, found in the Eastern States and in the far West, were studied, and methods were developed for producing forsterite from these. Tests show that forsterite is a workable substitute for magnesite brick.

ANTHRACITE LABORATORY

Mr. President, early in January 1941, Representative FENTON, of Fennsivania, introduced in the House, and I introduced in the Senate, a bill providing for a comprehensive study of the anthracite region to aid in the solution of its economic problems; for the establishment and operation of a research laboratory in the Pennsylvania anthracite region; for the development of new uses and markets; for improvement in health and safety in mining; and for the maximum usefulness in the war effort of human resources.

In 1941, by joint resolution, the Seventy-seventh Congress created the Federal Anthracite Coal Commission to study the problems of the hard-pressed anthracite industry. President Roosevelt appointed me as one of the two Members of the Senate on that Commission. The Commission found that the vast anthracite industry is fighting great odds, but that it can be helped to its feet with the aid of research and economic and technologic investigations. The Commission recommended that such work be undertaken. The Congress, in the last few days it was in session, passed an act which authorizes the Bureau of Mines to establish a research laboratory in the anthracite field. It was proposed that the Bureau approach the industry's problems from four angles:

First, technologic research seeking new outlets for anthracite in the iron, chemical, and gas industries; second, a study of flood, health, and safety conditions; third, engineering studies pointing toward increased production per man-day; and fourth, studies emphasizing the development of equipment and dealer organizations to make the use of anthracite in homes more convenient and thus to conserve petroleum.

The anthracite industry produced about 59,000,000 tons last year, compared with a peak output of about 100,000,000 tons in 1917. Few persons realize the many problems encountered in the anthracite region. To mention one, an average of 33 tons of water must be pumped from the mines for each ton of anthracite produced. We need more and more anthracite for the war, and the Bureau of Mines should be enabled to do its part in efforts to help the industry fill the gap created by the shortage of fuel oil on the east coast and to lessen the burden of the byproduct coke ovens using bituminous coal and facing peak demands from blast furnaces. The President has advised me that because of the critical need of materials which go into construction he does not favor building the anthracite research laboratory during the war. Nevertheless, if the Bureau were given the $175,000 in operating funds authorized in the act, it could initiate research of value in the prosecution of the war with the use of existing facilities pending the construction of the anthracite research station.

CONSULTING SERVICE

Throughout 1942 the Bureau of Mines accelerated its work in the field of solid fuels. Because of the increased number of requests resulting directly from the war, it expanded its consulting service for all Federal Government agencies regarding the purchase and operation of steam generating and heating equipment, the purchase and analysis of coal, and the conditioning of water used in boilers.

For many months, the Bureau of Mines has been analyzing water samples from scores of Army posts and stations to determine ways of lengthening the life of the equipment and solving operating problems. Virtually all these posts and stations are equipped with the Bureau's test kit, which permits the operating engineer to conduct his own tests and thus control the chemicals fed to the boilers to minimize the accumulation of sludge or other undesirable materials. Because of this service, the efficiency of boilers has been increased and the life of the equipment has been extended many months.

In a 12-month period alone, several thousand coal analyses were made. Approximately one-half of these were for the War and Navy Departments in their purchases of large quantities of coal. The task of making these analyses for the awarding of Government coal contracts is immense. Bureau of Mines coal-sampling trucks in 1 year visited nearly 500 mines in a dozen States and collected more than 1,500 samples. The result has been that many thousands of dollars have been saved because the Government has been able to get the right kind of coal for the particular purpose that was sought. In one instance alone, a saving of about $300,000 was effected.

In the West the building of new blast furnaces for the production of pig iron has created a demand for western coals which have satisfactory coking properties. Field exploratory crews and the Bureau's coal carbonization laboratory in Pittsburgh, Pa., were given this job. Experiments revealed that certain coals of Oklahoma, Arkansas, Utah, New Mexico, Colorado, and Wyoming will meet the needs.

While this work was going on the Bureau began expanding its studies of the coking properties of coals of the United States, a project begun in 1927 and which has proved extremely valuable in the selection of coals for blast furnace coke.

Consumers of coal and its byproducts constantly seek and obtain assistance from the Bureau in solving operating and procurement problems. Cooperating with the Office of Solid Fuels Coordinator of the Interior Department, the Bureau of Mines has inaugurated a survey of coke ovens and blast furnace operations to improve both the quality and quantity of metallurgical coke so that the production of pig iron can be increased.

Only recently the Bureau created the Division of Solid Fuel Utilization for War. This is providing technical information and other data for storing coal and preventing spontaneous combustion and degradation of the product. A staff of consultants is employed to inform industries which coals can be adopted as substitutes for regularly used types, and how operating cycles should be altered so as to permit utilization of the alternate product.

PETROLEUM RESEARCH

From the War and Navy Departments, the Office of Petroleum Administrator for War, and other Government agencies, the Bureau of Mines constantly receives requests for technical advice and information on supplying petroleum products for war. In addition to the information available at a moment's notice—due to the Bureau's many years of research in petroleum and natural gas—petroleum engineers are making special studies and surveys to provide additional data when the need arises. Only recently, they surveyed more than 200 crude oils and the products from 25 condensate plants to determine the content of high-octane aviation gasoline stock. They also inaugurated a series of tests to determine the most effective blending of various components of 100-octane aviation gasoline, and initiated a study to ascertain the components of the reservoir fluids and the available reserves in certain fields which contain material needed in aviation gasoline.

Another vital job of these engineers is that of evaluating the sources and means of extracting war materials from petroleum, including butadiene, a source of synthetic rubber.

To stimulate crude-oil production in Appalachian oil fields for the war and to further the conservation of petroleum, the Bureau of Mines opened a petroleum field office at Franklin, Pa., in April 1942. Staffed with Bureau engineers, this office is supplying technical information to determine the best and most practical methods of repairing wells and repressuring the sands to permit maximum recovery of crude oil for our war planes and other battle equipment. In the petroleum experiment stations at Bartlesville, Okla., and Laramie, Wyo., the entire chemistry and refining program is being devoted to a search for answers to questions regarding the essential nature of crude oils, natural gas, condensates, and their components. One contribution is the Bureau's tests to determine the changes that may be expected in aviation gasoline and evaporation losses of blend components in storage.

LIQUID FUELS FROM COAL

The scarcity of fuel oil and gasoline on the Atlantic coast and in the Pacific Northwest—brought about by transportation difficulties—has called increasing attention to an important phase of research which the Bureau has been conducting for several years, namely, the studies on extracting liquid fuels from coal. Although the immediate application in the United States of the known processes of converting coal to liquid fuels is not contemplated and may not even be feasible in existing circumstances, despite sensational newspaper stories that would lead one to believe to the contrary, this work is nonetheless of highest importance. Even though the total number of exploratory wells in the petroleum fields has increased in the past 5 years, there has been a net decrease in new reserves of oil discovered since 1938.

The proved oil reserves of the United States are variously estimated at from 15,000,000,000 to 20,000,000,000 barrels—enough, at the 1942 rate of consumption, to last no more than 14 years. Of course, since it is impossible to withdraw this oil at a rate of one and one-half billion barrels annually over the entire 14-year period—the rate of production decreases sharply in the early years following discovery—the oil will be in the ground for many years. But unless reserves are constantly added, shortage of oil will begin to occur much earlier.

Foreign countries—without petroleum reserves such as our own—have resorted to synthetic production for some time. Germany for example, has been producing much of its motor fuels by conversion from coal, and at last reports was getting about 95,000 barrels of gasoline daily by one method alone. England has constructed and is operating a large-scale hydrogenation plant.

The United States cannot rely on the hope that our natural petroleum reserves will continue to supply the Nation's needs forever. We must be prepared to resort to other means when the time comes. It is therefore urgent that all the processes and methods of obtaining liquid fuels—whether from our oil shale reserves or by conversion of coal, or both—be worked on, and that the most efficient, productive, and economical methods be determined and be ready to be put into operation at the proper time.

The Bureau of Mines has conducted experiments on some of our oil shales, and now is working on two different methods of liquefying coal. One of these is the Bergius method, or so-called direct hydrogenation method. In a small experimental plant in its Pittsburgh laboratories, the Bureau has already tested various American coals. It has been found that virtually all high-volatile and subbituminous coals and lignites can be liquefied by this process, and that the yield will vary from about 30 gallons of gasoline from a ton of lignite to about 60 gallons from a ton of high-volatile bituminous coal. The Bureau also has conducted some experiments with the synthetic process, sometimes called the indirect hydrogenation method, or Fischer-Tropsch process.

These studies are not limited to determining yields of fuel oil and gasoline, but also Diesel oil and valuable byproducts important in chemicals, explosives, drugs, and for making plastics. When one considers that there are more than 3,000,000,000,000 tons of coal in reserve in the United States, the potentialities appear enormous. A practical, economical method could provide the American people with gasoline, fuel oil, and certain valuable byproducts for well over a thousand years at our normal rate of consumption.

The amount of money allocated to the Bureau of Mines for this important experimental work is amazingly small, and in no way compares with the importance of the field being developed by the staff of skilled chemists and engineers. For the future security of the Nation and for sound economic reasons, the Bureau should be enabled to construct and operate commercial-size units utilizing both basic processes of liquefaction so that it can adequately determine the best designs for commercial plants and the cost of operating them. If the Bureau had adequate funds, it is my conviction that the United States could develop not only the cheapest but the best coal-liquefaction plants in the world. During the current fiscal year only $55,330 has been allotted for work on the Bergius process, and $43,000 for research work in the Fischer-Tropsch method. Compare this with the $6,000,000 one petroleum company spent in investigating cracking processes, or with the $10,000,000 the iron and steel industries spend annually for research in their fields.

IMPORTANCE OF RESEARCH

We simply have not been giving Federal Government agencies, particularly the Bureau of Mines, enough support in the realm of research. Private industry has recognized the returns paid on research. Private industry for many years has spent an average of more than $300,000,000 annually for research. It employs more than 70,000 research workers in 2,200 laboratories.

At random I will choose a few industries to show just how important they consider research. The food industry before the war spent more than $6,000,000 annually; the chemical industries, more than $42,000,000; the petroleum industry, $22,000,000; manufacturers of electrical machinery allocated more than $18,000,000 yearly for research alone; and the nonferrous metal industries, more than $5,000,000.

Recently the National Resources Committee reported:

> The research activities of the Bureau of Mines are similarly national in scope, and too extensive for any nongovernmental agency to engage in. The mining industry is contributing data of much value, but each segment of the industry is concerned only with the technology of its own particular ores or minerals, while the Bureau of Mines from its detached position may investigate the problems of the industry as a whole.

In 1940 the National Resources Planning Board stated:

> It is essential to the national economy that the stream of technological progress flows freely. Engineering advances cannot go far without simultaneous or preceding advances in creating new metallurgical materials. Metallurgical research is an essential national resource, because technological advances do not just happen automatically; they have to be produced deliberately.

We who determine the course of work which Government agencies such as the Bureau of Mines undertake, must be as foresighted and as much dedicated to a belief in the future as are our technicians and scientists.

HELIUM PRODUCTION

One of the important functions of the Bureau of Mines—and one for which the Bureau has not always received well-earned credit—is that of operating helium plants. Our Government has a world monopoly of helium, and today it is producing the gas in record-breaking quantities. It is this light-weight, noninflammable gas which goes into our blimps that are on the alert for submarines. Helium also is used by the Weather Bureau to carry sensitive recording instruments into the higher altitudes. It is being used in surgery to lessen the chances of accidents involving the use of anesthetics, by the Navy for rescue diving, and for many other purposes.

Needs of the Army, the Navy, and other agencies for large amounts of helium were forecast by the Bureau many months ago. The Seventy-seventh Congress approved the expenditure of more than $15,000,000 for the construction of additional helium plants so that the future supply of this gas will be ample. Because of research, helium no longer is a costly product; but the Bureau constantly is conducting studies to lower the costs still further. Ever since the United States entered the First World War the Bureau has continued comprehensive surveys of the natural gases and gas-producing areas of the United States for helium for Government purposes. It has been determined that natural gases containing helium are widely distributed over the United States, but so far only a few localities have been discovered in which the volume of the gases themselves and their helium content are sufficiently large for economical production of helium.

The Bureau of Mines believes that only the surface has been scratched with respect to the commercial uses of helium. Research for additional utilization of the gas is continuing, but right now the emphasis is on military uses. Only recently a new welding process utilizing helium was developed for uses in connection with airplane parts and assemblies.

MOTION PICTURES

Motion pictures prepared under the supervision of the Bureau to promote safety, conservation, and efficiency are gaining international prominence. Since 1916 the Bureau has been cooperating with the mineral industries in the production of motion pictures which now are being shown, not only to miners and petroleum field workers, but to members of the armed forces of the United States and Great Britain. These motion pictures are helping win the war. They cover a wide range of subjects pertaining to the mineral industries—the machining, riveting, and welding of metals, the operation of gasoline and Diesel engines, the development of oil wells, proper methods of lubrication, and dozens of other topics.

Only a few months ago a United States Naval Air Station Trade School used 36 films furnished by the Bureau of Mines in instructing 4,000 young men in various occupations and familiarizing them with industrial processes and industrial areas.

Bureau of Mines motion pictures contain no advertising, brand names, trademarks, or other material that might be interpreted as advertising, although the entire production cost of the films has been borne by cooperating industrial concerns. The name of the industrial firm appears only at the beginning and end of each film. In the past 26 years the Bureau has obtained without cost to the Government 110 motion pictures which were financed by private industry at a cost to various industrial concerns or agencies of approximately $1,400,000. The only expense to the Bureau for all these films has been the employment of a safety engineer as a consultant during production of the pictures and the maintenance of a small staff at Pittsburgh to operate the circulating film library. This library, the largest educational motion-picture library of its type in the world, has more than 6,000 reels of film in constant circulation.

At the present time, Bureau motion pictures are being flown across the Atlantic to be shown to members of the Royal Air Force and to students at British flying training schools. They are being sent to South American republics under arrangement with the Division of Cultural Relations of the State Department. They are being shown in Canada to war workers so those men and women will be able to perform their jobs more efficiently. Day by day the demand for Bureau films is increasing, and so popular are the films that bookings sometimes are made many months in advance.

During 1942 more than 100,000 showings of the Bureau of Mines motion pictures were given. In addition to the armed forces and grade and high school pupils, the audiences included students of aeronautical schools, industrial training classes in colleges and universities, civilian defense classes, participants in first-aid classes, C. C. C. workers and, of course, thousands of miners.

COAL-MINE INSPECTION

While the war necessarily has emphasized the Bureau's work in mineral explorations, metallurgy, petroleum, and natural gas, its activities in the conservation of health and the promotion of safety have increased amazingly in recent months. Realizing that every man-hour of work in the coal mine means that much more fuel for the Nation's war plants, Bureau of Mines safety engineers and mining engineers have speeded up their work under the Coal Mine Inspection Act, a measure passed by Congress in May 1941, which gave the Bureau of Mines—for the first time—authority to enter any coal mine to investigate operating conditions and practices from a safety standpoint and to make recommendations to safeguard the lives of miners and protect property.

The Bureau of Mines was created in 1910, when the public demanded that action be taken to prevent the heavy toll of deaths and injuries in our coal mines. During the 5-year period, 1907 to 1911, there were 13,806 fatal injuries, or an average of 2,761 annually. In 1911 alone there were 2,656 fatalities in the production of 496,371,126 tons of coal—or only 186,462 tons produced per fatal injury.

In 1941, when mine operators and miners alike responded again to the plea for more and more coal, the output reached an estimated 556,474,900 tons—the highest since 1929—and fatalities were estimated at 1,264—or an average of one fatal injury per 440,645 tons of coal produced. Thus, since 1911, the tonnage per fatal injury has increased 136 percent, and fatalities have been cut 52 percent.

Under the Federal Coal Mine Inspection Act, the Bureau of Mines sent its first inspectors into the field December 1, 1941. All veteran mining men, and all civil service appointees, they underwent a "refresher" course at Pittsburgh before starting to work. They were trained anew in first aid and in mine-rescue work, and attended lectures by Bureau of Mines men who are recognized authorities in coal mining.

Thoroughness characterizes the work of the Federal coal-mine inspectors. They are trained to get facts and to aid both operators and miners in pursuing safe practices. They are part of a cooperative, safety-educational movement, and the degree of safety in the mines they inspect is measured by the yardstick of some 600 tentative standards drawn up by the Bureau of Mines as the result of more than three decades of experience in the field and in the laboratory.

During their first 12 months of duty Federal coal-mine inspectors examined in 20 States coal mines employing more than a fourth of all coal-mine employees and producing about half of all the coal. Preliminary and detailed reports regarding their findings and recommendations were prepared. The preliminary reports are posted at the mine portal shortly after the inspection is completed, and contain recommendations for correcting hazardous conditions which need immediate attention. Later a detailed report is prepared for each mine. This report, containing analyses of air and mine-dust samples, gives a complete picture of the mine. Every phase of operation is described in the reports. Safe practices as well as unsafe practices are pointed out.

When the new inspectors entered the mines they were faced with the fact that, despite the progress made in cutting down the toll of deaths and injuries, accidents still cost this Nation a potential loss of approximately 11,000,000 tons of coal annually. They realized, too, that in 1 year alone injured coal miners were away from their jobs 2,200,000 working days.

Because in the administration of this act under the direction of Dr. R. R. Sayers, Director of the Bureau, the Federal inspectors have made it plain that their objective is to be helpful and cooperative, industry has responded favorably. Likewise mine workers and State inspection services have demonstrated their desire to cooperate. The Federal act was not intended to replace State laws and regulations, but rather to permit the inspection of mines under uniform standards relating to health and safety. The coal-mining industry today is governed by different codes in 29 States.

COAL-MINE ACCIDENT TOLL

The Federal coal-mine inspection program is gaining impetus daily, and ultimately it is expected that nearly 2,000 mines a year will be reached. In conjunction with the many other safety activities of the Bureau, the inspection program is exerting a definite influence toward the reduction of accidents, despite the handicaps resulting from the war. The coal-mining industry battled against great odds last year. Young, active men skilled in the operation of high-speed mechanical equipment were called to the armed forces; thousands of others trained to operate and repair equipment went to war plants. Yet, despite the fact that new workers had to be trained and shortages of manpower existed from time to time, the industry came through with flying colors. The coal-mining industry, both anthracite and bituminous, came through 1942 with greatly increased production and with virtually no increase in its accident rate. Under the pressure of increased output, accidents in other major industries jumped about 20 percent since their wartime production programs got under way.

Before the Bureau of Mines was created no accurate records were kept regarding the death toll of coal mines, but we know that an average of about 2,500 to 3,000 men lost their lives each year. We know, for example, that back in 1907, 361 men lost their lives in a mine explosion, and that 13 days later 239 men were killed in another explosion in another State. Since 1910, when the Bureau launched its safety program in the coal-mining industry, the death toll has been cut more than one-half. This has been accomplished in the face of the mechanization of mines—the introduction of high-speed equipment which has brought its own hazards. Back in 1907, in the bituminous mines alone more than 2,500 lives were lost. Compare this with 1941—the year production was surging toward new heights. In 1941, 1,000 men lost their lives. Today, thanks to continued progress in the Bureau's safety work, thousands upon thousands of men who otherwise might have been sacrificed are in our mines producing coal.

Coal mining, it is said, is hazardous. Yet a Pennsylvania mine operated 8 years without a fatality while producing more than 3,000,000 tons of coal. In Colorado, a mine operated from 1932 until 1941 without a fatal accident, while producing well over a million tons of coal, most of which came from pillar-recovery work, the most hazardous operation in coal mining. Bureau of Mines files show equally impressive records for other mines.

Explosions in coal mines, which are headlined in the press because they take the greatest toll of life at a single time, fortunately are becoming less frequent, and stand well down the list as a cause of fatalities. Explosions result from the ignition of methane, a gas liberated by coal beds, or from the ignition of coal dust. In many gas explosions the blast is propagated by coal dust, and thus becomes more devastating. At Bruceton, Pa., the Bureau of Mines maintains an experimental mine where explosions are manufactured. As a result of experiments extending over many years, the Bureau has determined ways of preventing explosions. Effective ventilation, Bureau engineers found, will dilute methane and carry it from mines. Rock dust, or powdered limestone, when spread in coal mines in sufficient amounts renders coal dust incombustible and prevents it from entering into or propagating an explosion. Therefore, the Bureau recommends that all bituminous and lignite mines be rock-dusted.

A tiny spark is capable of igniting an explosive mixture of methane and air. Thus, the Bureau recommends that only permissible electrical equipment be used in coal mines and that only permissible explosives be used for breaking down coal. The word "permissible" is applied to a piece of mining equipment or material only after the Bureau has subjected it to exhaustive tests to determine its characteristics under extreme conditions.

A piece of permissible electrical equipment, when maintained in permissible condition and properly operated, will not cause an explosion. Permissible explosives, when fired in a permissible manner, are less likely to ignite explosive atmospheres because they do not emit as long and as lasting a flame as does black blasting power, which, in the past, was the most common explosive. The safest coal mines of today are those which use permissible equipment and which adhere to timbering, ventilating, haulage, and rock-dusting standards such as those suggested by the Bureau of Mines and those written into the laws of the most progressive mining States.

FALLS OF ROOF AND COAL

Falls of roof and coal, which cause nearly half of all fatal injuries and a heavy percentage of all nonfatal accidents in coal mines of the United States, can be prevented by systematic timbering and roof testing. The Bureau has devoted extensive research to timbering problems and has prepared many pamphlets describing proper timbering methods. Haulage accidents, which usually rank next to falls of roof and coal, likewise have been studied extensively by the Bureau, and many safe operating standards have been formulated to overcome the dangers encountered in hauling coal in the mines and at the surface plants.

LETTERS OF COMMENDATION

Federal coal-mine inspectors are working night and day in their job of promoting health and safety in the coal mines, and many letters of commendation have been received from mine operators and representatives of the workmen attesting to the value of the inspection program. The operators and workmen are proud of the progress they have made toward making coal mines better and safer places in which to work. In many instances, recommendations made by the Federal inspectors are adopted immediately. Many letters have been received by the Bureau from mine operators commending the inspectors and calling attention to the changes and improvements which have been made as a result of the inspectors' visits:

Our company was very much opposed to the Federal inspection bill and did not see what it could accomplish and thought there was a lot of duplication of inspection work. We were under the impression that it might bring about a lot of confliction between the State department of mines, the Federal department, and the companies, but since the law has gone into effect we have had two of our mines inspected by one of the Federal inspectors, and we have begun to feel differently since these inspections. Personally, I feel that the Federal bill is going to be a great help to the coal companies.

It is our desire to cooperate with your department in making our mines as safe as possible, and I wish to express my appreciation at this time for the cooperation we received from your men when they made the inspection of our mine.

We believe the inspector's report gives a clear picture of conditions at our mine during the time of his visit, and we welcome his recommendations for the improvement of any faults which he encountered. Every effort is being made to remedy any unsatisfactory condition that may exist at our mine.

We feel you should know that we were glad of the opportunity to have an inspection and appreciated the fine manner in which your inspector conducted his inspection of conditions and practices at our mine. We are all learning the real meaning of cooperation, and through the fine working together of your departments and the coal operators we feel we can accomplish a great deal of good for our industry.

Here are excerpts from letters from the representatives of labor:

I am sure that both the management and the men who are employed at this mine feel safer because they now know from an impartial body that it really is a safe mine to work in, and that the company, along with the men, are cooperating on a safety program of accident prevention.

I want to compliment the department on its splendid report and recommendations, and assure you that district __, United Mine Workers of America, stands ready at all times to cooperate with your department in establishing safety in the mines of the Southwest.

SAFETY TRAINING WORK

In its safety-education program for the mineral industries the Bureau of Mines has fostered interest in first aid as a necessary step toward curbing accidents. Since the establishment of the Bureau in 1910, more than 1,500,000 persons have taken the Bureau of Mines first-aid course, and most of those were men connected with the mineral industries.

In the past fiscal year, nearly 100,000 employees of the mining and affiliated industries received first-aid and mine-rescue instruction. In addition, with the training of nearly 1,500 as first-aid instructors, more than 16,000 persons throughout the Nation became qualified to teach the Bureau of Mines first-aid course in the civilian defense program of the Office of Civilian Defense. Last year the Bureau of Mines awarded 117 certificates to industrial plants for having all employees trained in first aid.

Safety instructors, coal mine inspectors, and other Bureau personnel are ready at all times to assist in mine-rescue and recovery operations after disasters. All are skilled in the use of oxygen breathing apparatus and gas masks and in procedures connected with fires, explosions, or floods. This training is passed along to mining men, and the Nation thus has a reserve of men who can be called into action to assist in civilian defense and rescue work arising from the war.

OTHER IMPORTANT ROLES

The Bureau of Mines is playing other important roles in the promotion of health and safety in the mineral industries. A new unit composed of doctors, chemists, and engineers is making investigations and studies of occupational diseases in the coal mining industry, in conjunction with the work of the Coal Mine Inspection Division. In order to maintain the highest levels of available manpower, the gas and dust laboratory at the Central Experiment Station at Pittsburgh has been enlarged to handle the increased number of air and dust samples submitted by coal mine inspectors; respiratory devices for protection against gases, fumes, and dusts are being investigated; and studies are being made for the Army and the Navy regarding health factors in some military equipment.

The Bureau's explosives-testing program, conducted for many years with a view to maintaining safe characteristics in explosives and blasting devices, has been broadened because of the war. Research by Bureau chemists has proved of great value to military officials. High-speed explosion diaphragms were developed to protect equipment and employees in special war industries against gas explosions; studies were made of the explosion and inflammability characteristics of chemicals used by the synthetic-rubber and plastics industries; further studies were conducted regarding the use of helium in preventing explosions of anesthetic mixtures.

For safeguarding industries using Diesel engines in explosive or combustible atmospheres, a testing gallery was completed and experiments are being conducted. At the request of the Ordnance Department of the Army, plant-security studies are made of ordnance facilities. Several demolition studies also have been made in cooperation with the Army. The Bureau has assigned an engineer to cooperate with the Chemical Warfare Service of the War Department in connection with civilian protection activities. One recent discovery by the Bureau is that hard coal-tar pitch, in granulated form, is excellent for extinguishing magnesium fires in industrial plants.

FEDERAL EXPLOSIVES ACT

Shortly after the United States entered the war the Bureau of Mines was designated by the Congress to administer the Federal Explosives Act, an anti-sabotage measure which provides for the control of the manufacture, purchase, sale, use, and possession of nonmilitary explosives and ingredients of explosives by means of a licensing system. The Bureau also conducts investigations of the manufacture, storage, thefts, or losses of explosives, and of fires and explosions in which explosives are believed or known to be a contributing factor.

To carry on the licensing work the Bureau has appointed nearly 4,500 public officials as licensing agents. These agents, who serve without pay except for a 25-cent fee for each license, have issued some 225,000 licenses. Forty-eight explosives investigators are at work in the various States and Alaska, supervising and guiding the licensing agents and investigating the manufacture, handling, storage, and use of explosives. In carrying out its duties, the Explosives Control Division of the Bureau works closely with the Army and Navy Intelligence Services, the Office of Civilian Defense, and the Office of the Chief of Ordnance, and the Provost Marshal General.

MINERAL PRODUCTION SECURITY PROGRAM

In the summer of 1942, the Bureau of Mines launched its mineral production security program to prevent sabotage and to investigate possible subversive activities in the Nation's metal mines, coal mines, quarries, mills, smelters, and allied mineral facilities. A staff of engineer-investigators was trained at the Central Experiment Station at Pittsburgh and was sent into the field to work in close coordination with the mine inspectors, explosives investigators, safety engineers, and other field personnel of the Bureau, as well as in cooperation with other Federal agencies concerned with the facility security program of the Government.

ECONOMICS AND STATISTICS

Accurate information on the production, trade, distribution, supply, and consumption of minerals and mineral commodities is essential to the war, to industry, and to the Bureau of Mines and other Federal war agencies. The Bureau's economics and statistical service, which supplies these up-to-date facts, has accelerated and intensified its work of showing where materials come from, where they go, who uses them, and other pertinent details as requested by the War Production Board, the Army and Navy Munitions Board, the Office of Price Administration, the Metals Reserve Company, and the Board of Economic Warfare. This war job involves more than 100 minerals. The complete picture is assembled by experts from material furnished by the thousands of American establishments in the mineral field. As a result of the wartime demand for information regarding the supply, consumption, and distribution of minerals, the economics and statistical service of the Bureau now requires the handling of more than 1,400 regular canvasses and the analysis, tabulation, and dissemination of the results. In addition, many special surveys are conducted from time to time in response to specific requests from war agencies.

The Bureau provides war agencies with detailed facts regarding 30 metals on a monthly basis. These studies cover both producers and consumers. In the calendar year 1942, 672 of the 754 canvasses on metals made by the Bureau were conducted specifically for war agencies. The quarterly iron and steel scrap survey has been changed to a monthly basis as an additional service for war industries and agencies.

In the field of nonmetallics, the studies also have been speeded and broadened. The Bureau makes monthly canvasses of mica, graphite, asbestos, barium oxide, and natural sodium compounds; a semimonthly canvass of cement; and special canvasses of quartz crystals, mineral pigments, and industrial diamonds. Special reports likewise are issued regarding the sources of high-grade dolomite needed for magnesium metal, sources of magnesia, processes for recovering magnesia from dolomite, magnesia refractories, resources and uses of monazite, uses and supplies of strontium, sources of high-grade clays for aluminum salts, and nonmetallic mineral industries in the South.

The work of the Bureau in collecting facts and figures regarding the petroleum and natural gas industries is aiding Government agencies in rationing problems, control of production, and readjustment in refinery operations. The monthly reviews regarding aviation gasoline, which were begun in 1939, and which have been supplemented by capacity surveys, are proving of special value to the program of expanding output to meet war needs.

The need of war agencies for cross-sectional views of the coal and coke industries also is being filled by the Bureau of Mines, which has expanded current studies and has inaugurated new studies so that a glance will reveal just how these industries are progressing and where shortages threaten. Another service of the Bureau is that which supplies essential information relating to production, stocks, and exports of strategic and critical minerals by foreign countries. These figures are obtained on a confidential basis from official sources in nonenemy countries.

Mr. President, with the limited time available it has been possible to present only a brief review of the splendid work the Bureau of Mines is doing to help this Nation and her allies win the war. In my opinion, this agency has provided the United States with an outstanding example of the foresighted and efficient conversion of an old-line bureau to a vibrant and progressive wartime organization—a conversion made possible by long and careful preparation and by an early realization of the possibilities of America's vast natural resources.

There is no question that virtually all the Bureau's work is directly concerned with the war program and the most effective aid to the war effort of this country's seven and one-half billion dollar mineral production industry. Without this industry—coal, metals, nonmetals, petroleum, coke, and dozens of other vital mineral fields—the United States could not rank as the "arsenal of democracy," nor would we be able to produce, as we did in 1942, as much war material as all of the Axis Nations put together.

Enormous wealth is drawn from our mines, and millions of people depend upon the industry for a living. When these minerals are processed or fabricated into war materials as well as articles which every man, woman, and child in the country must have in order to sustain our high standard of living, the value of the industry is multiplied many times. The influence of the mineral industries extends into transportation, agriculture, explosives, electrical manufacturing, steel making, yes, into every activity of the Nation.

Throughout the years of its early history, during the so-called defense era beginning with 1939, and in the actual war period dating from Pearl Harbor, the Bureau of Mines has forged steadily ahead in all branches of its work and has not relaxed its vigilance one iota. For that reason it has been able during this emergency to show the Nation how and where it may best utilize the land's God-given resources in making planes and guns and ships and other weapons for restoring order to a gangster-ridden world. It has demonstrated in the pilot plant, in the laboratory, and in the far-flung mineral deposits of the country how the United States can and should make itself independent of many of the foreign sources of raw materials.

All of this has been accomplished in the face of obstacles and handicaps which would have discouraged a less hardy group of workers or an organization that did not keep before it the shining goal of conserving wisely and utilizing efficiently the valuable minerals beneath the earth's crust. The Congress deserves credit for encouraging and supporting the Bureau of Mines in its difficult task of aiding our mineral industries in the orderly development and exploitation of domestic resources.

Mr. President, with the United States fighting for its very existence and with irrefutable proof that its existence depends upon many of the things for which the Bureau of Mines has long struggled, I feel that every Member of this body should understand what is being done by agencies such as the Bureau.

To the Members of the Seventy-eighth Congress—both the veterans and the new Members—as a member of the Committee on Mines and Mining, I can strongly recommend the work and accomplishments of the Bureau of Mines as well worth serious consideration and study, for to understand what this agency is accomplishing brings a grateful appreciation of the men in government and industry who are constantly working for a better America.

ADJOURNMENT TO THURSDAY

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILLIS in the chair). Under the order of the Senate previously entered, the Senate will now stand adjourned until 12 o'clock noon on Thursday next.

Thereupon (at 2 o'clock and 3 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned, the adjournment being under the order previously entered, to Thursday, January 14, 1943, at 12 o'clock noon.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate January 11, 1943:

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

Wiley Blount Rutledge, of Iowa, to be an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, vice Hon. James F. Byrnes, resigned.

DIPLOMATIC AND FOREIGN SERVICE

Edward J. Flynn, of New York, to be Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Australia.

The following-named persons now Foreign Service officers of class seven and secretaries in the Diplomatic Service to be also consuls of the United States of America:

Paul J. Reveley, of Connecticut.
John Peabody Palmer, of Washington.
Henry E. Stebbins, of Massachusetts.
Waldo E. Bailey, of Mississippi.
Jacob D. Beam, of New Jersey.
Mulford A. Colebrook, of New York.

CIVIL AERONAUTICS BOARD

Josh Lee, of Oklahoma, to be a member of the Civil Aeronautics Board in the Department of Commerce for the remainder of the term expiring December 31, 1943, vice George P. Baker.

OFFICE OF PRICE ADMINISTRATION

Prentiss M. Brown, of Michigan, to be Price Administrator, Office of Price Administration, vice Leon Henderson.

WAR MANPOWER COMMISSION

Chester W. Hepler, from the State of Illinois, to be area director at $5,600 per annum in the Chicago area office of the War Manpower Commission.

John Bradley Haight, from the State of Indiana, to be area director at $5,600 per annum in the Indianapolis area office of the War Manpower Commission.

George D. Penniman, Jr., from the State of Maryland, to the position of labor utilization analyst at $6,500 per annum in the Washington regional office of the War Manpower Commission.

William P. Edmunds, from the State of Ohio, to the position of area director at $6,500 per annum in the Cleveland area office of the War Manpower Commission.

T. Hilliard Cox, from the State of Nebraska, to the position of program control technician at $5,600 per annum in the Kansas City, Mo., regional office of the War Manpower Commission.

Louis C. M. Abolin, from the State of New York, to the position of assistant labor utilization analyst (trainee) at $4,600 per annum in the Washington regional office of the War Manpower Commission.

Edward L. Stevens, from the State of Virginia, to the position of field supervisor at $5,600 per annum in the Washington regional office of the War Manpower Commission.

Ernest James Jaqua, from the State of California, to be head employment specialist at $6,500 per annum in the Bureau of Training in the Washington office of the War Manpower Commission.

Merriam H. Trytten, from the State of Pennsylvania, to be principal employment specialist (physics) at $5,600 per annum in the Bureau of Training of the Washington office of the War Manpower Commission.

Harold L. Rothschild, from the State of Minnesota, to be head labor utilization analyst at $6,500 per annum in the Minneapolis regional office of the War Manpower Commission.

James Vernon Doucet, from the State of Colorado, to be program-control technician at $4,600 per annum in the Denver regional office of the War Manpower Commission.

Louis Bloch, from the State of California, to be program-control technician at $5,600 per annum in the San Francisco regional office of the War Manpower Commission.

John D. Kingsley, from the State of Ohio, to be program control technician at $5,600 per annum in the Cleveland regional office of the War Manpower Commission.

David G. Nagle from the State of Massachusetts, to be field supervisor at $5,600 per annum in the Boston regional office of the War Manpower Commission.

Reuben B. Resnik, from the State of Texas, to be field supervisor, at $5,600 per annum, in the Dallas regional office of the War Manpower Commission.

Carlos Stageberg, from the State of Minnesota, to be senior labor utilization analyst, at $4,600 per annum, in the Minneapolis regional office of the War Manpower Commission.

Charles W. Patrick, from the State of California, to be senior training specialist, at $4,600 per annum in the San Francisco area office of the War Manpower Commission.

Donald Theodore Larin, from the State of North Dakota, to be senior agricultural employment specialist, at $4,600 per annum, in the Minneapolis regional office of the War Manpower Commission.

George P. Williams, from the State of Georgia, to be senior housing and transportation specialist, at $4,600 per annum, in the Atlanta regional office of the War Manpower Commission.

Marion A. Gregg, from the State of Ohio, to be area director, at $4,600 per annum, in the Youngstown, Ohio, area office of the War Manpower Commission.

Harry H. Hansborough, Jr., from the State of Kentucky, to be area director, at $4,600 per annum, in the Louisville, Ky., area office of the War Manpower Commission.

Leroy Allison West, from the State of Colorado, to be area director, at $4,600 per annum, in the Denver area office of the War Manpower Commission.

Thomas J. Corcoran, from the State of New York, to be area director, at $4,600 per annum, in the Syracuse area office of the War Manpower Commission.

Aloysius J. McGinty, from the State of New York, to be area director, at $5,600 per annum, in the Albany area office of the War Manpower Commission.

William Parkinson, from the State of Nebraska, to be area director, at $4,600 per annum, in the Omaha area office of the War Manpower Commission.

Daniel J. Boyle, from the State of Massachusetts, to be field supervisor, at $5,600 per annum, in the Boston regional office of the War Manpower Commission.

Frederick J. Graham, from the State of Massachusetts, to be field supervisor, at $5,600 per annum, in the Boston regional office of the War Manpower Commission.

Julius Cohen, from the State of West Virginia, to be principal attorney, at $5,600 per annum, in the office of the general counsel of the War Manpower Commission.

Dr. Paul C. Barton, from the State of Illinois, to be assistant director at $5,600 per annum for the Procurement and Assignment Service of the Bureau of Placement in the Washington office of the War Manpower Commission.

Hervey Allen, from the State of Florida, to be information specialist at $4,600 per annum in the Atlanta regional office of the War Manpower Commission.

TEMPORARY APPOINTMENTS IN THE ARMY OF THE UNITED STATES

TO BE MAJOR GENERAL

Brig. Gen. Albert Whitney Waldron (lieutenant colonel, Field Artillery), Army of the United States.

TO BE BRIGADIER GENERAL

Col. Henry Barlow Cheadle, Infantry.

Col. Joseph Hampton Atkinson (captain, Air Corps; temporary lieutenant colonel, Air Corps; temporary lieutenant colonel, Army of the United States), Army of the United States—Air Corps.

Col. LaVerne George Saunders (captain, Air Corps; temporary lieutenant colonel, Air Corps; temporary lieutenant colonel, Army of the United States), Army of the United States—Air Corps.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, JANUARY 11, 1943

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by the Speaker.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Thou blessed Founder of our most holy faith, who came to us in the form of a little Child, teach us that simplicity is the pioneer virtue that makes secure the foundation of Christian character. There is no power that builds up men in unselfishness and goodness as that which radiates from Him whose life on earth began in a manger. Let us cast aside our costly treasures, giving us minds and hearts to share with all who fear and weep. Dear Saviour, the Friend of changeless love, bless little children and those of ebbing strength who are seeking the rugged way alone and who never bow to defeat.

We pray that we may ever use our position and privileges to succor the homeless, the wanderer, and for all who seek companionship for the day and rest for the night. These are they of whom Thou didst say: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done unto Me." Almighty God, make us strong to forbear and unafraid; help us to spread Thy gracious reign until greed and hate shall cease, making us noble in feelings and in destiny. No fever of unrest can disturb the soul that breathes the lofty air and learns the way of the Christ.

"The holy Supper is kept indeed,
In what 'so we share with another's need;
Not what we give, but what we share,
For the gift without the giver is bare.
Who gives himself with his alms, feeds three.
Himself, his hungering neighbor, and Me."

Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MAAS]?

There was no objection.

REPLYING TO ATTACK ON GOV. HAROLD E. STASSEN'S REPUBLICANISM

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Speaker, I arise to challenge the statement questioning Minnesota's Gov. Harold Stassen's Republicanism and his right to make suggestions relative to the post-war world, particularly looking toward maintaining the peace when the victory shall have been won.

From my long and close personal acquaintanceship, I can assure you that he is not a stalking horse for anyone. Harold Stassen has a mind of his own, and he has always spoken it frankly and fearlessly. I disagree with Mr. Stassen on many issues; but his right to express his views is as sacred as any cause we are fighting for in this war.

Far from his Republicanism being questionable, he is one of the outstanding Republican leaders in the Nation, and I know of no one who has any better right to speak as a Republican on any issue. Harold Stassen was one of the pioneers in the movement of organizing the youth of the Nation under the Republican banner; he led them to victory in Minnesota; and has contributed tremendously to their influence in the party and the Nation today.

I doubt very much whether I would agree with the specific proposal for the organization of the world government, but I also doubt very much whether he is particularly wedded to the plan that he put forth for discussion. He did not announce his plan dogmatically, but stated at the time that he was merely suggesting a possible solution and for purposes of opening discussion on the matter. Far from being criticized for this he should be applauded, and his great foresight and vision should be gratefully recognized. One of the great tragedies of modern history was the failure of the Allied Nations after the last war to carefully provide the mechanics to maintain world peace. I am one of those who do not believe that the League of Nations was the answer. I was opposed to it, and I would oppose reviving it after this war; but because no one had brought before the people that or any other plan for discussion from which a really workable solution could have been evolved, the League of Nations had no alternative; and when it was rejected by the people of the United States, there was nothing to offer in its place. Full and proper discussion during the last World War might very well have produced a real plan to which we and all of our allies could have subscribed and that would have been workable.

Furthermore, who better has a right to speak on post-war plans, and especially plans that will prevent the ever-recurring world wars to which we now seem to be subjected than the man who shall have taken part in those wars? Governor Stassen is a Reserve officer and in a few months is resigning his high office as Governor of the State of Minnesota to enter active service for the duration of the war. I want to assure you that the men who are fighting this war are going to have a great deal to say about post-war conditions in this country and throughout the world when this war is over. They are not going to lose the victory in a few years through pacifism in this country and through international bungling. This Nation has had to support all of the United Nations in this war, and it will have to do a great deal of the fighting everywhere in the world. It will certainly have both the right and the obligation to lead the way in the peace and reconstruction that is to follow the termination of the war. I think when the time comes you will find Harold Stassen one of those who will be among the leaders at that time.

Harold Stassen is not only an outstanding Republican, but he represents the finest type of young American.

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print Governor Stassen's remarks to which I referred in the Appendix of the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MAAS]?

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do so only to ask the gentleman what was the source of the criticism of Governor

Stassen and the questioning of his integrity?

Mr. MAAS. Well, his Republicanism and his right to make this kind of a proposal was questioned on the floor of the House by a Member.

Mr. COLE of New York. Has it been quesitoned from any other source than that one of which the gentleman spoke?

Mr. MAAS. Not to my knowledge.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I hope the gentleman will be more specific. Under date of January 8, I had some remarks to make about Mr. Stassen, and I suggest that the gentleman point out to me where I was critical of him. I may say that the RECORD shows that I congratulated Mr. Stassen for making those remarks.

Mr. MAAS. May I say to the gentleman from Michigan, it was not his remarks to which I alluded. There was an interruption in his remarks by another Member of the House, and it is the assertions made in that interruption that I am challenging.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MAAS]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the special orders for the day I may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes to answer some criticisms of the administration's power program, and I hope every one will stay.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN]?

There was no objection.

ANNIVERSARY OF THE DEATH OF FRANCIS SCOTT KEY

Mr. D'ALESANDRO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The Speaker. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. D'ALESANDRO]?

There was no objection.

Mr. D'ALESANDRO. Mr. Speaker, today marks the centennial anniversary of that day when the God of Peace called Francis Scott Key to a well-earned rest and to that everlasting reward for which he had so well prepared himself; and

By his life, exemplary, distinguished, and devoted to the service of his community, his State and his Nation, he made a lasting impression upon all whose privilege it was to know him and left a rich and enduring heritage for succeeding generations; and

It is fitting that there be recorded brief reference to his life and work.

Francis Scott Key, son of John Ross Key and Anne Phoebe Penn Dagworthy Charlton Key, was born August 1, 1779, at Terra Rubra, located on Pipes Creek in the county of Frederick, now a part of Carroll County, in the State of Maryland. At the age of 10 he entered St. John's College, Annapolis, Md., and as a member of the first graduating class of that institution received the degree of bachelor of arts in 1796 at the age of 17. He delivered the valedictory address, using "Eloquence" as his topic. And 4 years later he received the degree of master of arts.

In 1827, when St. John's College faced a critical period because of the withdrawal by the State legislature of its financial support, Mr. Key was one of the foremost leaders of the movement to organize the alumni. He made the principal address at their first meeting on the subject of public responsibility to institutions of learning, so forceful that it resulted in a renewal by the State legislature of financial aid to the college in an even larger measure. Earlier he had become a member of the Georgetown-Lancaster Society, an organization having for its principal objective the furtherance of free public schools. He served for a number of years as member of and chairman of a committee charged with this particular phase of its program.

Shortly after Francis Scott Key graduated from St. John's College he entered the law office of his uncle, Phillip Barton Key, in Annapolis, Md., where he served the usual apprenticeship of 4 years. His regular attendance at sessions of the Maryland Court of Appeals, the legislature, and of the nisi prius courts served him in good stead in later years. He soon became a worthy opponent of the best lawyers of his day and an adversary to be reckoned with before the bar. He was admitted to the bar in the town of Frederick, Md., in the year 1800, where he practiced for the next 5 years, moving to Georgetown, D. C., in 1805. In 1806, when but 27 years of age, Mr. Key made his first appearance before the United States Supreme Court, John Marshall being its then Chief Justice. His appearances before this high tribunal became more and more frequent in the first half of the nineteenth century. In 1833 President Andrew Jackson appointed Mr. Key as United States attorney for the District of Columbia, the only public office which he ever held. While serving in this capacity the President sent him as a special mediator to Alabama for the purpose of settling a dispute which had arisen there between the local authorities, the Federal Government, and the Creek Indians over a question of jurisdiction. Although this controversy had been pending for some months when Mr. Key arrived and had reached such a fever pitch that armed conflict between the Indians and the United States Army seemed inevitable, he was able to make a favorable report to his superiors within 6 days and returned home after 6 weeks, completely successful in having settled the dispute.

Francis Scott Key was a devout Christian, using as his daily creed the precepts of the Sermon on the Mount. He served for a number of years as lay delegate to the diocesan conventions of the Episcopal Church in Maryland, and also as lay delegate to the general conventions of that church. His letters to his mother, to members of his family, and to his friends frequently show the depth of his religious convictions. Two of his religious poems are published in the Common Service Book and Hymnal of the Lutheran Church, namely, Lord, With Glowing Heart I Praise Thee, and Before the Lord We Bow. At one time, Key gave deep thought to the subject of entering the ministry. In 1813, the Reverend Dr. James Kemp, then rector of St. Paul's Episcopal Church, Baltimore, offered him a position at that church, an offer which he declined only after prayerful consideration. Five days before his death, while traveling from Georgetown to Baltimore by stage coach, he composed his final poem, a work which bespeaks his belief in the life to come, and some lines of which were almost prophetic of his end.

On February 19, 1802, Francis Scott Key was married to Miss Mary Tayloe Lloyd, of Talbot County and Annapolis, a member of one of Maryland's outstanding and best-known families. Of this union, there were born 11 children, 6 boys and 5 girls. Most of Mr. Key's leisure time was spent in the bosom of his family. He was a true and devoted husband and an inspiration to and companion of his children.

While yet attending St. John's College, Francis Scott Key met Roger Brooke Taney—later Chief Justice of the United States Supreme Court. There immediately sprang up between them a deep friendship, a bond subsequently strengthened by the marriage of Mr. Taney to Mr. Key's only sister, Annie. It was to his brother-in-law that he told the story of his experiences incident to the writing of the Star-Spangled Banner, which story is related by Chief Justice Taney in a book of Key poems, published in 1857.

The masterpiece of his many poems, sonnets, and couplets is, of course, our national anthem. He reached the zenith of his career as a lawyer and orator when, by his compelling arguments, he succeeded in securing the release of Dr. William Beanes from the commanders of the British Army and Navy, then planning and ready to execute their attack upon the city of Baltimore. No less did his prowess as a poet soar to new heights as, from the deck of an American truce ship, "one of Ferguson's Norfolk packets," anchored some 3 miles off Fort McHenry, he watched the destiny of his country hang in the balance. When the 26-hour bombardment ended abruptly just before dawn on the morning of September 14, 1814, his heart must have sunk within him. Certainly, he thought the fort has been forced to surrender and that when the morning's sun cast its first glow over the eastern horizon he would see the flag of the enemy floating over the little battlement at the entrance to Baltimore's harbor. It was during this period of doubt and anxiety that Francis Scott Key wrote the first verse of his immortal poem. Then, as dawn began to break, he was able to get faint and fleeting glimpses of our ensign of democracy. As he writes in his second verse:

On the shore dimly seen.

Another line:

Now it catches the gleam of the morning's first beam.

With what relief, pride, and triumph he must have written the last two lines:

'Tis the Star-Spangled Banner! O, long may it wave, o'er the land of the free and the home of the brave.

Only in the third verse does Key speak disparagingly of the enemy but, even in this, his verse of sarcasm, he does not mention it by name. This is well, for the defense of Baltimore was the last official engagement between the armed forces of Great Britain and the United States. There has since followed an era of peace and amity between these two nations and, having been allied in the first World War, they are now fighting shoulder to shoulder in a second world conflict.

In the fourth and last verse of his immortal poem, Francis Scott Key pours forth his true Christian spirit, giving praise to the heavenly powers for the victory and invoking the blessing of God that our cause may ever be just:

O! thus be it ever, when freemen shall stand
Between their lov'd homes and war's desolation;
Blessed with victory and peace, may the Heav'n-rescued land
Praise the Power that hath made and preserved us a nation.
Then conquer we must, when our cause it is just,
And this be our motto: "In God is our trust."
And the Star-Spangled Banner, in triumph shall wave
O'er the land of the free and the home of the brave.

On March 3, 1931, President Herbert Hoover approved H. R. 14, Public, No. 823, of the Seventy-first Congress, designating this immortal poem as the national anthem of the United States, thereby making official that which the public had already done, for the citizenry had years before taken the song into their hearts, paying it the same homage as if it had been the adopted anthem.

Francis Scott Key breathed his last at about 8 p. m. on Wednesday, January 11, 1843, at the home of his daughter, Elizabeth Phoebe Key Howard, located on Mount Vernon Place and Charles Street, Baltimore, within the shadow of the first monument erected in honor of George Washington. Flags were flown at half mast until his burial in John Eager Howard's vault in St. Paul's Cemetery, Baltimore, Md., on Saturday, January 14. The United States Supreme Court adjourned in tribute to him. In 1865 his remains were removed to Mount Olivet Cemetery, Frederick, Md., in order to fulfill one of his lifetime wishes:

May my remains rest within the shadow of the everlasting hills of Frederick County which I love so well.

In 1898 an imposing shaft was erected at the entrance to the cemetery, and the remains of Francis Scott Key and of his beloved wife were placed in a tomb at its base. Near the monument there flies a United States flag, night and day, a symbol of those fateful hours on the night of September 13 and 14, 1814.

Fort McHenry, over which Francis Scott Key saw the "stars and stripes" so proudly and defiantly waving on that morning after the bombardment, is now reserved by the Federal Government as a national monument and historic shrine. The Star-Spangled Banner Flag House, 844 East Pratt Street, Baltimore, wherein Mary Young Pickersgill made the mammoth flag—30 by 42 feet—which Mr. Key named the Star-Spangled Banner in his poem, is now maintained by the patriotic people of Baltimore as an historic shrine. Both of these institutions of inspiration and education are visited annually by thousands of persons.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a speech delivered on December 18, 1942, by the Honorable JOHN W. MCCORMACK, majority leader of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, at the dedication of a plaque for the 168 men of Temple Israel in Boston, who are in the armed services.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, Tuesday, after the regular business on the Speaker's desk has been disposed of and at the conclusion of any previous orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to speak for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow after disposition of matters on the Speaker's desk and other orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ARENDS]?

There was no objection.

REPEAL OF THE PRESIDENT'S AUTHORITY TO ENTER INTO TRADE TREATIES

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED]?

There was no objection.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, on the opening day of the present session I introduced a bill (H. R. 744) providing for the repeal of the President's authority to enter into foreign trade treaties.

The Trade Treaty Act was enacted in 1934, in the days when the New Deal Congress was abjectly and supinely delegating its legislative powers to the Executive. It is high time that these legislative powers were recovered by the Congress, as the Constitution intends.

On January 9, 1943, there appeared an item headed "Hull promises attack on trade treaty foes," which indicates that the New Deal intends to pursue the same arrogant, dictatorial program as heretofore, which I assume it will continue to do until the Congress has sufficient courage and independence to regain its delegated legislative powers from the executive branch of the Government.

I may say in this connection that a distinguished member of the Convention which framed our Federal Constitution reminded those who were suffering from tryanny that they possessed the remedy by which to rescue themselves from such oppression. Here are his words:

How often and how long has degrading despotism reigned triumphant because the enfeebled and desponding sufferers under it have not known, or, having once known, have at last forgotten that they retain, during every moment of their slavery, the right of rescuing themselves from the proud and bloated authors and instruments of their oppression.

Under the Trade Treaty Act, the President is empowered to enter into binding trade treaties with foreign governments, without the formality of Senate ratification, as required by the Constitution. Moreover, he is permitted to reduce tariff duties, as fixed by Congress under its constitutional powers, without specific congressional approval, and without even any legislative standard for rate making. In other words, the President, under the act, now exercises discretionary legislative authority, on a scale comparable to that which he previously exercised under the invalidated N. R. A. Act, which the Supreme Court said was "delegation running riot."

There has been no constitutional test of the validity of the Trade Treaty Act because the New Deal's clever draftsmen suspended the appeal provision of section 516 (b) of the Tariff Act, which was the only remedy American producers had to test its legality.

The President has used his authority under the act to reduce American tariffs on over a thousand articles by as much as 50 percent, and he has gratuitously extended the benefit of our concessions not only to the treaty countries but to the whole world, without requiring equivalent concessions in favor of our own goods in foreign markets. Duties have been reduced without regard to differences in foreign and domestic production costs, and for the most part the American farmer has been the chief victim of these indiscriminate reductions.

Trade treaties have now been entered into with some 24 countries, and negotiations are pending with others. Under my bill, I have not only provided for the repeal of the President's authority to enter into new treaties, but also for the termination of those now outstanding, at the earliest date consistent with the terms thereof. In this way, no violation of good faith is involved. All agreements are terminable after a certain period upon proper notice, or for one cause or another.

The trade treaty program failed to accomplish either its primary objective or expanding foreign markets for the products of the United States, or its secondary objective of preserving world peace. It is wholly unsuited for dealing with the probelm of post-war readjustment. What this country needs is a foreign trade program which protects our vital interests, which is truly reciprocal, and which is geared to deal with foreign trade upon a realistic basis along constitutional lines.

WE WANT NO GESTAPO

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WEISS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Speaker, I want to voice my criticism against the new enforcement regulations of the O. P. A. regarding gasoline rationing. I do not hesitate in saying that the Fuel Coordinator's Office and the O. P. A. have done the worst job of bungling in the Capital. Ickes' office issues one order, the office of O. P. A. issues another order diametrically opposite, and the motorists of the country, who are really making every sacrifice—with the exception of a few isolated chiselers—are holding the bag.

The American public welcomes rationing to conserve supplies and price ceilings to prevent inflation. The people realize there is a war to be won, and the public's full cooperation can be had I am sure, but it will not be won by "take it or leave it" pronouncements that leave a multitude of proper and legitimate questions unanswered.

The pleasure-driving ban may be necessary, but the manner of its enforcement is against all American principles. I firmly believe that the office of O. P. A. could have made no greater error than to turn loose a bunch of "drug store cowboys," namely O. P. A. clerks, to stop and question motorists. This is not the American way. It smacks of the Gestapo and is creating bitterness and resistance. Our heritage of sacrifice is a proud one, and in the voluntary system no one will dare use his car for pleasure driving lest his neighbors quickly put him on the spot. We do not need peeping toms, snoopers, or stooges to force us to be patriotic. There is bound to be a little chiseling; we find it in all walks of life. But we want no Gestapo.

Rationing will fail if the American people get any notion that there is something smart or challenging about evading restrictions. We do not look for that to happen, but the best way to guard against it is to treat the average fellow as a partner and tell him all you can—not push him around and have a Government clerk flash a badge at him. The present policy is a Hitler one—the very thing our boys are fighting to prevent. Let us all calmly get our feet on the ground and play the game in the good old American way. It bore fruit before—it will again.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

(Mr. D'ALESANDRO asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.)

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after the other special orders entered for the day have been disposed of I may address the House for 7 minutes on Puerto Rico.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. TIBBOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and to include an editorial from the Johnstown Tribune, paying a deserved tribute to Lt. Col. Buzz Wagner. This is a fitting tribute to a great hero.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. TIBBOTT]?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, under permission heretofore granted, I received permission to include in my remarks an address of Dr. Paul J. Raver, the Bonneville Administrator, before the Inland Empire Waterways Association. The Public Printer estimates that this will require two and a half pages of the RECORD and will cost $112.50. I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD notwithstanding the cost.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. ANGELL]?

There was no objection.

GASOLINE AND TIRE RATIONING

Mr. SIKES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SIKES]?

There was no objection.

Mr. SIKES. Mr. Speaker, much has been said of the need for overhauling the gasoline and tire rationing program. The American people are seeking almost desperately for a simplification of the present unwieldy program. But I see no evidence of any determined effort on the part of O. P. A. to slash red tape and get down to earth. Let me point out that O. P. A. can safely shove its cumbersome form sheets down the throats of an unhappy public. O. P. A. does not have to answer to the public. But it does have to answer to Congress, and Congress is the voice of the people. It is our responsibility to protect our people.

I do not question the necessity for rationing. It is part of the price of war, and we are all ready to get on with it. But I deplore the endless confusion, the unequal treatment of different areas, and the complicated forms which must be filled out at every step. In the effort to achieve the real aims of the rationing program, I earnestly request on the part of those whom I am elected to represent—I demand that O. P. A. simplify its forms and streamline rationing procedures by eliminating many of the present nonessential steps; that tire registration and inspections be dropped; and that all parts of the Nation be placed under one rationing program. We are all Americans together in this struggle.

It is my further request that the continued expansion of coastal waterway, pipe line, and other transportation facilities be authorized and directed in order to relieve gasoline and fuel-oil shortages at the earliest possible minute. The real shortage is in transportation, not in gasoline and oil.

I think it is evident that there are many bureau heads now seeking to regulate businessmen and farmers who are lacking in practical experience, and who are unfamiliar with the problems of those activities and their methods of operation. As a result, confusion and righteous indignation are widespread.

Immediate correction of the unnecessary evils of the rationing program will give a great stimulus to our war effort.

LIMITING SALARIES TO $25,000

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, there has been a great deal of comment lately about the Executive order limiting salaries to $25,000.

I was a member of the conference committee which adjusted the differences between the Senate and House versions of the price control bill. Those of us comprising the conference committee discussed the question of wage limitation at length and agreed upon certain language which we considered plain enough to prohibit the President from adjusting salaries unless he found it necessary "in any case to correct gross inequities and also aid in the effective prosecution of the war." You will note that the President in order to limit salaries to $25,000 must find that two conditions exist: First, that it is to correct a gross inequity; and second, that the limitation must be an aid in the effective prosecution of the war. We deliberated upon the use of the word "and" instead of "or." The conference recommended the elimination of the word "or" and the substitution of the word "and" to prevent just such action as the President has now taken.

You will note, therefore, that the President must find that a gross inequity appears in any case before he adjusts the salary. His determination that any salary over $25,000 constitutes a gross inequity must be predicated upon a comparison of the salary reduced with all other salaries and wages, without regard to the nature of the employment or the capacity in which the recipient of the salary functions. This is socialistic in that it is an endeavor to equalize income without regard to the services rendered and is also socialistic in that it is in clear defiance of expressed legislative intent. Without regard to the merits of the Executive order in this respect, a fundamental question as to the perpetuation of American representative government is involved.

It is my intention to review this situation, and I shall probably introduce within the next 2 or 3 days legislation to amend section 4, Public, 729, of the Seventy-seventh Congress, in which the authority under which the President issued his Executive order is allegedly found.

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein excerpts from a letter from a constituent on rationing.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an article by Ernest K. Lindley on a pay-as-you-go tax plan.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, at the conclusion of the legislative program of the day and following any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

A PAY-AS-YOU-GO TAX PLAN

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 30 seconds.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, a number of Members of the House have called me asking me for an explanatory statement on House Joint Resolution 17, which I introduced on the opening day of this Congress. It concerns a pay-as-you-go tax plan. I have a special order for tomorrow, and, if anyone is interested, at that time I shall be glad to answer any questions I can on that subject.

[Here the gavel fell.]

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Wednesday next, at the conclusion of the legislative program of the day and following any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Wednesday next, following any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a very enlightening newspaper article by Richard L. Stokes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. GUYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an address by Miss Jeannette Marks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein, by request, a petition to the President.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

(Mr. JENSEN asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.)

Mr. BALDWIN of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a letter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. GILLIE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a short article, an inspirational message by one of the religious leaders of my district.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that today, at the conclusion of any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

THE MANPOWER PROGRAM AND THE SMALLER COLLEGES

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Speaker, in connection with the manpower and brainpower mobilization changes, I want to make a plea for the smaller privately controlled liberal arts colleges. I am afraid that these smaller colleges, practically all of them without sufficient endowments to carry on during the war emergency, are being sidetracked in favor of our great universities and State institutions.

I do not believe Mr. McNutt could render Americanism a greater service than to see, as far as possible, that these smaller liberal arts colleges are used in connection with the brainpower mobilization.

Let me mention a few reasons why these small colleges should be used in connection with our brainpower training program:

In 99 cases out of 100 these smaller colleges are manned from president to janitor by real American patriots who are deeply concerned, not only in winning the war, but in coming out of the conflict with our American way of life and our American institutions intact. Hence, the atmosphere found at these smaller colleges is the American atmosphere of freedom and liberty and equality of treatment. If any of our young men are uncertain as to what we are fighting for it will not take but a few months' training in one of the smaller colleges for them to find out that we are fighting to preserve that which is dearer than life to the true American—freedom and liberty and equality.

Then, too, you will find a spiritual and moral atmosphere permeating these smaller colleges that nowhere else in our educational system is found to such a marked degree. Brain power, without spiritual power and moral stamina, will never develop a man for true leadership.

While I am not decrying our large institutions of learning, I am trying to say that the main source of real American leadership is found in our smaller liberal arts colleges. For example, the publisher of Who's Who in America only recently called attention to the fact that of the last 13 Presidents of the United States 8 were educated in our smaller colleges.

If some way is not worked out to preserve these smaller liberal arts colleges, many of them will fall by the wayside before the war is over due to the fact that they do not have sufficient endowments to tide them over. This would be tragic. I do not know of a greater blow Americanism could suffer.

Mr. McNutt, it may be easier to use the facilities of the large universities and State-supported institutions, but, let me remind you, the easy way now is going to be the costly way later on. I am not thinking about the easy way. What I am thinking about is the safe way. Follow the safe way, Mr. McNutt, and save our smaller liberal arts colleges.

OFFICE OF PRICE ADMINISTRATION

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, when the appropriation providing for the administration of the Office of Price Administration was before the House, I called attention to the failures in the set-up that would make that Agency a complete failure. I called attention to their incompetent economists, to their set-up of incompetents without any business experience, and to the terrible situation with reference to rent control. These things have caused a break-down in public esteem for that organization, and these things, together with the fact that the Congress gave this Agency too much money to spend, have been a menace to our war program. I hope before we get through we will have some kind of a house cleaning. The substitution of one man for another as head will do no good unless the incompetent W. P. A. economists are thrown out and the Rent Control Administrator is thrown out.

HON. JOHN J. FITZGERALD

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I am indeed gratified, and I know that some of the old Members are also, that we have a visitor here today who was for many years the Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. Not only was he recognized as one of the ablest chairmen of that great committee, but regarded during his service as the outstanding parliamentarian of the House. I refer to the Honorable John J. Fitzgerald, of New York, who has retired from the bench, and who has come to Washington to say hello to his many old friends. I welcome him, and hope that he will continue to serve his country as he has for so many years with such great distinction.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I rise to endorse the words of my colleague the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] in paying a tribute to former Congressman John Fitzgerald, of New York. I happened to have been secretary to my father, who was in Congress in 1909 when Mr. Fitzgerald was one of the outstanding Members. I am glad of the opportunity to welcome him on his visit to the House to which he was elected in 1898. He was the foremost parliamentarian of his time and one of the ablest and wisest leaders of the House of Representatives, until he resigned in 1917 to take a high judicial position. As a member of the minority party I join in the welcome to such a distinguished American.

FLOOD CONTROL

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I have stood on this floor many times and discussed with you the flood conditions in the Ohio Valley and in various other sections of the country. The question of flood control has been with us for many years. The great flood which inundated the whole Mississippi Valley back in 1927 or 1928 awakened the people of our country to the fact that something must be done to control the floods that were disastrous to the property of people living within the reach of the waters and were also so disastrous in their depletion of the fertility of the soil over such wide areas of our country.

Immediately following the great Mississippi flood that I have just referred to, this Congress took action which resulted in the Flood Control Committee of the House becoming one of the very important committees of this body.

The Ohio Valley has just come through another rather serious flood, which was very devastating in many respects, but which, we are glad to say, was not as devastating as several other floods that have visited the Ohio Valley, which is beyond any question one of the most productive valleys of the world, not only from the standpoint of crops and farm products but also from the standpoint of industrial products. The Ohio River, with its locks and dams, has a carrying capacity greater than that of any other river in the world.

The flood of 1937 was the most disastrous flood that history records, as far as the Ohio Valley was concerned.

Immediately following that flood—in fact, before that flood had subsided—the chairman of the Flood Control Committee, at my request, began to prepare legislation which would bring relief to the thousands of people who had been rendered homeless and whose businesses had been destroyed. While the water was still 10 feet in many of the buildings in my home section I had helped to arrange for the passage of the bill which set up the Disaster Loan Corporation. And before the water had receded from the cities along the Ohio River a committee representing the Disaster Loan Corporation was functioning in southern Ohio and providing those in need with immediate financial aid to rehabilitate themselves. In this connection I should not fail to convey to this House the gratitude of the people that I have the honor to represent for the very ready manner in which the Government responded to cope with that great calamity.

Just as soon after the flood of 1937 had receded as we could get the Flood Control Committee together we prepared legislation that we hoped would prevent future floods such as the one which had scourged the Ohio Valley in January 1937. The chairman of the Flood Control Committee and myself made plans, as the result of which President Roosevelt set aside $24,000,000 to be used for flood-control purposes in the Ohio Valley. Naturally, it took considerable time for legislation to pass both Houses of Congress and to receive the approval of the President. Early in the proceedings it became evident that it would be necessary for municipalities to contribute a portion of the expense of any flood defenses that such municipalities might wish to construct. It also became evident as to the manner and method by which the municipalities would be required to come forward with their part. A canvass of the situation by the Army engineers indicated clearly that there was only one municipality in my district that could meet the requirements which the proposed law would provide. That municipality, which is Ironton, Ohio, happens to be the city in which I live. It is by far the largest city on the Ohio River in my district.

There were many people in my home city who at first felt afraid to live behind flood defenses. After long experience with the Army engineers in connection with the construction of dams and other improvements on the Ohio River I had the utmost faith in our great Corps of Engineers. They are beyond question the greatest engineers in the world. With that conviction I pressed forward probably too vigorously, but I was given the most complete assistance and encouragement by the city council and the city officials at Ironton, with the result that every detail required by the law and the Army engineers was met by proper action of the city officials and the city council with the result that my home city of Ironton was the first city in the United States to prepare itself and to claim the benefits of the new flood-control legislation. On the thirteenth day of April 1938 the first work was done on the Ironton, Ohio, flood wall. Naturally I was proud to be present on that occasion.

Now, to make a long story short, I am glad to say to you that several months ago our people, in collaboration with the Federal authorities, completed flood defenses all around the city of Ironton, Ohio. These were the first defenses commenced and the first completed in the whole country. These defenses consist of earthen levees and concrete flood walls. The Federal Government contributed approximately three and a half millions and the city of Ironton contributed approximately $700,000.

The great flood which passed down the Ohio River last week was successfully kept out of the city of Ironton. The flood defenses proved their efficiency 100 percent. The Army engineers, cooperating with the city authorities, watched the man-made defenses turn Old Man River back. Our people were saved many thousands of dollars and much anguish.

As a Representative of a grateful people, I bring you this report in the hope that we may continue this great flood-protection program so that other cities along the Ohio that have partially built flood-defense works may complete them and so that smaller communities that have not been able to meet the financial requirements of the law may be able also to get some relief.

Many people wonder why people afflicted by these periodical floods do not move from the Ohio Valley. The answer is that the most valuable asset in the Ohio Valley is the Ohio River. Water is one of nature's necessities. As water is necessary to maintain physical life, it is also necessary to maintain industrial life. The big industries of the world are built along the waterways. Nature has given us the Ohio River and it is really the life of all our activities. We who live along the river love the old Ohio, but we also want to keep her harnessed so that she may serve us and not destroy us.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

[Mr. RANKIN addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include a splendid and informative article or sketch of a man that I have always greatly admired, the Honorable Charles Evans Hughes, former Chief Justice of the United States Supreme Court. It is an article by Mr. Justice D. Lawrence Groner, Chief Justice of the Court of Appeals, appearing in the July–September issue, 1941, of Federal Probation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

VICTORY BOOK DRIVE

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, one day last week I called the attention of the Members of the House to the victory book drive, the purpose of which is to send interesting and entertaining reading to the men in the armed forces. At that time I stated that on Tuesday of this week Members would be given an opportunity to contribute whatever books they desire to this drive, and I also stated at that time that today I would inform the Members, when and where they could make this contribution. Tomorrow, somewhere between 12:30 o'clock and 1 o'clock p. m., in Statuary Hall, Members may contribute any books they desire. This is a very worthy cause, as we all know. At the time of the contribution, moving pictures will be taken of the Members delivering the books, and these pictures will be distributed throughout the country as a part of the campaign to inspire the general public to contribute as many books as possible. I hope all Members today will look at their homes and in their offices and come over tomorrow with as many books as possible.

REPRESENTATIVE JOHN J. COCHRAN

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to announce that, pursuant to the authority granted him by House Resolution 32, he did, on January 9, 1943, administer the oath of office to the Honorable JOHN J. COCHRAN, at Bethesda, Md.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution, which I send to the desk and ask its immediate consideration.

And may I add, Mr. Speaker, I am certain the Members of the House will be glad to know, that Representative COCHRAN is making excellent progress, and is on the way to early recovery.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution (H. Res. 43).

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas JOHN J. COCHRAN, a Representative from the State of Missouri, from the Thirteenth District thereof, has been unable, from sickness, to appear in person to be sworn as a Member of this House, but has sworn to and subscribed to the oath of office before the Honorable SAM RAYBURN, authorized by resolution of this House to administer the oath, and the said oath of office has been presented in his behalf to the House, and there being no contest or question as to his election: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the said oath be accepted and received by the House as the oath of office of the said JOHN J. COCHRAN as a Member of this House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

(Mr. BRYSON asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.)

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES TRANSMITTING THE BUDGET FOR 1944 (H. DOC. NO. 27)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

I am transmitting herewith a war Budget exceeding 100 billion dollars for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1943. Last year I called the Budget an instrument for transforming a peace economy into a war economy. This Budget presents the maximum program for waging war.

We wage total war because our very existence is threatened. Without that supreme effort we cannot hope to retain the freedom and self-respect which give life its value.

Total war is grim reality. It means the dedication of our lives and resources to a single objective—victory.

Total war in a democracy is a violent conflict in which everyone must anticipate that both lives and possessions will be assigned to their most effective use in the common effort—the effort for community survival—Nation survival.

In total war we are all soldiers, whether in uniform, overalls, or shirt sleeves.

BUDGETING FOR TOTAL WAR

WAR EXPENDITURES

The huge and expanding rate of war expenditures shows our determination to equip our fighting forces and those of our allies with the instruments of war needed for victory. Monthly expenditures for war purposes amounted to 2 billion dollars just after Pearl Harbor; they now exceed 6 billion dollars, and they will average more than 8 billion dollars a month during the fiscal year 1944. For the whole of the current fiscal year total war expenditures are now estimated at 77 billion dollars; for the next fiscal year, at 100 billion dollars. These estimates include the net outlays of Government corporations for war purposes and assume only a small rise in prices.

Victory cannot be bought with any amount of money, however large; victory is achieved by the blood of soldiers, the sweat of working men and women, and the sacrifice of all people. But a 100-billion-dollar expenditure program does reflect a national effort of gigantic magnitude. It calls for vision on the part of those in charge of war production, ingenuity of management, and the skill, devotion, and tenacity of the men on the farms and in the factories. It makes possible the expansion of our armed forces necessary to offensive operations, the production of planes and munitions to provide unquestioned superiority, and the construction of ships which will make it possible for us to strike at the enemy wherever he may be. It reflects the determination of the civilians to "pass the ammunition." Moreover, consumers' goods and services will have to be produced in an amount adequate to maintain the health and productivity of the civilian population. And all of this will have to be done while we are withdrawing millions of men from production for service in the armed forces.

Some persons may believe that such a program is fantastic. My reply is that this program is feasible. If the Nation's manpower and resources are fully harnessed, I am confident that the objective of this program can be reached, but it requires a complete recognition of the necessities of total war by all—management, labor, farmers, consumers, and public servants—regardless of party. Production short of these military requirements would be a betrayal of our fighting men.

This Budget does not include the detailed estimates of war expenditures which would reveal information to our enemies. An additional reason for such action at this time is that rapid developments on far-flung battle fronts make it impossible to submit a detailed war Budget for a year ending 18 months hence. I shall continue, however, to report on the broad categories of war expenditures. The following table summarizes our present estimates of war expenditures from general and special accounts and by Government corporations.

Estimates of total expenditures for war, fiscal years 1943 and 1944

[Billions]

| Object of expenditure | Fiscal 1943 | Fiscal 1944 |
|---|---|---|
| Munitions | $43 | $66 |
| Military and civilian pay, subsistence, and travel | 15 | 21 |
| Industrial construction | 6 | 2 |
| Other construction | 8 | 5 |
| Other, including agricultural lend-lease | 5 | 6 |
| Total | 77 | 100 |

This spring I shall submit the necessary information upon which the Congress can base war appropriations for the fiscal year 1944. In the meantime there are available about 170 billion dollars of unspent war appropriations and authorizations; about two-thirds of this amount is already obligated or committed. Further appropriations will soon be needed to permit letting of contracts with industry for the next year.

THE PROCUREMENT OF MUNITIONS

Total mobilization of all our men and women, all our equipment, and all our materials in a balanced production program will enable us to accomplish the production goals underlying this war budget.

Manpower.—Marked progress has been made in mobilizing manpower. In spite of the increase in the armed services, industrial production rose by 46 percent, and agricultural production by 15 percent between calendar years 1940 and 1942. Industrial production has not been delayed and crops have not been lost because of lack of manpower except in a few isolated cases. More than 10 million people have been added to the employed or the armed forces since the summer of 1940, 7 million of whom were unemployed and more than 3 million of whom are additions to the Nation's labor and armed forces.

Manpower mobilization is now entering a much more difficult phase. During the calendar year 1943 approximately 6 million people will be needed above present requirements for the armed services and war production. This number can be obtained by transferring from less essential work, and by drawing into the working force people who have not recently sought employment. Vigorous action is required to mobilize and train our reserve of women and young people, to accelerate the transfer of workers to essential industries, and to reduce harmful turn-over and migration of workers in essential industries. It also requires prevention of labor hoarding and elimination of hiring restrictions based on sex, creed, or race. I reiterate my previous recommendation for a unified and adequate rehabilitation service to make available a million persons for war industry and to restore to civil employment persons who are being disabled in the armed forces.

Manpower needs of the armed forces and of war production during the calendar year 1943 can be met without impairment of essential civilian requirements. I stress the important distinction between "essential requirements" and the thousand and one things that are nonessentials or luxuries. The production of these nonessentials wastes manpower at a time when careful economy and greater efficiency in the use of our manpower resources is imperative. Private thought and public discussion of this subject are very necessary.

Equipment.—Were it not for an unprecedented program of conversion and the building up of a new war industry during the past two and one-half years, we could not expect to fulfill the war-production program outlined in this message.

Some progress, but not enough, has been made in spreading war contracts more widely among medium-sized and smaller plants. Further efforts are necessary. In certain cases, of course, saving of manpower and materials requires concentration in those plants best equipped to produce a given commodity.

Materials.—Furthermore, war production is limited by our supply of raw materials. The available materials must be transformed into the maximum of striking power. The production of less urgent or the wrong quantity of items, or poor scheduling of production in any single plant or in the munitions program as a whole, results in waste of precious materials. The Nation's war production must be so scheduled that the right items are produced in the right amounts at the right time.

War contracts.—The procurement program must achieve maximum production with minimum waste and with the speed essential in time of war. This is the controlling objective not only for the original negotiation of contracts but also for the renegotiation required by law. The law provides for the prevention or recapture of excessive profits, thus supplementing and reinforcing the objectives of the excess-profits tax. I believe that control of the costs of production is of equal importance.

The proper negotiation and renegotiation of contracts must strive to reconcile the avoidance of excessive profits with the maintenance of incentives to economical management.

FARM AND FOOD PROGRAM

Food is a primary weapon of war. An adequate food supply is, therefore, a basic aspect of a total war program. I have placed in the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture full responsibility for determining and fulfilling the food requirements in this war. Our agricultural production is larger than ever in our history but the needs of our armed services and our allies are so great that a shortage of certain foods is inevitable. The production of the less-needed commodities must be reduced, while the production of commodities for war and essential civilian use must be increased. It is imperative also that this increased demand for food be adjusted to available supplies. There will be sufficient volume in our bill of fare but less variety. That may hurt our taste but not our health.

To facilitate this program, I am recommending appropriations for aids to agriculture totaling 837 million dollars for the fiscal year 1944. Among the major items included in the 837-million-dollar total are 400 million for conservation and use of agricultural land resources; 194 million for parity payments on the 1942 crops; and 96 million for exportation and domestic consumption of surplus commodities. Other large items included are 64 million dollars for payments under the Sugar Act; 38 million for the Farm Security Administration; and 31 million for reductions in interest rates on farm mortgages.

Prior to the 1943 appropriation acts, annual appropriations for parity payments were made a year in advance of actual need, and acreage allotments for the year ahead were used as a factor in determining payments on the crops of the current year. In the 1943 Budget and appropriation acts, provisions were made to insure that all factors used in determining the amount of parity payments on the crops of a given year would pertain to the program of that year. Also, to bring this item into conformity with our general budgetary practice, the annual cash appropriation for parity payments was omitted, but the Secretary was authorized to incur contractual obligations assuring the cooperating producers of cotton, corn, wheat, rice, and tobacco that such payments would be made, if and as necessary, on their 1942 crops.

The appropriation now requested, therefore, is simply the amount estimated to be necessary to compensate the producers of corn, wheat, and certain minor types of tobacco for the disparity between the market returns from the normal yield of their 1942 allotted acreage and the parity price return from that production. It is expected that no parity payments will be necessary on the 1942 crops of cotton, rice, and most types of tobacco.

Since the established national policy is to assure the cooperating producers of these basic crops parity prices on the normal yields of their allotted acreages, I am again recommending that the authority to incur contractual obligations for such payments on future crops be renewed.

On the other hand, I am recommending a reduction of 50 million dollars in the appropriation for conservation and use of agricultural land resources. I am also directing the Secretary of Agriculture to utilize the 400 million dollars still provided under this heading as fully and effectively as the basic law will permit to encourage greater production of the crops essential to the war effort. This fund will not be used for restoration of production except of less-needed crops. Payments will be made only to those producers who comply fully in their plantings with the stated war-production goals.

For exportation and domestic consumption of agricultural commodities the Budget includes only the permanent annual appropriation of 30 percent of customs revenues provided by law, plus reappropriation of unobligated balances. The food-stamp plan, which is a major item of the current program, will be discontinued shortly. Although other items such as school lunch and school milk projects and the direct distribution of surplus commodities are somewhat expanded, there will be an over-all reduction of about 30 million dollars.

Provision for operations under the Farm Tenant Act and for loans, grants, and rural rehabilitation are continued on about the same level as for the current year. Small farms, like other small war plants, must be encouraged to make a maximum contribution to the war. I hope the Congress will give as much sympathetic consideration to these smaller and poorer farmers as it has given to the smaller and poorer industrial concerns.

Because no one can immediately foresee all the needs we may encounter in fulfilling our essential war requirements for agriculture, various loan and purchase operations, involving contingent liabilities which cannot be exactly predetermined, may be necessary.

CIVILIAN CONSUMPTION

In spite of a hundred-billion-dollar war program, civilians can be supplied with an average of about $500 worth of goods and services during the next year. This implies an average reduction of almost 25 percent in civilian consumption below the record level of the calendar year 1941. Even then most of us will be better fed, better clothed, and better housed than other peoples in the world. Do not let us assume from that statement, however, that there is no need for great improvement in the living conditions of a large segment of our population.

It is the responsibility of the Government to plan for more production of essential civilian goods and less of nonessential goods. Production and distribution of goods should be simplified and standardized; unnecessary costs and frills should be eliminated. Total war demands simplification of American life. By giving up what we do not need, all of us will be better able to get what we do need.

In order to distribute the scarce necessities of life equitably we are rationing some commodities. By rationing we restrict consumption, but only to assure to each civilian his share of basic commodities.

The essentials for civilian life also include a good standard of health and medical service, education, and care for children in wartime as well as in peace.

THE STABILIZATION PROGRAM

We must assure each citizen the necessities of life at prices which he can pay. Otherwise, rising prices will lift many goods beyond his reach just as surely as if those goods did not exist. By a concerted effort to stabilize prices, rents, and wages we have succeeded in keeping the rise in the cost of living within narrow bounds. We shall continue those efforts, and we shall succeed. By making effective use of all measures of control, we shall be able to stabilize prices with only a limited use of subsidies to stimulate needed production.

Some would like to see the controls relaxed for this or that special group. They forget that to relax controls for one group is an argument to relax for other groups, thereby starting the cost-of-living spiral which would undermine the war effort and cause grave post-war difficulties. Economic stabilization for all groups—not for just the other fellow—is the only policy consistent with the requirements of total war. I have read of this bloc, and that bloc, and the other bloc, which existed in past Congresses. May this new Congress confine itself to one bloc—a national bloc.

Stabilization goes beyond effective price control. Under war conditions a rise in profits, wages, and farm incomes unfortunately does not increase the supply of goods for civilians; it merely invites the bidding up of prices of scarce commodities. The stabilization of incomes and the absorption of excess purchasing power by fiscal measures are essential for the success of the stabilization program. I am confident that the Congress will implement that program by adequate legislation increasing taxation, savings, or both. Thus, we will help to "pay as we go" and make the coming peace easier for ourselves and our children.

CIVILIAN CONTROLS IN TOTAL WAR

Total war requires nothing less than organizing all the human and material resources of the Nation. To accomplish this all-out mobilization speedily, effectively, and fairly we have had to adopt extensive controls over civilian life. We use the Selective Service System to man the armed forces. We are systematizing the movement of labor to assure needed manpower to war industries and agriculture. We regulate prices, wages, salaries, and rents; we limit consumer credit; we allocate scarce raw materials; and we ration scarce consumer goods—all to the end of providing the materials of war and distributing the sacrifices equitably.

Such regulations and restrictions have complicated our daily lives. We save rubber, metal, fats—everything. We fill out forms, carry coupons, answer questionnaires. This is all new. We have overdone it in many cases. By trial and error we are learning simpler and better methods. But remember always that reaching the objective is what counts most. There is no easy, pleasant way to restrict the living habits—the eating, clothing, heating, travel, and working habits—of 130,000,000 people. There is no easy, pleasant way to wage total war.

About 400,000 civilian employees of the Federal Government are engaged in the task of civilian administration for total war. They direct and schedule war production; handle the procurement of food, munitions, and equipment for our armed forces and our allies; supervise wartime transportation; administer price, wage, rent, labor, and material controls and commodity rationing; conduct economic and propaganda offensives against our enemies; and do necessary paper work for the armed forces.

Besides these Government employees, millions of men and women volunteers—who draw no pay—are carrying out tasks of war administration, many of them after long hours at their regular occupation. These patriotic citizens are serving on draft boards, on war price and ration boards, in the civilian defense organization, the War bond campaign, and many other activities. They deserve the gratitude of their countrymen.

More than 1,600,000—or approximately three-fifths—of all Federal civilian employees are engaged directly in war production. They build and load ships, make guns and shells, repair machines and equipment, build arsenals and camps, sew uniforms, operate airports and signal systems. These are the workers in navy yards, arsenals, storage depots, military airfields, and other operating centers. It is scarcely ethical to try to make people believe that these workers are holding down armchair or unnecessary Government jobs.

This huge organization, created overnight to meet our war needs, could not be expected to function smoothly from the very start. Congressional committees and many individuals have made helpful suggestions. Criticism is welcome if it is based on truth. We will continue our efforts to make the organization more fully effective.

Compensation of Federal employees.—Last month the Congress took temporary and emergency action, which will expire April 30, 1943, relative to compensation for Federal employees. The legislation removed inequities, lengthened the workweek to conserve manpower, increased payment for longer hours, and provided bonus payments for certain employees. The pay increases should be met largely by reducing the total number of employees proportionate to the increase in the workweek.

In the present appropriation requests and expenditure estimates for the fiscal years 1943 and 1944, no allowance has been made for any cost increase resulting from the adjustment in Federal salaries.

The problems of Federal salary administration need further study in the early days of the new Congress for enactment of more permanent legislation for the duration of the war.

"NONWAR" EXPENDITURES

I am making recommendations in the usual detail for so-called "nonwar" appropriations for the fiscal year 1944. This classification includes the same items as in former years.

Actually, the "nonwar" classification now has little, if any, meaning. Most of these expenditures are related to the war effort and many are directly occasioned by it. This "nonwar" category includes, for instance, expenditures for war-tax collections, for budgeting, disbursing, and auditing war expenditures, and for statistical and scientific services to war agencies. It includes also such items as the control of white pine blister rust, which I recently discussed. Expenditures for controlling this threat to our timber resources are necessary to avoid possible loss of millions of dollars in lumber from trees which require more than 50 years to reach maturity.

All counted, there are less than 850,000 civilian employees of the Federal Government, including the Postal Service, who are engaged in these so-called "nonwar" activities.

A few weeks ago I transmitted to the Congress a comprehensive report on "nonwar" expenditures during the past decade. This document demonstrated the important reductions which had been made in these expenditures, especially since the start of the defense program.

The following table summarizes reductions analyzed in the report, to which it is now possible to add revised estimates for the fiscal year 1943 and estimates for 1944 as developed in this Budget.

"Nonwar" expenditures, fiscal years 1939–44 (excluding interest and statutory debt retirement)

[Millions]

| Fiscal year | Total nonwar expenditures | Reduction below 1939 |
|---|---|---|
| 1939 | $6,516 | |
| 1940 | 6,246 | $270 |
| 1941 | 5,298 | 1,218 |
| 1942 | 5,125 | 1,391 |
| 1943 (estimated) | 4,582 | 1,934 |
| 1944 (estimated) | 4,124 | 2,392 |

The table shows a reduction of 36.7 percent in nonwar expenditures in the next fiscal year compared with 1939. In appraising these reductions, it should be borne in mind that large items, such as veterans' pensions and social-security grants, are controlled by legal or other commitments. In fact the outstanding increase for the fiscal year 1944 is for the Veterans' Administration, for which expenditures are estimated at 879 million dollars, or 265 million dollars higher than in the current year. Most of the increase is for insurance for our fighting forces in the present war.

The most important reductions recommended for the coming year relate to work relief and general public works. Because of present high levels of employment, I am able to recommend elimination of the Work Projects Administration. This action under present conditions does not cast upon the State and local governments more than the proper burden of financing the relief of those who are unable to work. Expenditures for general public works will be greatly curtailed. Continuing projects are directly related to war needs. Others have been discontinued as rapidly as this could be done without risking the loss of the investment already made.

I shall be glad to cooperate with the Congress in effecting further reductions in nonwar expenditures through the necessary revision of underlying legislation and in every other way. It should be pointed out to the Congress and to the Nation, however, that we are fast approaching the subsistence level of government—the minimum for sustaining orderly social and economic processes—and that further reductions will necessarily be of much smaller magnitude than those already achieved.

My recommendations contemplate that in the fiscal year 1944, 96 cents of every dollar expended by the Federal Government will be used to pay war costs and interest on the public debt, and only 4 cents for all the so-called nonwar purposes.

INTEREST

War financing has raised the requirement for interest on the public debt from 1,041 million dollars in 1940, the fiscal year before the defense program started, to an estimated 1,850 million dollars for the current year and 3,000 million dollars for the fiscal year 1944 under existing legislation.

FINANCING TOTAL WAR

THE NEED FOR ADDITIONAL FUNDS

Financing expenditures which will exceed 100 billion dollars is a task of tremendous magnitude. By meeting this task squarely we will contribute substantially to the war effort and clear the ground for successful reconstruction after the war. An adequate financial program is essential both for winning the war and for winning the peace.

Financing total war involves two main fiscal problems. One problem is to supply the funds currently required to pay for the war and to keep the increase in Federal debt within bounds. The second problem is caused by the disbursement of 100 billion dollars a year to contractors, war workers, farmers, soldiers, and their families, thus adding many billions to the people's buying power, at a time when the amount of goods to be bought is declining steadily. A large portion of this excess buying power must be recovered into the Treasury to prevent the excess from being used to bid up the price of scarce goods and thus undermine the stabilization program by breaking price ceilings, creating black markets, and increasing the cost of living.

We cannot hope to increase tax collections as fast as we step up war expenditures or to absorb by fiscal measures alone all excess purchasing power created by these expenditures. We must, therefore, provide a substantial portion of the needed funds by additional borrowing, and we must also use direct controls, such as price ceilings and rationing, for the protection of the consumer. Nevertheless, the more nearly increases in tax receipts follow increases in expenditures, the better we safeguard our financial integrity and the easier the administration of price control and rationing. All of these measures are interrelated. Each increase in taxes and each increase in savings will lessen the upward pressure on prices and reduce the amount of rationing and other direct controls we shall need.

The revenue acts of the past 3 years, particularly the Revenue Act of 1942, have contributed greatly toward meeting our fiscal needs. In the fiscal year 1944 total general and special receipts under present law are estimated at $35,000,000,000, or almost six times those of the fiscal year 1940. But the increase in expenditures has been even more rapid.

I believe that we should strive to collect not less than $16,000,000,000 of additional funds by taxation, savings, or both, during the fiscal year 1944.

On the basis of present legislation, we expect to meet 34 percent of total estimated Federal expenditures by current receipts during the fiscal year 1944. If the objective proposed in this message is adopted, we shall meet approximately 50 percent of expenditures during the fiscal year 1944.

THE NEED FOR A BALANCED AND FLEXIBLE REVENUE SYSTEM

I hope that the Congress in working out the revenue program will consider that the fiscal measures must be designed not only to provide revenue, but also to support the stabilization program as well by deterring luxury or nonessential spending. The cost of the war should be distributed in an equitable and fair manner. Furthermore, care should be taken that the fiscal measures do not impair but actually promote maximum war production. Finally, it is more important than ever before to simplify taxation both for taxpayers and for those collecting the tax, and to put our taxes, as far as feasible, on a pay-as-you-go basis.

I cannot ask the Congress to impose the necessarily heavy financial burdens on the lower and middle incomes unless the taxes on higher and very large incomes are made fully effective. At a time when wages and salaries are stabilized, the receipt of very large net incomes from any source constitutes a gross inequity undermining national unity.

Fairness requires the closing of loopholes and the removal of inequities which still exist in our tax laws. I have spoken on these subjects on several previous occasions.

The Congress can do much to solve our problem of war finance and to support the stabilization program. In the past, wars have usually been paid for mainly by means of inflation, thereby shifting the greatest burden to the weakest shoulders and inviting post-war collapse. We seek to avoid both. Of necessity, the program must be harsh. We should remember, however, that it is a war for existence, and not taxation, which compels us to devote more than one-half of all our resources to war use. An effective program of war finance does not add to the total sacrifices necessitated by war, but it does assure that those sacrifices are distributed equitably and with a minimum of friction.

We should remember, furthermore, that helping to finance the war is the privilege mainly of those who still enjoy the receipt of incomes as civilians during the war. It is a modest contribution toward victory when we compare it with the contribution of those in the fighting forces.

By the end of the current fiscal year, the public debt will total 135 billion dollars. By June 30, 1944, it will be about 210 billion dollars under existing revenue legislation. Before the present debt limit of 125 billion dollars is reached, the Congress will be requested to extend that limit. To do this is sound, for such a debt can and will be repaid. The Nation is soundly solvent.

PREPARING FOR TOTAL VICTORY

Preparing for total victory includes preparing the base on which a happier world can be built. The tremendous productive capacity of our country, of all countries, has been demonstrated. Freedom from want for everybody, everywhere, is no longer a utopian dream. It can be translated into action when the fear of aggression has been removed by victory. The soldiers of the fighting forces and the workmen engaged in military production want to be assured that they will return to a life of opportunity and security in a society of freemen.

The economic stabilization program, although born of war necessity, will greatly facilitate post-war reconstruction. A determined policy of war taxation and savings will aid in making post-war problems manageable by reducing the volume of additional borrowing and supporting the stabilization program. Because of the unavoidable magnitude of interest-bearing debt, taxes probably will never revert to their pre-war level. But substantial reduction from the war level will, nevertheless, be possible and will go hand in hand with a greater human security if the underlying fiscal structure is kept sound.

I shall be happy to meet with the appropriate committees of the Congress at any and all times in regard to the methods by which they propose to attain the objectives outlined in this message. We are at one in our desire quickly to win this war and to avoid passing on to future generations more than their just share of its sacrifices and burdens.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—WORK AND WORK RELIEF

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Expenditures and ordered to be printed:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington.

To the Congress of the United States:

As required by the provisions of the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1942, I present herewith a report of the operations under this act to the end of the fiscal year 1942.

This report contains summary and detailed statements of the Treasury Department reflecting expenditures made, obligations incurred, and the status of funds under the above-mentioned act. In addition thereto, information is presented covering the Relief Acts of 1935, 1936, 1937, 1938, 1939, and for fiscal year 1941. These statements compiled as of June 30, 1942, constitute the eighth annual accounting to the Congress for relief and work-relief expenditures. Such reports have been submitted at the beginning of regular sessions of Congress as provided for in the above cited Emergency Relief Appropriation Acts.

Reports of operations of the Work Projects Administration and the Employees' Compensation Commission in connection with funds appropriated under these Emergency Relief Appropriation Acts, are also included.

EXECUTIVES OF THE OFFICE OF PRICE ADMINISTRATION

Mr. HILL of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my own remarks and include therein a quotation from a broadcast by Mr. Fulton Lewis, Jr.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday evening, January 5, 1943, Fulton Lewis, Jr., explained in some detail the background and experience of the gentlemen in the executive department now controlling, directing, and writing the details of the Office of Price Administration. In order that Members of Congress may know the background of the gentlemen who have under their control the life and death of all American business activities, I enclose quotations from this address:

Leon Henderson didn't devise and work out the gasoline or the fuel oil rationing program; he didn't write the tens of thousands of pages of regulations; and the point I'm making it's not curing anything to merely replace Mr. Leon Henderson with someone else, and leave in place the same machinery that failed to do a successful job for Mr. Henderson.

And so I've spent a great deal of time, trying to find out for you just who did conceive and plan these programs; who devised them, to be submitted to Leon. I want to say in advance that there are absolutely no personalities involved, in this, they are all very earnest, hardworking, sincere people, and very nice people too—that's not the question—this rationing business is a vitally important part of the war effort, and the sole consideration is whether the people whom Mr. Henderson had working for him and advising him are qualified, by their experience and knowledge to do the job of price fixing and rationing that has to be done. In the case of price fixing, they almost have life and death power over the whole distribution system of the Nation—because they have the life and death of every retail merchant in the Nation in their hands, and that is the distribution system.

Now, here are the facts.

You know, of course, the background of Mr. Henderson himself. He was a professor of economics, at Carnegie Tech University; then a consulting economist for the Works Progress Administration—the WPA; then a member of the Securities and Exchange Commission.

Under Mr. Henderson, as a sort of super deputy administrator, of the whole Office of Price Administration program, is Mr. John E. Hamm (who happens to be Mr. Henderson's wife's cousin) and then, under Mr. Hamm are four deputy administrators, each in charge of a particular branch of activity, and they in turn have various divisions under them, each one headed by a director.

By way of generality, as for Mr. Hamm—I might mention that he is a young man who graduated from Princeton University, in 1930, with a degree of bachelor of science in economics. He was connected for some years with the Russell Sage Foundation, which is an institute of economics which Mr. Henderson himself was associated for many years, and Mr. Hamm came directly to the Office of Price Administration from that organization.

Now, we get down to the four deputy administrators.

First of all, there is Mr. J. K. Galbraith, who is in charge of price control. That's the business of price ceilings, etc. He is a professor of economics at Princeton University, now on leave of absence to serve in this job with the Office of Price Administration. Before becoming a professor at Princeton, he was a professor at the University of California, and at Harvard.

Number two, is Mr. Paul Porter. He's in charge of rent control. He's a young attorney and a very nice one, who used to work with the Washington office of the Columbia Broadcasting System. For a considerable period that was only a part-time job, however, and he held part-time legal jobs in the Government. He has never had any particular real estate or rental experience, but I will say he tells a very excellent story, and is a most delightful luncheon companion. If that helps any.

No. 3 is Mr. Dexter Keezer. He's a professor of economics, formerly at Cornell University, and he now is president of Reed College, at Portland, Oreg. He was in the old National Recovery Administration at the beginning of the New Deal, and was a member of the national advisory committee of the National Youth Administration. His job in the Office of Price Administration is to take charge of all research.

No. 4 is Mr. Paul M. O'Leary, who is in charge of rationing. He's a professor of economics at Cornell University, on leave of absence to serve in his present position. He used to be connected with the old National Recovery Administration, too. And, I might add, he also was on the Temporary National Economic Committee, which you may remember several years back. That was the so-called monopoly investigating committee. I've been unable to find any past background on Mr. O'Leary to indicate that he has ever had any practical experience in any line of private endeavor. His biography indicates that he has been nothing but an economist from the beginning.

And maybe I'd better interject there a little reminder to you. Remember, in all this talk about economists, it's very difficult to know, really, what an economist is. Economics is spoken of as a science. It's professed as a science. As a matter of fact, it's nothing of the sort. Medicine and engineering and all of the real sciences of the world are based on tangible facts and provable realities. Economics is purely a structure of guesses built on more guesses. Theories about what individuals think would happen if things were done this way or that way. It has only one law that has stood up through time—the law of supply and demand—and that's not a law at all; it's an action of human psychology and behavior, and the economists merely borrowed it from there.

But let's go on.

Under these deputy administrators are some very important divisions, so let's look and see who are the directors of those divisions. The gentleman in charge of price control on industrial materials? Mr. Donald H. Wallace, who is an assistant professor of economics at Williams College, in New England. He used to be an assistant professor of economics at Harvard.

And the gentleman in charge of price control in the vast world of retail trade? He is a Mr. Merle Fainsod, who is an assistant professor of government at Harvard and a member of the faculty of the Littauer School of Public Administration. He also was on the monopoly investigating committee, and he has written a book entitled "Government and the American Economy."

And the gentleman in charge of the fuel and gasoline rationing program? He is Mr. Joel Dean, assistant professor in the school of business at the University of Chicago, on leave of absence while he is handling the job here in Washington.

Those are the people who are directing the rationing program of the Nation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WHITTINGTON). Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] is recognized for 35 minutes.

FORCES BEHIND THE SMEAR-PURGE CAMPAIGN

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks and include therein correspondence between a Member of the other body and Attorney General Biddle.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

CONSPIRACY TO DESTROY CONGRESS BY FALSE PROPAGANDA AND BY THE MISUSE OF JUDICIAL PROCESS BY SPECIAL ASSISTANT ATTORNEY GENERAL WILLIAM PI MALONEY

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, it is doubtful if there is a Member of this House who is not aware that, during the last campaign, a determined effort was made to defeat, by the use of false propaganda charging disloyalty, Members of Congress who were opposed to the New Deal; who had supported the Dies committee and fought the Communists in their effort to overthrow by force and by subterfuge this Government of ours.

That campaign was so widespread, so bitter, so unfair, so vicious, wicked, unscrupulous, and false that the voters of the Nation put their stamp of disapproval upon it by reelecting those who were its intended victims.

On the 8th of December 1942 on the floor of this House it was charged by me—RECORD, pages 9396–9405—that certain individuals, organizations, and publications were engaged in a conspiracy, not only to defeat Members of Congress, who had opposed the subversive efforts of the Communists and the new dealers, but to destroy the confidence of the people in the Congress as a whole.

Had that campaign been successful, the usefulness of the Congress as a coordinate branch of the Government would have been ended. Similar efforts to discredit the Congress still are being made. Among the individuals, organizations, and publications named as engaged in the smear-purge campaign were the following: Eugene Meyer, publisher of the Washington Post; the Washington Post; Dillard Stokes, alias Jefferson Breem, alias Quigley Adams, a reporter for the Washington Post; William P. Maloney, a special assistant to United States Attorney General Biddle, who acted in conjunction with Stokes; Walter Winchell, who acted as a prophet for Maloney; the twice-convicted head of the Communist Party, Earl Browder; Nathan Cowan, legislative representative of the C. I. O.; the C. I. O. as an organization; Marshall Field III, the inheritor of several millions of dollars; his two publications, one the PM of New York, expressing views similar to those of the Communist official publications, and the Chicago Sun, each brought into existence and wet-nursed by Field's inherited money; Frank Kingdon and L. M. Birkhead, both writers and distributors of literature tending to create disunity and destroy the morale of men in the armed forces; Editorial Publications, Inc., which prints the New Republic; the Daily Worker, official publication of the Communist Party; the New Masses, another communistic rag; the Union for Democratic Action, an organization engaged in subversive activities, and many others. The efforts of the individuals and organizations just named were so coordinated, the propaganda put out by them so similar, that all who knew the facts were aware that they were acting together. That they, in truth and in fact, were engaged in the common purpose of attempting to destroy one of the three branches of the national Government, the Congress of the United States. They knew, as did every intelligent person, that if the confidence of the people, of the men in the armed forces of our Nation, in their chosen representatives could be destroyed, the morale of the armed forces would be impaired. They knew, or they should have known, that, under section 9 of title 18 of the United States Code, any attempt to interfere with or to impair the morale of the military or naval forces of the United States was a subversive activity. At least two of those named above, William P. Maloney, the special assistant to the Attorney General of the United States, and Dillard Stokes, reporter for the Washington Post, knew as a matter of fact that such action on their part was a violation of that section of the Federal law, for they, at the time they were engaged in such an effort, were also engaged in an effort to cause the indictment of other citizens of the United States for a violation of that section.

The statement made by me on the floor of the House on the 8th of December 1942 was in support of a resolution which I had introduced on the 3d of December, asking for the appointment of a committee of the House—

(a) To ascertain and to name the individuals, organizations, and associations circulating false charges of disloyalty against those who were candidates for either the House or the Senate in the primaries and general election held during the year 1942;

(b) To ascertain and report the amount of money expended by those making, disseminating, and circulating such charges;

(c) To ascertain and report upon the methods used, the source from which the funds were derived, and if possible, the ultimate purpose of those engaged in such activities;

(d) To ascertain and to report whether a conspiracy was carried on to injure persons in the exercise of their civil rights and, if such conspiracy existed, to report what, if any, legislation is needed and what action should be taken by Government officials to prevent a recurrence of such action and to bring to justice those taking part in such conspiracy;

(e) To ascertain and report in what respect, if any, the laws of either the States or the Nation have been violated in carrying on such activities;

(f) To recommend what legislation, if any, should be passed to end pernicious political activities;

(g) To recommend what, if any, prosecutions should be instituted to punish those guilty of any violations which may have occurred;

(h) To recommend to this Congress what steps should be taken to protect the Congress of the United States and the Members of that Congress from false charges of disloyalty made while a war is in progress;

(i) To report what, if any, further action should be taken to prevent disunity, and to aid in the prosecution of the war, insofar as the same can be accomplished by putting an end to the making and the dissemination of false charges of disloyalty.

Because of the adjournment of Congress, no action was taken upon the resolution introduced on the 3d of December. That resolution was reintroduced on the 6th day of January 1943, and is now known as House Resolution 13.

Some may have doubted the existence of such a conspiracy but the fact that such a conspiracy did exist has now been admitted by the editor of one of the publications charged with being a party thereto, that is, PM, the adopted child of the multimillionaire Marshall Field III. From the December 1942 issue of that publication I quote the following:

He—

says we conspired to beat him and other splendid Americans of his stripe for reelection to Congress last month. He is right. We did so conspire.

The effects of the acts so far performed by the conspirators are violations of sections 51 and 61, title 18, of the United States Code. Those sections make it unlawful for two or more persons to conspire, to injure, threaten, or intimidate any citizen in the free exercise or enjoyment of any right or privilege secured to him by the Constitution or the laws of the United States, or to, in the same manner, interfere with the right of any person to vote, or to vote as he may choose, or to cause any person to vote for or not to vote for any candidate for the office of Member of the Senate or of the House of Representatives. The foregoing statements of fact and the confession of Kenneth Crawford, one of the conspirators, make it imperative that this Congress, not to protect the individual Members of Congress, but to protect Congress as an integral part of our National Government, ascertain and expose those who carried on that conspiracy and gain whatever information may be necessary to prevent a repetition of that offense. It is necessary that Congress do this rather than the Department of Justice, for one of those engaged in that conspiracy, William P. Maloney, is an official of the Department of Justice, and the experience of the Dies committee has demonstrated that it is futile to ask Attorney General Biddle to investigate Communists in Federal positions.

The facts brought out by me on the 8th of December disclosed to the House that William P. Maloney, while acting as an assistant attorney for the United States, in conjunction with a reporter for the Washington Post, one Dillard Stokes, and others, used his official position to aid the effort to defeat Members of Congress—both Congressmen and Senators; Maloney, according to his own interpretation of section 9, conspired with others to induce individuals to commit an act of sedition within the District of Columbia, and by his acts gave aid to the widespread effort to destroy the confidence of the people in their elected representatives.

The facts narrated on that occasion show conclusively that Maloney and Stokes were seeking to accomplish the same purpose that Earl Browder, head of the Communist Party, and the exconvict, and others who have been named, were seeking to accomplish, that is, the defeat of those who had opposed the Communists.

The natural and inevitable result of the efforts of those who sought to destroy the confidence of the people in their chosen representatives by falsely charging them with disloyalty and lack of patriotism was to interfere with and to impair the loyalty, the morale of the men in the military and naval forces of the United States.

The false charges of a lack of patriotism, published and circulated by those seeking to defeat Members of Congress, beyond question came to the knowledge of men in the armed forces of the United States and of men about to be called into those forces, and might well, under Assistant Attorney General William P. Maloney's interpretation of section 9 of title 18 of the United States Code, be considered a violation of that section.

The facts called to the attention of the House on the 8th of December disclosed an abuse by Maloney of his official position which was so damaging that on the 10th of December the gentleman from Pennsylvania—Mr. JAMES P. MCGRANERY, RECORD, 9457—and the gentleman from Pennsylvania—Mr. Elmer J. Holland, RECORD, 9462—without in any way disputing the statements of fact made by me on the eighth, rushed to the defense of Mr. Maloney.

Apparently their efforts were unsatisfactory, for, on the 14th of December, the gentleman from Kansas—Mr. John M. Houston, RECORD, 9533–9535—took up the task of defending Mr. Maloney.

Two of these gentlemen, Mr. Holland, of Pennsylvania, and Mr. Houston, of Kansas, are no longer Members of Congress, and no reply would be made to them, had not each asked me to answer certain questions.

Neither they nor the other gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCGRANERY] gave me notice that they intended to interrogate me, or that they intended to refer to me in any way when they spoke. Nor was I on the floor at the time either made his remarks. Nor did I have knowledge that either intended to speak.

Notice was given the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCGRANERY] that I intended to reply to his remarks today.

Each one of the gentlemen just named ignored the real issue raised by the resolution introduced by me, calling for an investigation of this now-admitted conspiracy.

The purpose of that resolution was not to stifle investigation or prosecution by any agency of the Government. The purpose was not to aid in any way any of the defendants charged with subversive activities. The purpose was, and is, as stated in the resolution, to expose those who were engaged in an effort to destroy a coordinate branch of the Government and to take such proceedings as might be necessary to end that effort.

Another purpose of that resolution is to bring to the knowledge of the public the manner and the extent of the misuse of the processes of the court by William P. Maloney while acting as attorney for the United States of America, in the hope that hereafter citizens of the United States may, here in the District of Columbia, be given a fair, speedy, and impartial trial, in accordance with the law of the land.

The three gentlemen who took the floor to defend William P. Maloney neither answered nor denied the charges made against him. Following the course usually pursued by an attorney for a guilty man, instead of defending Mr. Maloney by challenging the truth of the statements made, they set up a man of straw, raised a false issue, and directed their attack against me.

The charge they made against me was that I had misused the franking privilege, and through carelessness, or inadvertence, had permitted copies of speeches which I made on the 27th and the 30th of January 1942 to fall into the hands of and to be circulated by two Nazi agents. One, it was alleged, was Viereck, who has been convicted of being a Nazi agent; the other named was a Mr. Griffin, who was indicted for subversive activities on the 4th day of January last.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCGRANERY] began his remarks by saying—RECORD, 9457—that I made a statement "dealing with a grand jury investigation now being conducted by one William Power Maloney, a distinguished, able, and courageous lawyer here in the District of Columbia."

If the Members of the House will refer to my remarks of December 8, they can read on page 9399 what some of the United States district courts have said about Mr. Maloney and some will conclude that those courts, before whom Mr. Maloney has practiced, may be more familiar with his record than is the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

One of those courts said:

> The prosecutor was not averse to indulging his talent for spectacle; chorus girls and movie stars were paraded to the stand to prove only minor portions of the Government's case.

The court then continued:

> Theatrical demonstrations, however diverting to the spectators and jury, have no place in a United States courtroom. Nor was the intemperance of several attacks made upon defendants and their counsel in keeping with the Supreme Court's reminder that the prosecutor is to regard himself as "the servant of the law."

The gentleman was in error when he said that the Member from Michigan made a statement "dealing with a grand jury investigation now being conducted." The grand jury investigation to which I referred, as is shown by the RECORD, was the grand jury which was in session last year, and the life of which had been ended prior to the time when my remarks were made.

At no time, on no occasion, have I complained of the fact that William P. Maloney or a grand jury was engaged in investigating the subversive activities of anyone. That is not only a necessary activity, but is one which is highly desirable. On all occasions have I supported all such lawful efforts. Proof of this is found in my consistent support of the Dies committee.

In exposing seditious and subversive activities in the United States, the Dies committee has been outstanding. It has been the one agency which has had the courage to expose those activities in the Federal Government itself—even when carried on by officials of the Federal Government.

Comparisons are odious but inasmuch as those who are engaged in a conspiracy challenging the patriotism of Members of Congress did it by associating their names with the names of German agents, let us take a look at the RECORD. Recognized throughout the country as a committee which has done more than any other agency to counteract subversive actions of the agents of foreign governments is the Dies committee.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. Holland, was not elected until May 1942, and the RECORD, so far as I have examined, does not show his support or opposition by vote to the Dies committee.

The gentleman from Kansas, Mr. Houston, on two occasions in the Seventy-sixth Congress voted in favor of the Dies committee. When the question came up in the Seventy-seventh Congress and the roll was called the gentleman did not vote either way—CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 899. When again in the Seventy-seventh Congress the roll was called—CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 2297—the gentleman from Kansas, Mr. Houston, voted against continuing the Dies committee.

In the Seventy-sixth Congress the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McGRANERY] when the question of continuing the Dies committee came up was 1 of 35 who voted against that committee. Again in the Seventy-sixth Congress, when the roll was called, the gentleman voted against the Dies committee. When the roll was called in the Seventy-seventh Congress at its first session the gentleman failed to vote. Twice in the second session of the Seventy-seventh Congress the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McGRANERY] voted against the continuation of the Dies committee—see CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, pages 2297 and 3758.

Now it is matter of common knowledge that practically every Communist in the country, every Nazi agent in the country, every agent of Japan, every organization which is opposed to constitutional government was an enemy of the Dies committee.

The RECORD shows that one of these gentlemen who defended Maloney voted twice for the committee, once failed to vote, and on the last occasion voted against it; that the other gentleman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McGRANERY], on four occasions when there was a record vote, voted against that committee.

Would I be justified in using the methods employed by the gentleman from Kansas, Mr. Houston, when he asked, on the 14th day of December last—CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 9534—referring to me, "But, Mr. Speaker, does he really mean to make common cause with these conspirators?" Would I be justified in adopting the methods followed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McGRANERY] on December 10—CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 9457—who, referring to me, said:

> The kindest thing that I, as a Member of this House, could say to the gentleman is that they—

Meaning Viereck and Griffin—> fooled him.

The fact that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McGRANERY] has continuously opposed on the floor of this House and is recorded as an opponent of the Dies committee, which is engaged in exposing subversive activities, does not justify the inference that he supports subversive activities.

The fact that the gentleman from Kansas, Mr. Houston, on one occasion failed to vote for the Dies committee, and on another occasion voted to discontinue the Dies committee does not justify the conclusion that he opposes an investigation of subversive propaganda.

It was further charged, by innuendo and insinuation, that I had inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD two articles, one entitled "Are You an American?", the other captioned "We Burned Our Fingers Once—Will History Repeat?" for the convenience of Nazi agents.

Those two articles were inserted in the Appendix of the RECORD by me. The one entitled "We Burned Our Fingers Once—Will History Repeat?" was inserted on May 19, 1941—see Appendix of the RECORD, A2354. It was not written by a Nazi agent. It was not inserted for the benefit of a Nazi agent nor at the request of such an agent. It was an article written by me, containing a quotation from a well-known British writer, Hilaire Belloc. It was put into the RECORD by unanimous consent, and from that day to this no Member of Congress has asked that it be expunged. It was not at Viereck's request, and the copies which were franked out, except those which went to voters in my district, were sent to members of the patriotic organization known as the Purple Heart.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McGRANERY] and the other two Members who rushed to the defense of Maloney might recall the old saying that even the devil can quote Scripture to serve his purpose. Maloney took part in a smear campaign while using the mask of prosecuting those engaged in subversive activities.

Those statements which I put in the RECORD were, at the time they were made, statements of good, sound, patriotic American doctrine.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McGRANERY] finds fault because, on December 26, 1940, I inserted an editorial written by one William Griffin, and published in the New York Inquirer. Griffin has since been indicted. He may or he may not be guilty.

But I have no apologies for inserting that editorial. The first paragraphs of my remarks on that occasion are as follows—and bear in mind that they were made on the 26th day of December 1940—almost a year before Pearl Harbor:

> Mr. Speaker, it is time that Americans face the truth and, meeting the facts, determine whether they owe allegiance to their own country, America, or to some foreign nation.
> It is time that loyalty to our own country determine our actions. No longer should animosity toward one nation or one people, friendship toward another, so influence us that we forget ourselves.

The heading of the editorial of which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McGRANERY] complains is this. I quote:

> ARE YOU AN AMERICAN?
> Let Christmas spur us to fight for peace for the United States of America.

The next to the last paragraph of that editorial reads:

> Why quit our own to stand upon foreign soil? Why, by interweaving our destiny with that of any part of Europe, entangle our peace and prosperity in the toils of European ambition, rivalship, interest, humor, or caprice?

Has that a familiar ring? It is a part of Washington's Farewell Address, in which he admonished us to avoid foreign entanglements.

Is the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McGRANERY] opposed to letting the American people read again a part of the Farewell Address of the first President of our country?

Would the circulation of that address of Washington by Viereck or Goebbels or Hitler himself be termed a seditious act or an improper act?

If those who were for the first time elected to Congress last November are in any doubt about the Americanism of that editorial, my suggestion is that they read it. It will be found on pages 6975 to 6976 of volume 86, part 18, of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

I was doing my utmost to keep this country out of the war, and the American people had been assured by the President himself that never again would our soldiers be sent to fight a war on foreign soil.

Was it wrong to make an effort to avoid war? The White Paper claims our State Department was making a like effort. It was no more successful than I. Nor did I vote to send scrap, oil, and gas to Japan to be used against China.

Was it criminal, was it improper, for me or for anyone else, for the State Department itself, to use every legitimate means within our power to keep this country out of the war? Eighty percent of our people wanted to stay out.

The argument of all those who conspired to smear—to purge—Senators and Congressmen, to destroy the confidence of the people in their chosen representatives, is that because the agents of Hitler used statements made by Senators or Congressmen, or others, all those making such statements are disloyal, unpatriotic. As well might it be said that the manufacturer of a knife, of a gun was guilty of murder because someone used the weapon to kill. With equal justice might it be said that the discoverer of anesthetics used to relieve the pain of the sick and the suffering was guilty of murder because some criminal had used one of those anesthetics to destroy life. As well might it be said that an isolated page from the Scriptures quoted by Hitler or one of his agents to serve his purpose should never have been written, or that the Bible containing it should never have fallen into the hands of a Nazi or a Jap. Similar reasoning would convict the workman in a factory who makes the gun, which, taken by armed forces to the battle front, falls into the hands of a German or a Jap and is then used to deal out death to our own soldiers. The end of a rope cast to the drowning man thrown overboard from a destroyer may save him; falling into the hands of the enemy, it may be used to hang him.

The patriotism of the individual is to be judged, not by the use which some criminal, which some foreign agent, makes of what he says or does or creates, but by the yardstick of the purpose for which it was made or created.

Another gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. Holland, speaking on the 10th of December last—CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 9462—when he had been a Member of this House but for 6 months, sought, by cleverly linking the names of Viereck and Hill to statements printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, to show that I had made improper use of the franking privilege. It is quite evident that the gentleman was woefully ignorant of the proper use of the franking privilege. That others may not be misled as was he, I quote correspondence from the legal staff of the Post Office Department, heretofore printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, May 28, 1942, page 4727:

On November 19, 1937, a letter was written to the then Solicitor of the Post Office Department, Karl A. Crowley, by the then minority leader of the House, Bert Snell. That letter is as follows:

"DEAR MR. CROWLEY: Will you please give me a ruling on the following: Is it legal for a Member of Congress to frank communications, either typewritten or mimeographed, dealing solely with the public business?"

In reply the following was written under date of November 23, 1937:

"The receipt is acknowledged of your letter of November 19, requesting to be advised whether it is legal for a Member of Congress to frank communications, either typewritten or mimeographed, dealing solely with the public business.

"It is provided by 39 United States Code 327 that: 'The Vice President, Members and Members-elect of, Delegates and Delegates-elect to Congress, and the Resident Commissioners from Puerto Rico and the Philippines, shall have the privilege of sending free through the mails, and under their frank, any mail matter to any Government official or to any person, correspondence, not exceeding 4 ounces in weight, upon official or departmental business (until the 1st day of December following the expiration of their respective terms of office).'

"Your inquiry is accordingly answered in the affirmative."

I wrote the Office of the Solicitor of the Post Office Department the following letter:

"On page 18519 of the daily CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of September 14, 1940, I extended my remarks by including an article on the March of Democracy.

"If I have copies of these remarks printed by other than the Government Printer and in different type, may I still send them out under my franking privilege?"

On the 25th following, my letter was answered in these words:

"In answer to your letter of September 21, which the Solicitor has referred to this office, you are advised that the act of Congress of March 3, 1875, embodied in section 609, Postal Laws and Regulations, provides as follows:

" 'The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, or any part thereof, or speeches or reports therein contained, shall, under the frank of a Member of Congress or Delegate, * * * be carried in the mail free of postage.'

"The place of printing of extracts from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD or the style of type used does not affect their frankability. In this connection, I may say that when it is desired to send under frank extracts from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, the extracts should, in order that their character may be apparent on the face, bear such identifying indicia as will clearly show that they are from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD."

Inasmuch as under the law cited by the Legal Division of the Post Office Department, I was advised that my speeches contained in the RECORD might, under the law, be carried in the mail free of postage, just what was Special Attorney Maloney attempting to do?

On no occasion since coming here more than 8 years ago have I misused the franking privilege.

The gentleman asked:

Will the gentleman from Michigan deny that two mail sacksful of a speech delivered by him on the floor of this House, in which he called the President a Judas, was delivered to Mrs. Bethune in Washington and that the speeches in those mail sacks were enclosed in franked envelopes bearing the frank of the gentleman from Michigan?

That question was answered on the floor of the House on May 28, 1942, RECORD, pages 4728–4729.

I certainly do not deny that copies of two talks made on the 27th and the 30th day of January 1942, later condensed into one, were reprinted.

That talk was entitled "Don't Haul Down the Stars and Stripes." It did not refer to the President as "a Judas." It did refer to those who want to haul down the Stars and Stripes, substitute for the Declaration of Independence a declaration of interdependence; who want to surrender our national independence and make us a part of a super world government, as betrayers of our independence.

We have been told by the President of the United States and others that our national existence is at stake. We have been told that 1,500,000 Americans have already crossed the seas for the purpose of maintaining the American way of life. We have been told that there are 7,500,000 men in the armed forces of the United States.

For what are they fighting? Are they not fighting for the preservation of our Union? Are they not fighting to keep the Stars and Stripes flying? Are our men fighting and are they dying so that politicians, after the war is over, may surrender our independence, submerge our Constitution in a United States of the World or in a United Nations of the World? Are they fighting and are they dying so that, when the war is over, the Stars and Stripes, the symbol of our liberty, of our freedom, of our progress, shall be hauled down and, in its place, the flag of Union Now, the Flag of a United Nations of the World, the flag of a United States of the World, shall be unfurled in its place?

Does any Member of this House know of anything which would more effectively impair or destroy the morale of the fighting men of our country, of the people of our country, than to lead them to believe that, after all the sacrifices have been made, after our men have fought and perhaps a million of them have died in foreign lands, on strange seas—that, after all that, the Stars and Stripes are to be hauled down and the flag of Union Now or of some other organization be run up in its place.

It was in opposition to that drive that my talks of January 27 and 30 were made. It was in opposition to that un-American activity that copies of that talk—more than 130,000 of them—were sent out. Hitler himself, if he read that talk, would realize that here in America there were those who proposed never to surrender our independence and that this Nation, to the last man, would fight on against any nation or any combination of nations which thought to destroy our freedom, to make us a puppet state or subject us to the will of any foreign potentate.

The program which I then cried out against is still being carried on, and there are those who, instead of devoting their energies to the winning of this war, to the preservation of the United States of America, are still seeking to destroy our independence as a Nation.

There are those who not only want us to be the arsenal of democracy, which we are; there are those who not only want us to be the granary of the world, as we are; there are those who, like Vice President Wallace, would have the American farmer furnish a quart of milk a day to every inhabitant of the world; there are those who while our American farmers lack the machinery to grow the crops to produce the food to feed our armed forces; machinery which we are sending to other lands; there are those who not only want us to be after the war is over a glorified W. P. A. for all the world but there are those in high places who have gone so far along the lines of internationalism; who think so little of the liberty and the freedom won by our forefathers through the 8 long terrible years of the Revolutionary War that they would now surrender our existence as a free and independent Nation and make us a part of a super world government.

On the 27th and on the 30th of January 1942—a date which the gentleman neglected to give—on the floor of the House, I made talks which were afterward, by permission of the House, consolidated, and under the title "Don't Haul Down the Stars and Stripes," around 165,000 of those speeches were reprinted and all but a few distributed. A reading of that speech will show that the President was not referred to as a Judas. The purpose of that speech will be outlined in my subsequent remarks.

At the request of a Mrs. Goode, president of a patriotic organization which has been in existence 42 years, and which is known as Dames of the Loyal Legion, I did cause to be delivered to Mrs. Bethune, here in Washington, several thousand copies of that speech in franked envelopes to be mailed to members of an organization. Is there anyone in this House who has any objection to that procedure? I was informed by Mrs. Bethune herself that Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, wife of Franklin Delano Roosevelt, and Mrs. Francis Biddle, wife of Attorney General Biddle, were members of that organization, and that franked copies of my speech were sent to them. Undoubtedly, the two distinguished women received them. Would it be too much to express the hope that they read them, and from the reading derived some small benefit?

Other copies of that speech went to Charles B. Hudson, Gerald B. Winrod, and David Baxter—none in franked envelopes.

Other copies of that speech went to other individuals. Heretofore there has been inserted in the RECORD by me a list of those to whom these speeches were sent in franked envelopes in quantities of 100 or more—CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, May 28, 1942, pages 4728–4729. I have no apology to offer for making those speeches, for sending them out, for the manner in which they were sent out, and my only regret is that I was unable to comply with the requests for hundreds of thousands of other copies of that speech.

Then the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. Holland, asks:

What use did the gentleman from Michigan intend that these conspirators should make of his speech?

Those indicted, and some of them twice indicted, and referred to by the gentleman as "conspirators," have not yet been convicted. As to the use which I expected would be made of those speeches, I would state to the gentleman, if he were here, that it was my hope that they would be widely circulated and that those reading them would reach the same conclusion that I had, that in the fighting of this war we would not lose the very things for which the war was being fought, and that we would, when the war is over, still be a nation independent and free. I, too, regret that I was not able, and that I have not been able since, to place a copy of that speech in the hands of every American citizen. Yes; every American citizen, even though some of them be in jail, charged with a criminal offense, even though some of them be convicts, sentenced to serve time in prison.

Apparently not satisfied with the defense of Maloney made by his two colleagues, the gentleman from Kansas, Mr. Houston, on the 14th day of December 1942—CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 9533—undertook a further defense of Mr. Maloney. He first complained that some of the gentlemen named by me had no method of defending themselves. It is a matter of common knowledge that Lt. Comdr. Walter Winchell had for weeks not only been speaking over the radio but that his column had been printed in many newspapers throughout the land. Marshall Field III, according to common report, is able to sink $20,000 a month in his PM publication, he is able to finance the Chicago Sun, and he certainly had the money and the men to carry on the smear campaign against Members of Congress. The Washington Post and Dillard Stokes cannot claim inability to defend themselves.

Then the gentleman, abandoning his defense of Maloney, Stokes, Marshall Field, complains because they were linked with a convicted Communist, Earl Browder, the Daily Worker, New Masses, the Union for Democratic Action, and others. It is unfortunate that those gentlemen and publications traveled along in the smear campaign with those to whose company they now object. But they should be the last to complain, for they have all followed the procedure of linking the names of Senators and of Congressmen with the names of convicted Nazi agents even though they had nothing in common. Getting a dose of their own medicine when they have asked for it, and when it is justified by the facts, they squawk, and by their squawks show their yellow streak.

The gentleman from Kansas and the other gentlemen complain of the procedure which they themselves, Maloney, and others, have used to smear Members of Congress. It is quite true that certain persons have been convicted on indictments returned by a grand jury, but that is no evidence that Members of Congress are disloyal or unpatriotic.

He complains because it is said I did not draw the issue between the Government and its enemies. I never have complained, I never will complain, of any action which the Government may take to prosecute its enemies. I have complained and I shall continue to complain, when the administration which is not the Government, uses the power of the Government to prosecute its critics and political opponents.

Then the gentleman asks the tricky question whether I really mean to make common cause with these conspirators. Just when did the gentleman learn that those indicted were conspirators? He knows very well, for he states, that those who have been indicted have the benefit of the same legal presumption of innocence that clothes any and every citizen until he is proven guilty. They have not been convicted. Each is presumed to be innocent. They should not be called conspirators until a jury has so decided.

If Maloney and Stokes, alias Breem, alias Adams, did not conspire and connive with others to induce some of the defendants to mail what Maloney designates as subversive literature to Stokes here in the District so as to get jurisdiction of the individuals subsequently indicted, why did they induce those individuals to mail that literature? The principal charge which I made, and the gentleman should know it, was that there was a conspiracy—not against the 28 persons indicted, but against Senators and Representatives, against Members of the Congress—a conspiracy to smear and to purge them.

The subterfuge used by Maloney and Stokes to enable them to lay the venue of the offense here in Washington enabled them, through the use of the grand jury, to spread their smear in the Washington papers, to send out news dispatches from Washington and so intimidate Members of Congress who might be inclined to speak out against the procedure of the Communists; the plans and schemes of the New Dealers, which have since brought confusion to the war effort, and a shortage not only of food, but of fuel and essential materials, so that our war activities have in many cases bogged down.

I know nothing at all of the evidence against the persons who have been indicted. I do not know whether they are guilty or innocent. The gentleman himself said:

> I do not know whether they are guilty or not.

Knowing that, why did the gentleman repeatedly, in his remarks, brand them as conspirators. Why did he, at times in his remarks, assume that they were guilty of a conspiracy?

Let me now answer his question as to whether I make common cause with those who have been indicted. I do not, and so far as I can recall, I never met one of them prior to his indictment. I might ask a similar unfair question of the gentleman from Kansas. Did he really mean to make common cause with those who were engaged in the smear and purge campaign against his colleague? Did he intend to assist the convicted Browder? The gossip-monger Winchell? The man Maloney? The tool Stokes? Of course, he did not. He is too honorable a man to engage in such a nasty plot. Or to use the methods they used. He had as much purpose, he was as much a part of that vicious, wicked, reprehensible, smear-purge campaign as I was a part of any conspiracy to further subversive activities—and neither of us had any part in either action.

LET US GET THE ISSUE CLEAR

Let me restate the issue. Let us get the issue clear. At no time have I protested against the indictment of any person; at no time have I made any objection to any investigation; at no time have I defended any man who has been indicted, although each and every person who has been indicted, until convicted, is presumed to be innocent.

The complaint which I made on the 8th of December, the complaint which I now make, the evil which the resolution, which I introduced on the opening day of this session of Congress, seeks to reach is the smear campaign carried on for the purpose of destroying the confidence of the people in their chosen Representatives. Incidentally, I complained, and I now complain, because of the misuse by Maloney, an assistant to the Attorney General of the United States, of his official power, used as it was in furtherance of that conspiracy to destroy the Congress, a coordinate branch of our Government. That is the way—and the only way—that Maloney got into the picture.

According to Attorney General Biddle, the grand jury, over a period of 71 days, heard evidence in connection with this charge against the 28 against whom an indictment was returned on the 24th day of July 1942. That indictment charged that they, on or about the 28th day of June 1940, and continuously thereafter, conspired to commit acts prohibited by section 9 of title 18, United States Code, which section was enacted into law for the first time by act approved June 28, 1940—Public, No. 670, Seventy-sixth Congress.

On August 8, 1942, one of the defendants filed a motion questioning the validity of the indictment. Four days later, the Government asked for an additional 30 days in which to answer that charge. The answer was not filed, and in December, Justice Adkins called upon the Government to answer the charge which called in question the validity of the indictment. The case drifted along, and on January 4, this year, a new indictment, making practically the same charge as the first one, was returned against the original 28 defendants and 6 others. There is something rotten somewhere when a United States attorney, after spending 71 days in taking testimony, refuses, from August 8, 1942, to January 4, 1943—for over 4 months—to meet the challenge to the validity of its action. Gentlemen on this floor have referred to Maloney as a distinguished, able, and courageous attorney. His failure to meet the motion filed by the defendants in this conspiracy case shows that he lacks courage, and the filing of a new indictment shows his lack of legal ability.

Since the filing of the motion on August 8, 1942, Maloney has caused 12 of the defendants named in the first indictment to come to Washington to answer to the charge which he refused to defend. He has forced these defendants to put up bonds in the sum of $39,000. Some of these defendants have been held in jail; some lack money to employ competent counsel; some were dragged across the continent to meet the charge which Maloney made in July, and on which he would not try them prior to January 4 last, when he caused a new indictment to be filed. One of these defendants, on November 12, 1942, living in the Midwest, received a wire from Maloney's office telling him to be in court to argue a motion on November 16. That defendant appeared and after sitting in court, inquired of Justice Adkins when the motion would be argued. Maloney replied that he was not prepared to argue the motion, and then admitted that the reason for calling the defendant from his home in the Midwest was to ask him the name of his lawyer. The fact that the judge presiding did not approve of such conduct did not help the defendant defray the costs of a round trip from his home to Washington.

Other facts of persecution and oppression have been committed by Maloney. Maloney's procedure smells to high heaven. The Constitution provides, among other things, that no citizen shall be twice put in jeopardy. That means, of course, that no citizen shall be twice tried for the same offense. But the thought behind that provision is that no man shall be twice prosecuted for the same offense. A man indicted has not been put in jeopardy—so the courts have held—but what is the difference in principle between indicting a man, arresting him, compelling him to come a thousand or three thousand miles to the court where he is to be tried, give a bond or be thrown into jail, then filing another indictment against him for the same offense, and again drag him from his home, compel him to give bond or throw him in jail.

Here is a question for some of the lawyers of the House. Some of these defendants in this conspiracy indictment, for lack of bond, were placed in jail. Then came the new indictment charging them a second time for the doing of the acts set forth in the first indictment. Again they are arrested, again required to make bond or be jailed. Failing to make bond on the first indictment the defendant is thrown into jail. He fails to make bond on the second indictment which charges him with the same conspiracy. Again for failure to make bond he is in jail. If able to get bond on the first indictment he is still in jail on the second indictment. Just how many indictments can Maloney return against the same defendant for the same offense? Just how many bonds can he require of the same defendant for the same offense? And just how long can he postpone a trial and keep a defendant, unable to give bond, in jail? Did Maloney have knowledge enough to properly charge the defendants in the first instance with engaging in a conspiracy? When he caused their indictment did he have the evidence to justify a trial? If so why did he not bring them to trial? Why the second indictment? Were the 71 days wasted? Did he not, after taking testimony for a period of 71 days, get enough evidence to give him courage enough to step into court before a jury here in the District of Columbia and try the defendants? The whole procedure of Maloney's is a disgrace to the Department of Justice. How much longer will the Attorney General of the United States permit Maloney and his coactors to continue to return indictments and delay the trial of those incarcerated? How much longer will the Attorney General permit his assistant, Maloney, to smear members of a coordinate branch of the Government?

I have before me a copy of the first indictment; a copy of the second indictment. With the exception of the addition of the six new defendants, there is little difference between the first and the second indictments, except the startling charge, and I quote:

> Heretofore, to wit, on or about the 1st day of January 1933, and continuously thereafter, up to and including the date of the filing of this indictment—
> January 4, 1943, the 34 defendants and an individual named as a conspirator, but not a defendant, conspired—> to commit acts prohibited by section 9 of title 18, United States Code.

Will some Member of the House, who is or who is not a lawyer, explain to me how, on the 1st day of January 1933, or on any day prior to the 28th day of June 1940, the defendants named in that indictment, or any other person or persons, could conspire to violate section 9 of title 18 of the Code, when that section was not enacted into law until June 28, 1940?

The indictment charges that for 7 years the defendants conspired and carried on a conspiracy to violate a law which was not in existence.

The three gentlemen to whom I have today referred, and who defended Maloney on the floor of the House, complained because certain speeches or parts of speeches made by me on the floor and articles placed in the RECORD by me had, in some form or another, been used by some of those persons who were indicted.

None of these gentlemen ever complained to me of the contents of any of the speeches or of the articles which were inserted in the RECORD. So far as I know, Mr. Maloney never has complained of the substance of the talk, "Don't Haul Down the Stars and Stripes," nor of the contents of the two articles placed in the RECORD. At just what point in this drive to intimidate, to suppress free speech, have we arrived? Are Congressmen to be accused of sedition because something which they said on the floor of the House, or which they inserted in the RECORD, has been circulated by someone who was later convicted of a crime?

If, on the 27th day of January, or on the 30th day of January 1942, when I made those two speeches on the floor of this House, which were afterward consolidated under the title "Don't Haul Down the Stars and Stripes," I said anything, or if in the revision or consolidation of those speeches I caused anything to be put into the RECORD which was disloyal or unpatriotic, why were my utterances not challenged? Is it possible that the House would sit here and permit, in wartime, a Member of the House to make unpatriotic and disloyal statements? Of course, it is not. The truth is there was not one disloyal word or thought in either of those talks. At no time has anyone challenged their insertion in the RECORD. Yet Maloney, knowing that those statements were printed in the RECORD, that they have never been expunged from the RECORD, quotes from them in the indictment. Why did he do that? The answer is that while those allegations are unnecessary to sustain his indictment, he hoped, by inserting them, to provide material to defeat Members of Congress. He hoped that by repeating them he would destroy the confidence of the people in Members of Congress.

In drafting an indictment it is not necessary that the evidence expected to be produced at the time of the trial be set forth. Yet, Maloney not only set out in his indictment quotations taken from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, put into that RECORD by unanimous consent of the Congress, which might be admissible evidence, but he quotes many excerpts from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD which would not be admissible evidence or, if admissible, of no probative value in establishing a conspiracy to commit subversive acts. His purpose was to show that statements in no wise improper or disloyal were used by third persons in connection with subversive activities of their own, of which Senators and Congressmen could not possibly have any knowledge. Thus he hoped by association of names to create in the minds of the American people the thought that Senators and Congressmen were acting in collusion with German agents.

To show you the absurdity of that kind of reasoning let me quote one statement made by me on the floor of the House, thereafter repeated by one of the defendants named in this indictment and which repetition, it was charged, was an overt act in furtherance of a conspiracy to impair the morale of our fighting men. On January 2, 1942, on the floor of this House, referring to a boy who had lost his brother at Pearl Harbor, I said:

> That boy said to me, in substance, "How come that the fighting planes and the bombers and the ships were not provided to aid my brother in making his fight for his country? How come they were over in the other, the Eastern Hemisphere?" And did I have an answer? No. There was no answer, except the one that we had sent the fighting planes, the bombers, the destroyers to aid Britain.

If the repetition of that statement was a seditious act, why did Maloney not indict me? Why did he not indict every Member of the House who sat on the floor and heard me make that statement and who, by his silence, at least gave tacit approval? Why did he not indict the leadership of the House because thereafter they permitted that statement to remain in the RECORD and permitted thousands of copies of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD containing it to be printed and circulated throughout the country? Though at the time that statement was made by me I was not aware of the fact, it is nevertheless true that Winston Churchill had expressed the same thought in a speech made before Congress on December 26, 1941—CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 10118. On that occasion he said:

If the United States has been found at a disadvantage at various points in the Pacific Ocean, we know well that it is to no small extent because of the aid which you have been giving to us in munitions for the defense of the British Isles and for the Libyan campaign, and, above all, because of your help in the battle of the Atlantic, upon which all depends, and which has in consequence been successfully and prosperously maintained.

If one of the 34 defendants indicted for conspiracy is indicted because that defendant repeated a thought expressed by a Congressman who but repeated a fact given utterance by Winston Churchill when speaking before Congress, I ask the membership of this House, why not indict the Congressman and Churchill?

We now know that individuals and organizations last year deliberately, persistently, carried on a campaign of abuse, falsehood, and vilification, the purpose of which was to destroy the influence of one of the three branches of the Federal Government—the Congress of the United States. We owe it to the people who sent us here, whose Representatives we are, the people who have faith and confidence in us, to strip from those individuals and groups the false mask of patriotism which they have assumed and to let them stand forth before the people of our country in their true light, their real purpose apparent.

To that end this Congress should either adopt the resolution introduced on the opening day of this session or adopt some similar procedure.

DECEMBER 3, 1942.

Hon. FRANCIS BIDDLE,
Attorney General,
Department of Justice,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. ATTORNEY GENERAL: I wrote to you some weeks ago asking for a copy of the indictment against William Griffin, and others. William Power Maloney answered my inquiry and sent me two copies of the indictment.

I have read the same rather carefully. I think I know something about indictments, the handling of grand juries, and the duties and obligations of prosecuting attorneys as I was United States Attorney for 5 years during President Wilson's administration.

In this indictment an attempt is made to smear the America First Committee which was headed up by a group of the most loyal and patriotic citizens in America, some of whom are now serving in important posts in the armed forces of this country.

In all my experience I have never known of the Department of Justice being used to smear people without foundation, excepting during the reign of Daugherty, Burns, and Gaston Means.

If the information which has come to me is true, the methods used by your Special Assistant before the grand jury here in Washington smack of an inquisition of bygone days.

I scarcely know any of the defendants—and certainly do not approve of the things which they are charged with saying and writing. I believe that they were mostly the mouthings of irresponsible people. But, however misguided they may have been, I cannot believe that some of them were guilty of a conspiracy to obstruct national defense or break down the morale of the armed forces of America.

It is entirely possible that some individuals and organizations may have had that in view, but to draft a catch-all indictment including patriotic organizations and individuals with unpatriotic organizations and individuals for the purpose of smearing them is in itself, to say the least, reprehensible and should not be tolerated in this country.

As you must know, the statute under which the first count was drafted was passed to prevent the circulation of literature among the armed forces by a well-organized group in the United States that you have publicly denounced, and by no stretch of the imagination do the facts alleged fall within that category.

Again, let me say that evidence has come to my attention of the way the grand jury here in Washington has been used, and in all candor I must say to you that I think it has been one of the most disgraceful proceedings that has ever been carried on in this country. If it happened in most jurisdictions in this country, the prosecuting attorneys would be held for contempt of court.

I know how easy it is for a prosecuting attorney to be carried away with the war spirit and to reach the conclusion that everyone who disagrees with his own views is unpatriotic, but I have always had confidence that you, with your background, would never tolerate proceedings of this kind even in time of war.

I believe you owe it to yourself and to the country to review the proceedings of the grand jury and to review the evidence and the law in this matter. I say to you quite frankly that I have discussed this with several Members of the Senate who are able lawyers, and I have yet to find one of them who knew anything about the matter but who felt that it ought to be investigated and carefully reviewed by you, or that a general investigation should be held by some committee of Congress.

May I respectfully urge you to review very carefully both the law and the evidence in this matter?

What some of these people under indictment have written, I repeat, is reprehensible, but that they should be indicted for a conspiracy to undermine the morale of the armed forces of this country, and brought thousands of miles from their homes to be tried in this jurisdiction, unless there is a great deal more than appears upon the face of this indictment, is shocking, indeed, to one who believes in preserving freedom of speech and our civil liberties.

Respectfully yours,

B. K. WHEELER.

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., December 12, 1942.

Hon. BURTON K. WHEELER,
United States Senate,

MY DEAR SENATOR WHEELER: I have your letter of December 3, 1942, with reference to the indictment recently obtained in the District of Columbia in the case of United States v. Gerald V. Winrod et al. You have expressed concern over what you have described to be "an attempt to smear the America First Committee."

You will recall that a grand jury heard evidence in this case over a period of 71 days. The problem of the connection of each individual and each organization with the conspiracy charged in the indictment was thoroughly explored and considered by the grand jury as well as by the officers of the Department of Justice charged with responsibility for the case. As a result of the investigation and consideration, the indictment was limited to those individuals who had a substantial connection with the conspiracy charged, and to those organizations which were the media through which the conspirators acted. Smearing was, and is, not our object.

You state that you have been informed that the methods used by the Special Assistant before the grand jury "smack of an inquisition of bygone days." I do not know to what you refer. I shall, of course, consider any allegations of improper conduct if you will furnish me with specific information.

Sincerely yours,

FRANCIS BIDDLE, Attorney General.

---

DECEMBER 16, 1942.

Hon. FRANCIS BIDDLE,
Attorney General, Department of Justice.

MY DEAR MR. ATTORNEY GENERAL: I am in receipt of your letter of December 12, and note you say that a grand jury heard evidence in this case over a period of 71 days. That does not mean very much to me, because of the fact for 5 years I conducted grand-jury proceedings, and know how easy it is for a prosecuting attorney to indict anyone he wants to regardless of the evidence. If you had had as much dealings with grand juries as I have had, you would appreciate what I said was true.

During the last war, all you had to do was to have a man come in and say to a grand jury a man was guilty of sedition or treason and the grand jury would indict him. The same is true with reference to petit juries, because many of them felt if they themselves didn't convict they would be suspicioned of being pro-German, or something of the kind.

I well remember a conversation I had in Washington with John Lord O'Brien, in which he said to me that the greatest trouble he had was not in getting indictments but in preventing some of the district attorneys from indicting for treason, when there was no sedition or treason.

If it were not the intention to use this indictment for the purpose of smearing the America First Committee, it would never have been mentioned in the same. Why was my name, and the names of other Senators, dragged in before the grand jury, and people asked if they knew me? Why was it that a witness would be called before the grand jury, and if he said he could not remember some details with reference to his business, he was told he would be yanked before the court for contempt of court?

I have been one of those who have felt that, with your background, you would not be a party to permitting the grand jury, in time of hysteria, to be used as this grand jury has been used. Not only that, but the indictment on its face shows that in order to establish the jurisdiction here in Washington, that your Department had somebody write letters to various groups and organizations to get them to answer, so as to bring them within the jurisdiction of this court, and try them 3,000 miles away from their home under conditions where the greater part of the population is made up of Government workers, or people who are dependent upon the Government either directly or indirectly. In other words, your Department resorted to entrapment for the purpose of obtaining jurisdiction here in the Capital.

The Department of Justice, under Harry Daugherty, did that very thing. It was condemned in no uncertain terms by my distinguished colleague, the late Senator Thomas J. Walsh, and other Members of the United States Senate.

In this country a man is supposed to be tried by a jury of his peers, by people who know something of him, and about him, and not be yanked two or three thousand miles from his home. If these people are guilty of sedition, they should have been tried in their own communities, and not take a conglomerate lot of crackpots, and bring them down into the jurisdiction of Washington.

The whole proceeding is a disgrace, and certainly does not reflect to the credit of your Department. I feel this very keenly for the reason, that when I was United States district attorney, every corporation paper in Montana condemned me, because of the fact, that I would not permit United States district attorneys' offices to be used to prosecute everybody who had the courage to speak up and criticize the Government, wrong though they might be, and in this I am glad to say, that I had the backing of Attorney General Gregory and of John Lord O'Brien.

You will recall that Attorney General Palmer started out with his Red raids, because that was the popular clamor at that time, but when the popular clamor died down, men like Judge Anderson, of Boston, and other distinguished jurists and students, condemned the whole proceedings in unmerciful language, and my colleague condemned them on the floor of the United States Senate.

I want to do everything I can to run down saboteurs, and persons guilty of treason, but I do not want to see the Department of Justice again be the object of attack, for their misuse of the criminal laws of this country.

Your assistant, Maloney, was bantering my name, and other Senators' names, around the court without the slightest foundation for so doing, trying to give the impression that some of us who were opposed to getting into the war were guilty of some crime. Your assistant in handling this matter should be someone who has the respect and confidence of Congress and the people.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, if opportunity offers tomorrow I will insert in the Appendix answers to the questions asked in yesterday's issue of the Washington Post.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under special order of the House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL] is recognized for 20 minutes.

FOOD PRODUCTION

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Speaker, it is my purpose today to discuss in the time allotted me the agricultural situation, and the serious dislocation which the farmers of my district and the farmers throughout the country are facing. A little while ago we heard a budget message from the President of the United States. Among other things, I think you will find, if you peruse its pages carefully, a statement that food is a primary weapon of war. I do not think there is very much disagreement with that statement, but there is considerable disagreement as to how the best methods of obtaining as much of that food as is possible may be brought about. Today I want to express my dissatisfaction with the way the food situation is being handled by the Government of the United States and by the agencies which are authorized to carry out such a program. I think the only fair way to describe one's reaction to the way things are going, so far as agriculture is concerned, is to go back to the actual experience which he runs across in his own locality. It is my privilege to represent a dairy district, which is one of the most productive in the country. It is also my privilege to represent as patriotic and interested a group of American farmers as there is in America. When I make observations on the floor of the House, I am sure that I do so only as a result of conferences, suggestions, advice, and instructions from those same farmers I represent, and for whom I want to do everything within my power in the Congress of the United States. As a result of those observations I am introducing a bill today, the title of which is the return to the law of supply and demand in production, and to suspend laws, regulations, and orders which restrict the production of agricultural commodities.

I shall read from the resolution so you may know what it contains:

Be it enacted, etc., That until the day following the date on which the President proclaims that hostilities of the present war have ceased all provisions of law and all regulations and orders which restrict, authorize the restriction of, or the payments of, benefits having the effect of restricting, the production of any agricultural commodity are hereby suspended.

Throughout the entire Nation, Mr. Speaker, for the past few years there has been a tendency to restrict the American farmer in his production until he has reached the point where he is just about dependent upon the Government for orders and regulations and subsidies of all kinds to run his business. I think, more than any other occupation, the American farmer has been singled out to be made a guinea pig, so to speak, for all the socialistic and bureaucratic experiments that can possibly be imagined. Under ordinary peacetime conditions these experiments are odious enough to those from farm sections. But when the farmer is restricted in production in wartime, when it is absolutely necessary to do everything within his power to produce an essential primary weapon of war, which is what the President calls food, I think it is high time that the Congress of the United States took some action for his benefit.

The dairy farmers in my section are sick and tired of regulations imposed on them which are definitely working against their doing their best in producing food for freedom.

The farmers throughout America are becoming irked and resentful over increasing regulations being placed upon them in many cases by men who never had any kind of experience in working one. I submit to you therefore that it is high time, as we are embarking upon a period of food production on the farm, to put an end to the regulations which are hampering the farmer and which make him unable to do his part in the production of food for freedom.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. As I understand it, tomorrow is M-day for American agriculture.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. I believe so.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. It seems to me that when such a significant day is placed upon our calendar, in which the farmers are asked to cooperate and produce more food, it would be a good day to remove all of the shackles which have been placed upon agriculture during the last 10 years and give them a chance to demonstrate as they want to that they can fulfill every obligation just as any other good American citizens would want to do during these critical times.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. I thank the gentleman for that observation, and I want to assure him I am in hearty agreement with his statement.

The task which appears on the horizon of 1943 for the American farmer is threefold, and it has been designated to him by the principal courses of action which the country has seen fit to take. In the first place, he owes it to his country to provide the food for the civilian population, and at this point I want to express the hope that the people of America continue to eat during 1943 and throughout this struggle in very nearly as wholesome a way as they have in the past. I sincerely feel that unless the civilian population is fed, unless the Government makes it a primary objective to feed the people of America, our war effort will be seriously crippled.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. PACE. I am interested, and I am sure the House is interested, in the comment on the farm program by the gentleman now addressing us, inasmuch as he is one of the influential members of the House Committee on Agriculture. Would the gentleman itemize a few of the limitations about which he complains and which serve as a restraint upon the production of those whom he serves?

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. I shall be glad to, although I cannot go into it very extensively due to the fact that I have a limited amount of time at my disposal. I think the most effective way would be to describe to the gentleman some of the restrictions which have been placed upon the farmers of my own district, for I am sure they have also been placed at least in part upon the farmers in the gentleman's district.

Mr. PACE. If the gentleman will permit an interruption, he understands, I am sure, that at the present time the only limitation of production relates to wheat, cotton, and tobacco.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. That may be true to a certain extent; and I assure the gentleman that so far as his district is concerned I cannot make an assertion, for I am not informed as to the condition of cotton farmers. I do know that the farmers of my own district, at least according to what they tell me all the time, are getting sick and tired of staying up all night long to fill out forms and registration blanks for this, that, and the other agency; and they are also getting sick and tired of restrictions which are being placed upon them by the authorities who, instead of helping them produce, are hindering them in their production of food for freedom.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I will answer the gentleman from Georgia by referring him to the decision of the Supreme Court recently on wheat in which decision he will find that all the activities on the farm are now completely under the control of the supreme political authority of the United States.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. I want to say to the gentleman from New York that while he is talking about the disadvantages under which the farmer is laboring he also should call attention to the fact that for the first time in the history of this Nation we have electrified farm homes in this Nation and in many States a majority of the farmers now have electricity in their homes. Seventeen thousand miles of rural power lines have been built in the State of Ohio where they had none, you might say, a few years ago. I think the gentleman ought at least give us credit for that because it is the one thing that has been done for the farmer that has benefited him.

Mr. REED of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. REED of New York. It is a pity that they cannot use some of that electric power to do something to the bureaucrats down here.

Mr. GROSS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GROSS. For the information of the House, will the gentleman from Mississippi just tell us if he is so happy over his electricity to see us farmers work about 18 hours a day while the coal miners are out on strike and freezing us?

Mr. RANKIN. If the gentleman had not worked 18 hours a day he would not have gotten back here.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. I cannot yield further, because I have several other points I want to take up.

Mr. Speaker, this bill which I have introduced takes off restrictions which have been placed upon the American farmer and which have become increasingly irksome and burdensome to him. I want to emphasize the fact that the farmer is in a serious plight today in spite of the so-called paternalistic attitude which the Government has had toward him and in spite of the many so-called things that have been done in his behalf.

I think the best evidence of the unfortunate situation he is now in is the display of auction signs that have been shown upon the floor of this House recently. These signs have been tacked up in all parts of the country. They are becoming increasingly burdensome and are threatening to dispossess the farm manager and the farm operator. It was my privilege to hear the Secretary of Agriculture some time ago testify upon the farm labor situation. In answer to a question asked him the Secretary stated that he felt it was necessary to maintain every farm manager and every farm owner on the farms of America in order to continue the food production program that has been going on. These auction signs are not too conducive to private and to individual ownership and to consistent possession of farm property, at least in my district, and I am sure this applies in every other district in the country. For this reason I say that it is high time for the Congress to take action in favor of the American farmer to encourage him and not to hinder him in the great task which has been allotted him.

I suggest that the bill which I have introduced today will if enacted into law go a long way in assisting him to do this properly. There have been many discussions about the rationing program which has been placed upon the people of the country. I am not in any way critical of the general idea of rationing, but I do raise my voice in behalf of objections I have heard about the people being pushed around by unnecessary restrictions and regulations. And the No. 1 man in the country today who is being pushed around is the American farmer.

To show the contrast in the remarks of some people who raised their voices in protest against farm parity a few months ago, I will repeat a statement I heard the other night. When the House passed the inflation bill and tacked on some of the agricultural amendments which were aimed to benefit the American farmer, they said that this was giving too much preference to the farmer. However, I heard a farmer say that the very people who had called him a gouger, one who had taken advantage of the war production effort to get every dollar he could out of this by raising his farm prices, had come to him and offered him any price for a pound of butter. That is a strange contrast to the complaint which they made a few months ago, when they objected to the whole idea of the farmer getting more money for his products. Yet today they are the same people who come to the farmer and say that they will pay any price for a pound of butter or for different dairy products he has. The whole argument there is, as this gentleman pointed out, that rationing knows no price ceiling and in spite of the effort of the Government to place price ceilings on various products, those ceilings will eventually be pushed up.

It is obvious that in spite of the statements which are being made to the contrary there is going to be a serious dearth of production in the next year unless the farmer is allowed to proceed unchecked and is given a free hand and receives all the encouragement in the world to go ahead with his production. In spite of the attempt of those in authority to distribute food properly, we have seen evidences that various sections of the country are undergoing serious food shortages. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that this problem must be corrected, and will be corrected by the bill which I have introduced today.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD what I consider a pertinent editorial appearing in the Birmingham News. It is rather enlightening and something of much interest.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL]?

There was no objection.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a radio address by Fulton Lewis, Jr., on December 18 pertaining to the scandalous use of pleasure cars by Government officials.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes at the conclusion of other special orders heretofore entered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday next at the conclusion of the regular business and disposition of business on the Speaker's desk and other special orders I may be permitted to address the House for 50 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD in two respects, in one to include a poem and in the other to include a newspaper article.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER]?

There was no objection.

SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I made a short statement awhile ago on the subject I desire to discuss and I secured permission to revise and extend my remarks on that subject; so I yield back the time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD] is recognized for 7 minutes.

ANNULMENT OF CERTAIN ACTS PASSED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF PUERTO RICO

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I am presenting a joint resolution calling for the annulment of certain acts passed by the Legislature of Puerto Rico. These acts are the backbone of the amazing scheme of government control which Gov. Rexford G. Tugwell has set up over the people of that island. These acts, which give the Governor absolute control over all forms of transportation, communications, and water resources, and set him up as a dictator over agriculture and the sugar industry are unprecedented in the democratic way of life. Moreover, the acts to be annulled call for the spending of huge sums of insular money and for the issuance of nearly $30,000,000 of bonds at a time when the people of Puerto Rico are starving and begging this Congress for large subsidies.

I am convinced that this legislation, the repeal of which I am proposing, is both unwise and unconstitutional. A Puerto Rican court already has ruled against one of the acts, that which created the Water Resources Authority. Rather than permit Governor Tugwell to get the island involved in a great mess of unconstitutional action, the best solution I can see is to annul the acts in question. The power of annulment was retained by Congress in 1917 when it approved the Organic Act of Puerto Rico.

Recently some of the politicians who have benefited from Governor Tugwell's favors came to Washington and tried to tell the House Committee on Insular Affairs that most of this insular legislation was passed before Governor Tugwell came to Puerto Rico. Of the seven acts with which this resolution is concerned, I am informed five were passed at the regular 1942 session, when Mr. Tugwell had been Governor for 6 months or more. I am also informed the bills were introduced at the Governor's request and were openly supported by him. The other two were passed a year earlier—in 1941. It is true that Governor Tugwell had not yet become Governor at that time, but he himself, in an official printed report submitted to Interior Secretary Ickes, admits that he counseled and advised with members of the legislature regarding one of the two acts—namely, the land law. The law establishing the water resources authority also was approved after Governor Tugwell had gone to Puerto Rico and after he had discussed it with members of the legislature.

Puerto Rican politicians who claim that Governor Tugwell had nothing to do with this legislation are deliberately attempting to mislead this Congress. They are trying to prove that it was the Puerto Rican people, not Governor Tugwell, who wanted this legislation, but I am informed that Governor Tugwell maneuvered every step in the program.

I am hopeful that the House will see fit to go into this matter thoroughly. When that time comes there are certain questions which must be answered.

For example, why does Governor Tugwell insist on spending many millions of dollars of insular funds on this government-control program when the island is at the same time seeking huge Federal subsidies to support the many thousands of unemployed workers?

Why did Governor Tugwell insist on creating all of these expensive new boards and authorities when every single one of the functions could have been performed by the existing and authorized branches of the insular government?

Why has Governor Tugwell selected $25-a-week drugstore clerks and $1,500-a-year geography teachers to fill $6,000- and $8,000-a-year positions as head of these new authorities?

Why did Governor Tugwell approve certain of these acts after the attorney general of Puerto Rico had advised him that they were clearly unconstitutional?

Why did Governor Tugwell wait 4 months after the date originally designated before calling a special session of the Puerto Rican Legislature last fall?

How does organized labor feel about Governor Tugwell's program in Puerto Rico?

How do the small farmers of Puerto Rico regard Governor Tugwell's program?

When these and related questions have been answered, Congress will know a lot more about Puerto Rico than it does now.

Governor Tugwell and his whole program are in thorough disrepute in Puerto Rico.

Inasmuch as the administration, for some strange reason, seems reluctant to remove him in spite of the flood of violent criticism and the disruption of economic life in Puerto Rico, the least we can do at this time is to undo some of the evil he has perpetrated in our territory.

These laws of the Puerto Rican Legislature which should be annuled are the land law of Puerto Rico, the Water Resources Authority Act, the Puerto Rican Transportation Authority Act, the Puerto Rico Development Co. Act, the Puerto Rico Communications Authority Act, the act regulating the sugar industry of Puerto Rico, and the act establishing the Development Bank of Puerto Rico.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. COLE of New York. So much smoke has come out of the Island of Puerto Rico in the last 6 months regarding Dr. Tugwell and certain phases of political and economic life down there that I wonder if the gentleman will not agree that the Congress will be very much derelict in its duty if it does not direct a full and complete and uncompromising investigation of conditions as they are in that island?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I agree with the gentleman in that observation. I was informed today that the other body expects to send a group down there some time during the current month. To me, it is almost unthinkable that this body, the House of Representatives, would sit here in view of what is going on in Puerto Rico, and not join with the other body in that investigation. Certainly that should be done.

Mr. COLE of New York. Am I correct in my understanding that the mission of the Senate committee is limited solely to the economic problems in Puerto Rico and does not include an investigation of political conditions?

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is my understanding.

Mr. COLE of New York. Does not the gentleman believe that the political conditions should also be studied?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I think the entire political and economic life of those people should be given serious consideration by an investigating joint committee from the Congress of the United States. There are about 200,000 people unemployed down there, and you will be asked to send anywhere from $20,000,000 to $30,000,000 there this year to help feed them, and that on top of almost a quarter of a billion dollars which has been poured into Puerto Rico during the last 10 years, for which we have too little to show.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. The gentleman will recall that shortly after Dr. Tugwell was appointed Governor a rumor was circulated through Washington that he was to set up a sugar cartel for sugar produced outside the United States. Does the gentleman think the continuance of Dr. Tugwell in office has anything to do with fulfilling that program?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I think so. In the last several weeks representatives have been in this country and in this city from Cuba and Puerto Rico working on the matter of disposing of the 1943 sugar crop from those two areas. I understand informally that the Cuban people are asking in excess of $2.65 per hundred pounds for sugar f. o. b. the shipping points, with the understanding that the Commodity Credit Corporation is to pay certain inland rail shipment burdens toward moving their sugar to the ports, the Cuban industry to carry certain rail transportation costs, and the Commodity Credit Corporation to assume the balance, whatever that may be.

There is a situation that touches upon the guaranteed income of farmers in that area. In Puerto Rico, where the people are citizens of the United States, the crop is to be dealt with on a dissimilar basis, but negotiations are being carried on looking to the Commodity Credit Corporation's lending money to the Puerto Ricans in the handling of their sugar, with the understanding that no interest charges are to be made on those loans where the credit is so granted.

The farmers of this country are interested in programs of that kind. It seems to me that too many of our administrators are extremely anxious to graze in far-away green fields and to carry their treatment of certain people to a much more favorable extent than the treatment given to those who grow foodstuffs in our own country and operate our own farms. So I think we can very well afford to look into that phase of the problem if this body should decide to send anyone down to Puerto Rico.

CONSTRUCTION OF ONE OR MORE PIPE LINES FROM OIL STATES TO NEW YORK FOR THE TRANSPORT OF PETROLEUM

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, there is a serious fuel situation in New York and New England, which is getting worse daily. It is beginning to look as if the people in my section of New York State will suffer chilblains and unnecessary hardships and have their health endangered because of the inefficiency and lack of foresight of the administration in not constructing one or more pipe lines a year ago from the oil States to New York and New England.

Official Washington ordered the people in my district to change their heating systems from fuel oil to coal, but on account of a coal strike in Pennsylvania the local coal dealers have only empty bins. The health of the public in midwinter is being jeopardized by the acute coal and fuel-oil shortage, for which the topsy-turvy national leadership is responsible.

It is a case of the blind leading the blind. If it were not so tragic it would be laughable. We are ordered to dispense with oil heating because of a drastic shortage of fuel oil, to learn that there is just as serious a shortage of coal.

I have introduced a bill (H. R. 917) authorizing the construction of one or more pipe lines for the transport of petroleum and its products from States in the Middle West and Southwest to the vicinity of New York City, and urge the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, as soon as it is organized, to consider it on its merits and expedite favorable action.

Let us be sure of enough fuel oil to keep warm next fall and enough gasoline to run our cars on the synthetic rubber promised by then.

Mr. R. L. Minckler, representing the Petroleum Administration for War, stated yesterday that more persons would suffer from lack of heating fuel in the United States in the winter of 1943–44 than at the present time.

The handling of the fuel-oil situation is one of the major blunders of the administration. There is plenty of oil and gasoline in the Middle Western and Southwestern States to supply the needs of our armed forces, our war factories, New York, and New England, and the rest of the Nation. It is largely a question of transportation, and particularly of pipe lines to the East.

The responsibility for the shivering millions in the East and for the slowing up of our war industries rests squarely on the administration.

I have supported every war measure since Pearl Harbor, but it seems to me the health of the American people comes before sending entire rubber tire factories and pipe lines to Russia and Asia, and giving priority on oil to South America and Canada. We should proceed immediately to build one or more pipe lines to the northeastern section of the country. These pipe lines should have been built months ago. It is too late now to remedy the fuel-oil shortage this winter, but let us make sure that it will not happen again.

The following Associated Press dispatch was published in the newspapers on Wednesday, January 6, 1943:

PRIORITY ORDER FOR TANKERS DELIVERING OIL

WASHINGTON, January 5.—Rear Admiral Emory S. Land, Chairman of the Maritime Commission, appearing before a senatorial investigating committee, yesterday listed the order in which tankers are used for the delivery of oil as follows:

1. The armed services.
2. Great Britain.
3. South American republics.
4. Central American republics.
5. Canada.
6. Essential domestic needs.

If this is the policy of the administration, then it is shocking proof of the indifference of the New Deal administration to the needs of our own people. Why should priorities be given the whole world before the requirements of our population are supplied?

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that today at the conclusion of any other special orders heretofore entered I may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN] is recognized for 3 minutes.

GOVERNOR STASSEN

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, I am taking this time to inject my remarks into a discussion that took place here on Friday last. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD] had the floor and commented on certain statements made by Governor Stassen of Minnesota. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] intimated in certain remarks which he injected into the discussion that Governor Stassen is a stalking horse for Wendell Willkie or the Democratic Party. I know Governor Stassen very well. I can assure all of you, particularly the Republicans, that Governor Stassen is not a stalking horse for Mr. Willkie. He is not a stalking horse for anybody. He may have Presidential ambitions himself. If he has, they are very laudable, because every true American has a right to aspire to the high office of President.

We think a great deal of Governor Stassen in Minnesota and of the fine job he has done as chief executive of our State. He may have certain ideas on the international situation and post-war problems. We may not all agree with his philosophies or his suggestions on that subject; nevertheless, as a real American he has a right to propose his ideas, and we have the privilege to consider them.

I have not had the opportunity to study Governor Stassen's post-war suggestions, but I am going to do so just as soon as I get the details of them. I think all Republicans, and Democrats as well, should welcome the suggestions made by our Governor as they would the suggestions made by any other American who is interested in the welfare of our country. Speaking frankly, I feel that our Governor from Minnesota has made a real contribution by presenting his proposal for the post-war period to the people of this country. His plan deserves study and consideration by Members of Congress.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. Like my colleague, I have not had an opportunity to study Governor Stassen's proposal for an international parliament, but I will say this, that the proposal made by the Governor of the great State of Minnesota, is worthy of every study and consideration by this and the other body.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I am very glad to have that contribution from my distinguished and able colleague from Minnesota.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Yes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. While this matter is up for consideration I think we should go a little further in this way. Yesterday afternoon I listened with a great deal of attention to a Chicago University Round Table discussion over the radio. It was along this general line: Who is the head of the Republican Party; what are its aims; what have been its accomplishments? and then finally they got off into a discussion of what its war relationships are, and so on. Unfortunately in the handling of that broadcast each person participating did not call the other by name, and listening with all of the attention in my power the voices of certain men were so similar that it was impossible to determine who was saying what, and about what. I know that many people were misled yesterday in that they feel that Governor Stassen made certain remarks which I am positive he did not make, because of the similarity of voice. I have written for a copy of the transcript so as to make it clear, because I think Members of the House will be requested to explain why they were so condemned by a person whom the people think was Governor Stassen, and who was one of the other speakers, having such a direct bearing upon the speech made in Minneapolis to the Foreign Policy Association, and a discussion on the floor on the 8th along with what has been said today. I think this should be pointed out.

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Yes.

Mr. JENNINGS. Does not the gentleman feel that events are moving so fast, are so kaleidoscopic, that they are stated in such emphatic terms, so as to leave a so much more lasting impression on the minds of the people, that it does not make very much difference what anybody says at any particular time on any particular subject.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. There is a lot in what the gentleman says.

After all, our first job is to win the war, and that may take some time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] is recognized for 15 mintues.

BLUEPRINTS OF THE FUTURE

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I had planned to make these remarks perhaps at a later time, but somehow in these first 2 or 3 days we have an attentive audience, and they will fit with other addresses already made today. We think we understand what Governor Stassen wants in a general way. I do not think he has many blueprints to offer as to details. I hope he has not. We have the Atlantic Charter, which is only a declaration of broad principles that can readily be accepted, namely, no more aggressor nations; freedom of the seas and freedom from fear and want. We can subscribe to those ideals. But now there are highly dangerous suggestions made by some very high in authority. They are excusing themselves by declaring that our boys should now know what they are fighting for. I think they already know. After Pearl Harbor we need little explanation of why we are at war. They do not need any blueprint of the future to complicate the situation. I want to strike a note of warning, lest our Vice President and others high in authority promise too much until they may be sure that the Congress, which speaks for the people, will support them in their commitments. I think it is important that we as a body should make it clear now that they should be very careful in their implied promises of what this Nation will do after the war. Mr. Willkie strongly urged us to make serious commitments. He was an emissary at the moment. He was regarded as an authoritative voice by many peoples. I am greatly worried. Again it is said that the boys ought to know what they are fighting for. This is an excuse for bringing forward favorite notions of building a new world.

Blueprints of almost any sort, wherein you commit the Nation to anything definite, might bring a cessation of fighting on certain fronts, if such blueprints were not acceptable, and contained meddlesome plans regarding other nations' domestic affairs. But our visionaries are very busy at the moment. I want to join in a workable plan for peace. I am not one of those old timers who desire to sit on the fence and watch the procession go by. I do wish to know where the procession is heading for. Governor Stassen says he wants a supergovernment and a supercouncil. That is something like Vice President Wallace's suggestion. He wants a supergovernment, and a sort of supercouncil. But Mr. WALLACE says that such council should act only regionally. He has probably learned that South America would have to be treated as a separate region and not be greatly subjected to the whims and fancies and ideologies of other nations. I referred to the Tower of Babel in a recent speech. That is what might occur when all nations are called together to formulate a general plan. You probably would be suspicious of your own neighbor if he talked in a language which you could not understand, because you would not feel quite sure that he was always saying things that were in full agreement with you. The matter of language, as Mr. WALLACE has suggested, is highly important; the interpreters would have a tremendous responsibility in translating too many viewpoints in various languages at one time to express identical agreements. Mr. WALLACE thinks this so important that he has long advised us to learn Spanish, and in his recent speech he declared that when this war is over we should take such a forcible part that we should even supervise the school systems of the aggressor nations; that the doctrines of Hitler and Tojo should not be allowed in the schools of the future. How they would love to have us supervise their school systems! I want you to read an article by Michael Straight, appearing in the New Republic recently. The New Republic seems to be regarded as a very literary journal, although somewhat communistic to some of us. But I am told it has a real literary value and its columns contain much from our so-called advance thinkers.

Mr. Straight declares—

> That it will be the duty of the United States to accomplish the demolition of the tensions existing between democratic and capitalistic countries—

Is not that literary?

> that it will be the duty of Great Britain to accomplish the demolition of the tension between imperialistic and the anti-imperialistic countries.

Is not that literary? In one of Churchill's statements recently he said:

> I have not been placed at the head of the British Empire to preside over its dissolution.

That was a reprimand. That seemed to mean that we should make no world plans now.

Great Britain is not to give up her advantage of empire. Freedom, of course; freedom from want, and fear, and to stop aggressor nations. That objective is harmless at the present, at least. I want to call this to the attention of my leader: Michael Straight says "The hard core of anti-Soviet and anti-British is the Catholic Church."

He is already blaming your Catholic Church, sir, as possibly the toughest nut to crack in the forming of this world dream of peace and release from fear and want. Now, be careful how you argue with me lest you be mistaken about those Mr. Straight feels will be the greatest of the opposition. The New Republic is so enlightening. The new dealers are its apparent principal contributors.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. I too got that copy of the New Republic and read it. I could not see that there was anything literary about it; it was mostly fiction.

Mr. GIFFORD. Lovely. That is as well said as if I had said it myself.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. If the gentleman were Oscar Wilde I might say: "You will, Oscar, you will."

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield.

Mr. GIFFORD. Certainly.

Mr. McCORMACK. In view of that statement who does the gentleman think is improving, the lady or the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. GIFFORD. Oh, the lady outranks me, certainly. We are under that tremendous disadvantage of having to agree with them. We would not have them suffer here from the usual and expected right to precede us in any direction.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. Has the gentleman seen the beautiful flag they have worked out for the glorified union of nations?

Mr. GIFFORD. The gentleman reads my mind because reference to that was the next I had in mind. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] spoke about this flag. Yes; there is to be a flag over all other flags—the flag of the United Nations with a supreme parliamentary government. Ours seemingly could be only a "regional flag."

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Under this plan, as I understand it, this man Davis, who is president of the Federal Union, Inc., lives up i.. the gentleman's district. Has the gentleman been able to get him to——

Mr. GIFFORD. He does live in my district.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I will withdraw that. He lives up around Massachusetts; well, that is getting a little too close to home, too. I will just say he lives somewhere up to the east. Has the gentleman learned from him whether or not if this thing goes through we are to be permitted to have the Stars and Stripes to represent us even as an inferior part of that group? Can we hope for that?

Mr. GIFFORD. It should appear in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD that this gentleman is a constituent of mine; really, he is a constituent of the United States of America. He is quite a person. He is a man most of you know; he has done much to bring about good roads all over the Nation. He feels that he knows how to spend public money for the public good. I imagine he is one of the most patriotic of men, but that sometimes is a trouble. The very sincerity of these men, especially those in high places, makes them possibly dangerous people because of their very idealism. Idealism is much talked about these days, but little understood. As Mr. Phillips wrote about Secretary Wallace a day or two ago:

> Come down out of the upper berth
> And put your feet on solid earth.

Mr. CASE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. CASE. Vice President WALLACE made a statement recently to the effect that we would have to assure the proper education of the conquered countries. Has the gentleman given any consideration to the possibility of a philosophy like that that would also require steps being taken by this Government to ensure the desired education of all of the citizens of this country?

Mr. GIFFORD. Oh, yes; we have not wholly cured ourselves yet either of want or fear and even lack the proper educational facilities for all our own people.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I think it is the Atlantic Charter that is set out in some eight basic divisions, and I believe it is item 4, or article 4, if you want to call it that, which provides in substance this: That the two Governments, the United States and the United Kingdom, shall, subject to existing obligations and to the best of their ability, provide that victor and vanquished shall in the post-war period participate in the sharing of the raw materials of the earth and the markets upon equal terms. Some day I hope the gentleman with an understanding of these matters will take at least 30 minutes to discuss item 4 of the Atlantic Charter with respect to the proposition of sharing equally markets and raw materials.

Mr. GIFFORD. I want to express my humility in this matter. I have a scrapbook that is very large, already filled with material I have been gathering on this subject during the last several weeks. I spent a long day perusing it yesterday.

Violent differences of opinion and insistence on meddling with the affairs of other nations give me grave forebodings for the future. The free flow of raw materials meets with apparent general favor, but the free flow of manufactured goods would mean a revolution, I fear, even in our own country. To exchange goods that we have for those we do not have seems possible, but between countries having only similar goods it would be most difficult. I am taking these few minutes because I think it is necessary for the Congress to call a halt. Winston Churchill certainly has called a halt. Great Britain is unwilling to give up colonial domination—what some term colonial exploitation. Russia and China and India may not join the world of nations unless we pledge ourselves to see that England does give up her so-called imperialism. Are we ready to demand that? We are treading on very dangerous ground. I will subscribe and you will subscribe to the general aims of that Atlantic Charter. We desire to see to it that there be no more aggressor nations. But to meddle with their ideologies and their educational methods, and all that sort of thing we may well at present make few commitments. It is treading on dangerous ground while a world war is in progress.

I have talked with a number of college professors, and other splendid men of high ideals and intellectual capacities living at the famous Cosmos Club. I have that opportunity. How anxious they are to build a better world! We all are. Many say we should now provide a real peace plan because after the war is over there will be hatred in the hearts of many nations toward each other and they will be in no temper to frame a reasonable peace. Yet they are setting up an international court already, and I approve it, where they are providing that all Japanese, German, and Italian leaders who are found to have committed atrocities will be dealt with and adequately punished. Have those leaders no faithful followers? When we say that we will punish their leaders, are their people to be more submissive, or will their hatred increase? Our job now is to win the war. At the moment it is paramount but must not be jeopardized by blueprints that might be unacceptable to our allies. Controversy asserts itself when we see the actual blueprints. We can form a sort of Atlantic Charter in our own community for its betterment and the people gladly agree to it. But when we are presented with the blueprints, the Methodists and the Congregationalists will begin fighting. Any too definite plans which meet with the disapproval of the United Nations are fraught with danger. That is why I am taking the floor at this time. Let also your voice be heard. We hear from high places, the Vice President, the Secretary of State, and others. We must warn them to proceed slowly. They are terribly sincere in their desire to make the world over. But the great responsibility is ultimately ours. Any President can get us into war or other trouble by his diplomatic action at almost any time.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD]?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. The gentleman from Michigan a moment ago called the gentleman's attention, as well as the attention of the House, to the phraseology of the Atlantic Charter and to the words "with due regard to existing obligations." Has the gentleman heard from any source whatsoever what the existing obligations were at that time?

Mr. GIFFORD. I have not, but the gentleman well knows that after the last war our President, Mr. Wilson, found when he arrived in Europe that there had been secret treaties made, of which he had had no knowledge. What do we know about the commitments, or rather implied promises, which have already been made by our emissaries who were sent over to Russia and to China?

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Or what agreement was reached by Mr. Churchill and Mr. Roosevelt before they arrived at that agreement?

Mr. GIFFORD. We do not know much of these matters. Take the illustration of today. The administration sends us a budget, but they do not wish to give us a blueprint in detail relating to vast sums recited in that Budget. Any details might be of value to our enemies. Blueprints of what we may ask of our allies after the war is over would indeed be of value to our enemies.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The gentleman has referred to the necessity of our being careful in making commitments. We have one course. We have the "four freedoms" speech, we have lend-lease, and some $60,000,000,000 provided to implement the Lend-Lease Act. We have the Atlantic Charter, then we have the British master agreement, and I think it is the eighth article in the British master agreement, if my memory serves me right, which provides that the lend-lease and the Atlantic Charter become a portion of and a part of the British master agreement. These commitments have been made and they will have to be dealt with by public opinion of this country. That is what I have reference to.

Mr. GIFFORD. I am sorry, but the gentleman is so exactly right about that lease-lend business. It is boastfully said by these people who want to make the world over that under extension of the lend-lease plan we can preserve the peace and it will cost us as much as the waging of the war. A long continuance of our lending, leasing, and giving is contemplated. The lend-lease idea is evidently to go on and on until demolition of the tension between the democracies and the capitalistic countries is accomplished. I feel very strongly about this matter, but my protest will not amount to much. Will some of you of real influence and persuasion sound a further and clarion call of caution?

There are two opinons and the proponents of each are very insistent. One is that we need to formulate the peace now or the Allied Nations might not continue to fight. But some of the nations might not fight because the peace plans may not please them. Therefore, I say, let us first win the war and be content with general aims of the Atlantic Charter. It will take many years to formulate a plan for a United Nations of the world. Let us give this attention. Even if you be misunderstood and accused of lack of idealism, urge caution on our leaders, and better control of their enthusiasms to involve our country in the maelstrom of world politics.

We earnestly plead that we are all in entire accord to make this world safe against aggressor nations.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I am greatly distressed over the turn that the debate has taken this afternoon. We cannot discuss, neither should we discuss, lease-lend, because that is a permanent investment, therefore beyond our poor power to change. Some of the speakers who have preceded me would deprive the dreamers down at the other end of the Avenue of the privilege to dream. What was it the poet said about dreamers and dreaming? If you deprive them of their dreams and the right to dream, why you may just as well immobilize them in a tomb, because that is as far as they usually get.

I like to think as one with HENRY WALLACE, coming as I do from one of the great dairying sections of the country. It thrills me to think that after this war is over Uncle Sam, with millions of cases of milk, will visit the underprivileged families in all the earth and set a bottle of Minnesota milk down in front of each member of the family each morning. It certainly would create a market for milk, and that is good news out in Minnesota. Little has as yet been said about cake and butter, but they will probably get around to that oversight soon.

Of course, if we are going to do all these things for all these people, what will be left for us Americans? As I understand the program—and my distinguished friend from Massachusetts can correct me if I have not grasped the full purport—the plan is to set up a glorified W. P. A. with a glorified Harry Hopkins to administer it. I presume we will set great, big tables loaded down with what we Scandinavians call smörgåsbord, where they may go round the table with plates and help yourselves—not you but they.

I hope we will not spend all that we have in this war. Let us save something to spend in making this a better world for those who have not and do not miss what they do not have.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. GRAHAM (at the request of Mr. KINZER), indefinitely, on account of death in his family.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK]?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I just want to repeat what I said earlier in the day and I know repetition on my part will not be misunderstood. I refer to the importance of looking over this afternoon and tomorrow the books we have in our offices in Washington and to bring them tomorrow afternoon so that we can make our contribution in Statuary Hall. To me this is very important because of the psychological effect throughout the country. I hope all Members will make it their personal and special business between now and tomorrow at noon to get as many books as they can to make this contribution.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include three brief editorials.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. GEARHART]?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 54 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, January 12, 1943, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

41. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting the Annual Report of the Secretary of the Treasury on the state of the finances for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1942 (H. Doc. No. 5); to the Committee on Ways and Means and ordered to be printed, with illustrations.

42. A letter from the President of the Gorgas Memorial Institute of Tropical and Preventive Medicine, Inc., transmitting the Fifteenth Annual Report of the Gorgas Memorial Laboratory, covering the fiscal year 1942 (H. Doc. No. 31); to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered to be printed.

43. A letter from the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, transmitting the annual report of the activities of the Veterans' Administration as of June 30, 1942 (H. Doc. No. 11); to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation and ordered to be printed.

44. A letter from the Archivist of the United States, transmitting a report of the Archivist of the United States on a list of papers recommended to him for disposal by the Department of the Navy; to the Committee on the Disposition of Executive Papers.

45. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an itemized report of transactions for account of the Pershing Hall Memorial Fund; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

46. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office dated January 5 transmitting the report of the withdrawals and restoration contemplated by the statute; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

47. A letter from the Chairman of the Federal Power Commission, transmitting a classified report showing the permits and licenses issued by the Commission during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1942; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

48. A letter from the Attorney General of the United States, transmitting a report showing the special assistants employed during the period from July 1, 1942, to January 1, 1943; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

49. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a statement of the fiscal affairs of all Indian tribes for whose benefit expenditures from public or tribal funds were made during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1942; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana:

H. R. 978. A bill to repeal the income limitation as to payment of death compensation to dependents of deceased service-connected disabled World War veterans; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

H. R. 979. A bill to provide that while hospitalized for service-connected disabilities war veterans shall be rated as totally disabled; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

By Mr. BATES of Kentucky:

H. R. 980. A bill to provide that the Veterans' Administration shall not, in the absence of fraud or clear and unmistakable error, reduce any permanent-disability rating; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

H. R. 981. A bill to provide for the construction of Veterans' Administration facilities in accordance with veteran population needs; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

H. R. 982. A bill to amend title III of the World War Veterans' Act, 1924, as amended, so as to reduce the number of reexaminations of persons receiving insurance benefits on account of permanent and total disability, and for other purposes; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

H. R. 983. A bill to amend the World War Veterans' Act, as amended; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

H. R. 984. A bill to amend the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1934, as amended, with respect to the authority of the Attorney General to compromise suits on certain contracts of insurance; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

H. R. 985. A bill to restore World War service connection granted by special review boards under Public Law No. 78, Seventy-third Congress, June 16, 1933; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

H. R. 986. A bill to define misconduct, for compensation and pension purposes, as limited to felonious misconduct; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

By Mr. BALDWIN of New York:

H. R. 987. A bill to amend an act to prevent pernicious political activities; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BARRY:

H. R. 988. A bill to amend further the Civil Service Retirement Act, approved May 29, 1930, as amended; to the Committee on the Civil Service.

By Mr. COLMER:

H. R. 989. A bill to revise the method of determining the payments to be made by the United States to the several States with respect to conservation lands subject to the jurisdiction of the Department of Agriculture; to the Committee on Agriculture.

H. R. 990. A bill relating to the disposition of mineral rights to any land acquired by any Federal land bank or by the Land Bank Commissioner through the foreclosure of any mortgage; to the Committee on Agriculture.

H. R. 991. A bill to amend the Social Security Act, as amended, with respect to grants to States for old-age assistance; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

H. R. 992. A bill to provide for the reclassification under the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940 of employees engaged in war production participating in strikes; to make it unlawful for persons to conspire to stop or slow down production in war contracts; to suspend the 40-hour week and provisions for overtime compensation; to limit the profits on war contracts, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CRAWFORD:

H. R. 993. A bill to aid in preventing inflation, to stabilize the rents of real property, to treat equitably several million families who are wholly or partly dependent upon the income from homes or other small residential property, to freeze rents at the same level at which wages and farm prices are stabilized and not at earlier date with no practical means of adjustment, to prohibit general questionnaires, forms, and statements designed to stir up litigation, disputes, and to harass the property owner, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. CUNNINGHAM:

H. R. 994. A bill to amend title III, World War Veterans' Act, 1924, as amended; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

By Mr. DIRKSEN:

H. R. 995. A bill to amend the Banking Act of 1876, as amended; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. D'ALESANDRO:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, JANUARY 12, 1943

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Unto Thee our Father in heaven, we would offer our tributes of praise and thanksgiving and pray Thee to cause us to use our talents in promoting peace and good will. Let us see these like a mantle spread over our country, the lowly cottage and the spacious home, Thy blessing falling in truth and patience. May we greet this day with newness of joy in Thy Fatherhood and with ascending ideals of service that shall light the candle of a larger hope and deeper sympathy.

Dear Lord, if adversity lends gloom to some room of memory, we pray that hope may enter to lighten the shadow and reveal the angel spirit with songs in the air and stars in the sky. Grant us the spirit to minister with the saving influence of counsel and friendship, to grow in grace and in favor with God and man. Give us thoughts so beautiful and aspirations so divine that in the arching blue above we shall realize something of the heights and depths of love which shines above the horizon of every life. Almighty God, help us to keep inviolate the vows which we have taken and endow us with noble powers of choosing that which is good and wise, and spurning that which is weak and small. Oh, consider and hear our humble prayer as we beseech Thee to keep the heart of our country sound, her power compelling, and her spirit eternal. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

THE ASSESSED VALUATION OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, after listening to the reading of the President's Budget message yesterday, the largest Budget ever presented to a legislative body in the history of the world, my interest was aroused as to how much the assessed valuation of the United States might be and whether or not the Nation is soundly solvent. I referred the matter to the legislative reference service of the Congressional Library and received from the Library this morning the following figures which were taken from the Census Bureau report as to the assessed valuation of this country for 1940. These are the latest figures available. The assessed valuation is given as $144,636,000,000.

Some States assess on a basis of 40 percent, some of 60 percent, and others of 70 percent. The average of all is about 56 percent. Therefore, using the figures just given as to the assessed valuation of this country, the true valuation is approximately $208,000,000,000.

Some States tax personal property, while others do not. The National Industrial Conference Board, a research organization, compiled figures on the national wealth for 1938, the latest available on national wealth, showing a total of $309,430,000,000. A break-down of that figure reveals the following:

| Land | $166,027,000,000 |

America is at total war. America will not stop, regardless of the cost, when our very existence is threatened. With what we have authorized and appropriated for war purposes, together with the requirements of the President's Budget message of yesterday, totals $320,000,000,000. I give these figures for the benefit of the House so we may know the colossal expenditures for war exceed the assessed valuation of the country, as well as the national wealth.

When we compare the colossal expenditures for war with our national wealth, we lapse into sobering thought, for it is the deep concern of all of us.

ANDREW JACKSON HIGGINS

Mr. O'BRIEN of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'BRIEN of New York. Mr. Speaker, it was not surprising to me to see in Monday's paper, to be exact, the Washington Times-Herald, that big Irish Andrew Jackson Higgins has been given a contract to build ships for the Brazilian Government, and at the present time negotiations are under way between that Government and Higgins to start construction in the very near future.

Andrew J. Higgins is considered not only a great boatbuilder in this country, but his ability is recognized throughout the world. He is a man not of just local reputation, nor is he one of common national importance, but my personal and intimate friend, Andrew Jackson Higgins, is a man of international repute.

His contribution to the war effort can never be based on a cold, hard proposition of dollars and cents, but we do know that when things are necessary to be done in a hurry, those needing the boats never fail to call on the one, the only, the original, the inimitable, boat builder of New Orleans, Andrew J. Higgins.

You all remember the cancelation of the Higgins contract in July of 1942. Since then he has been awarded a contract and the yard opened to build 1,200 cargo planes. He will build these planes with the same speed as he builds boats. The press stated that he could build boats faster than greased lightning. Of course, that is some speed; but, in my estimation, he can build boats faster than our beloved SAM RAYBURN can comb his hair, and, ladies and gentlemen, that is speed.

The Brazilian Government is to be congratulated in securing Mr. Higgins' services, as I am positive that he will build boats exactly and precisely as needed in the Amazon traffic and in the coastal waters to convey goods up and down that huge country.

Andrew J. Higgins, I congratulate you, and I am positive that you have the best wishes of all those who know you and also the best wishes and prayers of the people of the country at this time. Your patriotism and your ability to produce is thoroughly appreciated by everyone, young and old, rich and poor. Your contribution, similar to the contributions of many others, will rapidly bring this war to a successful termination and lasting peace.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of all other business and special orders I be permitted to address the House today for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

GASOLINE FOR RURAL SCHOOL TEACHERS

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks and include a petition from school teachers in my district.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, much of the Second Congressional District of Michigan has been designated as a national defense area. Here are located the mammoth Ford Willow Run bomber plant and many other national defense industries.

It naturally follows that as a result of this unprecedented, and almost unbelievable, industrial expansion there is an acute shortage of housing, of labor, skilled and unskilled, and of farm help, skilled and unskilled. In fact, there is a crying demand for labor and help in almost every line of work. The undreamed-of wages being paid in defense industries are taking the farm help, the clerk from the store, the stenographer from the typewriter, the accountant from the desk, the maid from the household, and, last but not least, the teacher from the schoolroom.

Possibly the farm and the schoolroom are the hardest hit by this new change in the local economy. It is difficult, if not impossible, for the country school to compete with defense industries in the matter of wages. This condition has resulted in a dangerous scarcity of country school teachers. Most of these teachers are women. Some of them are married and managing their own households. They are willing, however, to do their part in the war effort and are answering the demand for teachers, but are so circumstanced in many cases that it is impossible for them to abandon their homes and their families and take up their abode in the vicinity of the country schoolhouse. In short, they are willing to assume the teaching responsibility, provided they are able to arrange transportation in some form from their homes to their schools.

Mr. Speaker, under present gasoline rationing regulations it is impossible for many of these teachers to continue with their work. Some way must be worked out to give them more gasoline. It is to this problem that I address these few remarks.

I am in receipt of a petition presented to me by Mrs. E. T. Armstrong, County Commissioner of Schools, Lenawee County, Michigan, which petition is also signed by other village and rural school teachers in the county, urging that the Washington regulations be changed so that the local rationing boards will have authority to meet the necessary transportation requirements of this group. The petition states the case clearly and is as follows:

We, the undersigned, in behalf of the teachers, do earnestly petition you and others in authority to make adjustment whereby teachers may be granted a C gasoline ration book when needed to cover the mileage required to transport them to and from their schools. It is necessary for many teachers to drive a distance requiring such a book if schools are to continue operating. Many of these teachers are married women who have taken the teaching position to relieve the teacher shortage and are maintaining a home. Others have an established home and for various reasons cannot stay in the community where they are teaching. There is neither bus nor train service. Cars are being shared wherever possible, and unnecessary driving is entirely eliminated.

It is not always possible to transport four or more riders since schools in rural communities and villages are more widely separated.

We are defense workers since we have organized and conducted paper, scrap iron, and rubber collections. We have issued rationing books and thousands of dollars worth of Defense stamps have been and are being sold through the schools. Also, we are doing Junior Red Cross work. Teachers must have the required gasoline to carry on this work.

We are contributing to the war effort and to the public welfare. Many Government officials have repeatedly stated that "education will shorten the distance to victory," that "education is the backbone of our military effort," and that "it would be criminal to make it impossible for our school teachers to carry on."

Mr. Speaker, I have taken this matter up with the Office of Price Administration and I am told that under existing regulations in order to receive additional gasoline these teachers must procure preferred-mileage cards, and these cards are only obtainable in their case:

(c) By a person for regularly transporting four or more pupils, students, teachers, or school employees to or from regular places of study, provided that alternative means of transportation are not adequate.

Now, this regulation is all right if it can be complied with on the part of the teacher. On the other hand, it is practically impossible so far as application in many cases is concerned. Ofttimes the country teacher, to whom I have referred, resides in a city or village and is obliged to drive 10 or 20 miles into the country to the schoolhouse where she teaches. Obviously pupils are not going from the home of the teacher in the city to the country school where she is employed, where she is the sole teacher and, in many cases, the sole employee in carrying on the work of the school. It is not possible for the teacher, with her small car, to go about the community in the capacity of a school bus and gather up her students. It is just not practical and, unless this regulation can be changed to permit necessary gasoline for essential transportation of these teachers, then it is difficult to see how the schools are to continue to operate.

Mr. Speaker, I have asked the Office of Price Administration to comply with the petition of these school teachers and I am expressing the hope that, with former Senator Prentiss M. Brown at the head of the Office of Price Administration, these problems will be handled in a commonsense, practical way. Less red tape and more ordinary everyday horse sense in administration of rationing gasoline and other commodities will get results and do much to advance the war effort.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by printing an address delivered by Mr. Roberts, a member of the Industrial Commission of Ohio.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE FUEL SHORTAGE

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, we have all heard a great deal about the shortage of fuel. For 14 days the newspapers have been telling us about the 24,000 miners in the hard-coal mines in Pennsylvania, who are on strike, and the mines which are shut down. That strike was brought about because the union slipped over another 50 cents a month dues on the miners. These men are striking against the imposition of additional dues. The result is we are not getting coal, and the people need the fuel. I ask the gentlemen on the majority side who are proposing to settle the problems of the world, what they are going to do about getting our people in America a little coal. I might say that they can do something about it if the administration will quit backing the union racketeers and politicians who bring about these strikes in return for their political support. What, may I ask the majority, are you going to do about it? When the House meets day after tomorrow I will drop in a bill which I think will do something about it.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and insert certain excerpts.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SHORTAGE OF FARM LABOR

Mr. LARCADE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and extend my remarks, and also to include a letter addressed to me.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LARCADE. Mr. Speaker, the induction of essential farm workers into the military service is causing a shortage of farm labor in my district which threatens to affect seriously the production of food in our State. It seems to me that it should be possible to provide sufficient men for the armed forces without stripping the farms of workers who are just as essential to the war effort as those engaged in war plants. If present policies are continued we will soon be unable to supply either the armed forces or our allies with sufficient food products.

If the farmer is to increase food production in 1943, as the President has asked, we must do everything possible to aid and encourage him. Agriculture is the mainstay of this great Nation and I intend to devote my best efforts to promote the interests of the farmer.

I have received a communication from a farmer in my district who has tried unsuccessfully to have two of his farm workers deferred from the draft. I submit it to the Congress because I believe the problem is one affecting all farmers everywhere, and that Congress may want to concern itself with a solution.

Louisiana's 28,000,000 acres of land consist of nearly every type of soil in the Western Hemisphere. Our State produces 95 percent of the sugarcane grown in the United States, and imports for refining many millions of tons of raw sugar. It leads the Nation in the production of rice. Our strawberries, oranges, and vegetables are nationally distributed and demanded and are valued at millions of dollars annually.

Louisiana is the fifth ranking State in the production of oil, having the largest oil refinery in the world. It ranks twenty-fifth in the production of cattle, and is one of the most important agricultural States in the Union, producing soybeans, oats, hay and the finest quality long staple cotton.

Louisiana is the sweetpotato capital of the United States.

This State possesses an inexhaustible supply of salt that is mined 99-percent pure. Its pine and cypress forests are the Nation's largest, giving her the rank of the second largest lumber-producing State.

From these figures it can be seen how important it is to retain on the farm sufficient persons to maintain food production. I hope that the letter I have received from Mr. M. J. Goudeau, Sr., of Melville, La., which I am going to quote in full, may receive the attention of the Agriculture Department, the Selective Service System, and the War Manpower Commission.

Mr. Goudeau writes as follows:

MELVILLE, LA., January 8, 1943.

Re Draft classification; essential farm labor.
Hon. Congressman HENRY D. LARCADE,

DEAR HONORABLE CONGRESSMAN: I am enclosing action taken by our appeal boards on essential farm labor needed on my plantation. Please permit me to give you the status of the individuals on whose classification I filed an appeal giving them, the appeal board, all necessary information which they needed:

Anthony Ropplo is the son of one of my largest cane tenants. He is the only son that his father has who is physically able to help his father cultivate 24 acres of cane, 9 acres of cotton, and 24 acres of corn. This unit of land which is dependent solely upon this young man and his father takes care of this boy, his father, mother, a crippled brother who is paralyzed in one arm and leg, a grandmother of the boy who is in her eighties and 6 other sisters and brothers. He is the only one of the brothers who is physically able to aid his father in harvesting and cultivation of the above crops. I don't blame the predicament of the farms insofar as labor is concerned on the draft boards or appeal boards, but I do insist that something should be done immediately if the President's wishes pertaining to an increase in food production for the year 1943 are going to be reached.

Clinton Boyd works for me the following acreage of crops: 7 acres of cane, 7 acres of cotton and 7 acres of corn. He lives with his widowed mother and two little sisters and two little brothers, all of which are too young to aid him in the cultivation and harvesting of these crops and acreages. In addition, he works for me by the day working corn. He is the type of farm labor that is used the year around. He is what is known as an essential farm hand.

I would appreciate your taking up this type of problem with the Secretary of Agriculture. If something isn't done, the calling of our farm labor is going to hinder the agriculture and farming setup to the point where it will be impossible to produce what we produced in 1942, much less increase our production. To give you an example what may farm produced in 1942: I raised over 5,000 tons of cane, which converted into sugar is 800,000 pounds, and 400 bales of cotton, which converted into its by-products, cottonseed, means 400,000 pounds of cottonseed from which cooking oils, dairy feeds, and so forth are made. With the drafting of our farm labor I can assure you that the above yields will be less by at least 20 to 25 percent for the year 1943.

Thanking you in advance for your efforts which have always been an interest in your country's welfare and future, I beg to remain,

Yours very truly,

M. J. GOUDEAU, Sr.
(Farmer of 1,500 acres of land).

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Thursday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include a radio address delivered by me last Sunday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE LATE WILLIAM R. EATON

Mr. CHENOWETH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHENOWETH. Mr. Speaker, it is with deep regret and great sorrow that I announce to the House the death of William R. Eaton of Denver, Colo., who departed this life in Denver on December 16, 1942. Mr. Eaton served two terms in this House, representing the First Congressional District of Colorado, having been elected to the Seventy-first Congress in 1928, and reelected to the Seventy-second Congress in 1930. He passed away on his sixty-fifth birthday.

Mr. Eaton was the nephew of our beloved and distinguished colleague from New Jersey, CHARLES A. EATON. He was born in Canada on December 17, 1877. He had lived in Colorado 61 years, having been educated in the public schools of Denver and graduated from Denver University in 1909 with a law degree. In his early youth he was employed in a Denver bank and also in the mercantile business.

He had a long and brilliant record in public life. In 1909 he was named deputy district attorney for the city and county of Denver. He served two terms in the Colorado State Senate from 1915 to 1926. In 1915 he was one of the sponsors of the Colorado State Workmen's Compensation law which is still in effect.

As a Member of this House, Mr. Eaton was a tireless and energetic worker. He served on the Public Lands Committee and was always interested in problems of the West. He advocated the enlargement of Fitzsimons General Hospital in Denver and was largely responsible for its establishment as a permanent military institution. He advocated an increased coinage of silver and the substitution of silver dollars for $1 currency. He was opposed to the repeal of prohibition, which was largely responsible for his defeat as a candidate for reelection in 1932.

On his retirement to private life, Mr. Eaton resumed the practice of law in Denver, but continued his interest in local, State, and National politics. He was a member of the American, Denver, and Colorado Bar Associations, the International Law Association, the National Association for Constitutional Government, the Colorado State Historical Society, and the Sons and Daughters of the Pilgrims. He was a thirty-second degree Mason. He served in the Spanish-American War and was a first lieutenant in the First Cavalry Squadron of the Colorado National Guard.

Mr. Eaton lead an active and useful life. The esteem in which he was held in Denver is best attested by the representative group attending his funeral. The Rose Croix service was held in the Colorado Consistory Cathedral, and the leading business and professional men of Denver, as well as the Governor of Colorado and other State and city officials, were present to pay their last tribute to our former colleague.

Mr. Speaker, on the passing of Mr. Eaton Colorado has lost one of her most illustrious citizens and I have lost a true friend.

Mr. EATON. Mr. Speaker, it is a sad duty for me to appear before you for the purpose of paying tribute to a very near and dear relative of mine who was a Member of this House for two sessions, our distinguished friend and colleague, William Robb Eaton, of Denver. He spent 61 of the 65 years of his life in Denver. He grew up with the city. He had a natural gift for business, was associated in an important industry with his father, and in a bank when he was a lad, and when the Eaton industry was disposed of he went into business for himself.

When I was living in Cleveland he came to visit me. I had not seen him from the time he was born, and I was so impressed with his ability, with his knowledge, and with his grasp of the conditions of American life that I urged him to give up the business he was founding, go into the University of Denver and study law. He took my advice. Later on he took my advice again and went into politics. He was a prodigious worker, a great master of detail, an honorable, high-class, Christian gentleman with whom it is a privilege to claim relationship, and I want to express on behalf of myself and my family, which is pretty large and widely scattered, our deep sense of loss in his going.

I happen to be the youngest of 11 children. I had three nephews all near my own age. One of them is a brilliant lawyer in Boston, another is a distinguished financier—the only one in the family—in Cleveland; Billy was our lawyer representative in the West. It was my humble function to complete the quartet.

William Robb Eaton served nobly in this body as he did in every undertaking with which he was associated. Now that he has gone to his eternal reward he has joined that beloved company of my family who are nearly all over there. I hope that I may live during the rest of my days as worthily as he did. To his devoted and accomplished wife I join my colleagues in extending our heartfelt sympathy in her irreparable loss.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EATON. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. We Members on the Democratic side who served with Mr. Eaton certainly wish to join in expressing our profound sorrow at his untimely passing away. He was a Christian gentleman, a patriotic American, and a most worthy man.

Every Member on this side of the House who knew him as your humble servant knew him, feel his death as a personal loss.

Mr. EATON. I appreciate that coming from my distinguished friend and thank him on behalf of the family.

Mr. CHENOWETH. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. HILL].

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, it is with a heavy heart that I learn of the death of William R. Eaton, of Denver. I shall never forget the assistance and help he gave to me as a new member in the Colorado Legislature in 1925, my first term. He was willing to help young men, always willing to do his best to help on any problem that faced the legislature. Later, when I needed more information, no friend of mine, political or otherwise, gave me better advice than William R. Eaton. Certainly, Colorado has lost one of its finest citizens, and this Nation of ours has suffered a real loss in the death of our beloved friend, William R. Eaton.

To his wife and friends in Denver, I extend my deepest sympathy.

Mr. CHENOWETH. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. ROCKWELL].

Mr. ROCKWELL. Mr. Speaker, I wish to pay my humble respects to the memory of my late friend the former Congressman William Robb Eaton. Our friendship began 25 years ago, when Billy Eaton was serving in the Colorado Senate, and I was first elected to the Colorado House of Representatives. Following this, we served two terms together in the senate, and a few years later, in 1929, he came to the National House of Representatives and served two terms in this body.

No one could serve with Billy Eaton without becoming imbued with his breezy, energetic, and friendly personality. He had many of the qualities that have made his uncle, Dr. CHARLES A. EATON, of New Jersey, so greatly beloved by his colleagues in and out of Congress. Billy began his career as a banker, then spent 10 years as a merchant, in addition to serving in the Spanish-American War, before taking up the study and practice of law. This gave him a background that assured a successful career as a practicing attorney in the city of Denver, Colo.

His untimely death at the age of 65 was a great shock to his friends as well as his family. Only last summer he was in Washington on business and called upon many of his friends in and out of Congress. We spent several hours reminiscing over the quarter century that had passed since we first met and the many changes that had occurred both in the world and in our own ideas during that period. We need men like Billy Eaton these days, and we who knew him best will miss him most.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday next the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] may address the House for 10 minutes, and that I too may address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I had a special order for tomorrow. In view of the fact the House will not be in session tomorrow, I ask unanimous consent that I may address the House for 20 minutes on Thursday.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURDICK] is recognized for 15 minutes.

WE CAN HAVE ALL THE GASOLINE AND RUBBER WE WANT TO EQUIP OUR FIGHTING FORCES NO MATTER WHAT THE SIZE OF THE ARMY AND NAVY AND AIR FORCE—WE CAN HAVE ALL THE GASOLINE AND RUBBER WE WANT TO KEEP UP PRODUCTION, IF THIS GOVERNMENT WILL WAKE UP AND USE THE LIGNITE DEPOSITS OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, there is some compelling reason why I asked for 15 minutes of the time of this House on this occasion. This session is just starting, and the Seventy-eighth Congress finds the situation about as follows:

First. We are engaged in a world conflict not of our own choosing.

Second. We are drafting and equipping seven and one-half million men to fight on the front lines, and it takes 40,000,000 to service these seven and one-half million. The last-named seven and one-half million will be engaged in nothing but actual fighting, while the 40,000,000 will be engaged in nothing but making the machines of destruction, transporting and servicing them. We cannot change our figures if we are to equip a fighting force of this size.

Third. These forty-seven and one-half million people cannot take part in the production of the most important item in sustaining a fighting force—namely, production of food. Fifty million people should be engaged in that enterprise if we are to supply this huge fighting force with food, and if we are to supply, as well, those who are producing the food and transporting it, those who are making the machines and transporting them. The Selective Service Act has exacted such a heavy toll from the food-producing areas that in 1943 we will not have labor enough for necessary food production.

Fourth. No fighting force of seven and one-half or 10,000,000 men can be sustained in machines and food unless we are able to produce at home. Too much attention has been paid to the mere numbers drafted instead of a fully balanced program of gearing our production to our war and civilian needs. It is idle to say that we cannot build a fighting force of seven and one-half million men. We can double that if we have to; but in order to do that—or maintain what we have now started out to do—we must recognize, first of all, that all these forces—fighting, building, and food production—must be kept coordinated. Neither of these three elements can be built up at the expense of the other two.

Going into the situation more in detail, we are advised that we are running into a shortage of oil. We had supposed that gasoline was being rationed because it would save rubber, but now the facts are coming to light. The gentleman from Oklahoma, Congressman DISNEY, who was raised in the oil fields and is the best authority in the House on oil, makes these statements in a speech before the Congress on December 16. He said:

> Now that we have completed the first year of our participation in the war, we can measure the extent of our further participation. Mr. Speaker, from the facts I have been able to ascertain, unless the present trend is reversed, we will within a year face a serious and certain shortage of petroleum supply to meet the necessary demands upon us to maintain the war for a long period of time. The statistics prove this statement.
> What figures I furnish you will be the most conservative estimates I have been able to get. Many opinions are expressed that the estimates I am giving are too liberal. It is estimated that our present demand for crude petroleum is 4,218,000 barrels per day and that our present production of oil is 3,824,000 barrels, according to the American Petroleum Institute report of December 9, 1942.
>
> It is conservatively estimated that our demands will be increasing during the coming year to 4,670,000 barrels per day. It is hoped that the supply from all sources can be increased to 4,452,000 barrels per day. This optimistic statement is taken from a report to the Petroleum Industry War Council. I have found no one who will seriously even contend that we can reach and maintain that rate of production of oil produced and delivered. Even if it were reached and maintained, we would still be drawing on our above-ground stocks at the rate of 213,000 barrels per day.
>
> The Congress must not follow the disastrous error in the war program that has already appeared with relation to other essential materials. The story of rubber is not the only one that marks bureaucratic bungling in its worst aspects. The executive department has been given complete authority to carry on this war by the Congress. Personally, I do not intend, as a Member of this House, to take the responsibility, nor do I want to have any colleague share it, for the petroleum situation to be a byword and a hissing as the rubber situation now is in America.

* * * * *

Our production program for building a great army, for expanding our Navy, for insuring supremacy in the air, has reached stupendous proportions. It continues to grow. As time progresses we are becoming more proficent in the production of every element necessary to our war effort. Every element save one—nothing has been done by our Government to encourage the increasing of our petroleum production and delivery.

* * * * *

Estimates from reliable sources—Congressman COLE'S report to the President—indicate that before this year is over we will have a demand for 5,000,000 barrels of petroleum per day. This is beyond any possible estimate of production from our present ability to produce and deliver petroleum.

Mr. Speaker, this is the situation now at a time when we have nowhere neared our goal in air or land power. The machines necessary to achieve this goal have to have oil to operate in actual war, and about four times that amount in training the men to operate them. No man can step into a bomber and effectively operate it unless he is trained to do so. This takes oil. Instead of looking forward to using less oil we must face the fact that we need 40 to 50 percent more oil per month than we have ever used before. This statement cannot be refuted.

The question then arises, Where are we going to get this oil increase? There are only three places where the oil can be forthcoming. First, we can drive the Japs out of the East Indies, but it will take some time to do it. Second, we can subsidize wildcat oil wells and make new discoveries; this will take time. Third, we can take no chances at all and get all the oil we want if we will develop the lignite coal fields of North Dakota, Wyoming, and Texas.

In North Dakota alone there are surveyed deposits of lignite coal amounting to the stupendous figures of 600,000,000,000 tons, which far exceeds the brown coal deposits of Europe and Asia combined.

What can be made from this great reservoir of the sun?

Electricity, coal, coal tar derivatives for conversion into synthetic oil, rubber, and high explosives—everything known to service a war machine.

How much oil can be manufactured from a ton of lignite?

The United States Bureau of Mines' chemists, in 1941 took around 30 samples of coal from the Beulah and Velva mines in North Dakota and found that lignite as mined—undried—would produce from 35 to 40 tons of oil from 100 tons of coal; and from 100 tons of moisture-free coal would produce 55 to 60 tons of oil.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Because of the interest in the subject and the gentleman having referred to a document of the United States Bureau of Mines, I should like to add at this point that a subcommittee of the Committee on Mines and Mining held hearings at which officials not only of the United States Bureau of Mines but noted scientists and others appeared in support of the contention the gentleman is making. Those hearings have been printed, and I would advise those individuals of Congress who are especially interested to read that document also.

Mr. BURDICK. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

As mined, therefore, North Dakota has a potential oil capacity of 2,250,000,000 tons of oil. In each ton of oil there are approximately 7 barrels. It is estimated by the best authorities that our present needs require 4,218,000 barrels per day. Suppose that we have to increase this need to 5,905,000 barrels per day—which would be a 40-percent increase to keep more tanks and more bombers going. We would have oil enough in North Dakota to serve the war machine geared to full capacity as well as the civilian population, including every line of business operating at full capacity, for a period of over 76 years. And remember that North Dakota is not the only State with lignite deposits. We should finish the war by that time with no oil shortage.

How fast can we produce this oil?

For the past 3 years the coal production in North Dakota has been about 3,000,000 tons annually. Of North Dakota's 100 mines only 52 are mass-production mines—that is they are mined by the use of power shovels and excavator draglines. In other words, strip mining. At present only daily shifts have been used, and by increasing working hours to take care of 3 shifts, production could easily be raised to 10,000,000 tons. This estimate is based on what can be done in the mines of North Dakota without any additional machinery. In other words, North Dakota is ready to produce at once—right now—28,000,000 barrels of oil annually. We can do that without any help from the Government outside of processing plants. When we add to that mass production from Government-operated plants more strippers, more men, more process plants, a blind man can see that we have the answer to the oil question.

How cheaply can this coal be produced?

Under our small system now in use in North Dakota, the strip mines sell coal at the mine for $1.35 per ton. Mass production on a large scale would greatly reduce even this price.

Under our present system in North Dakota, the average output per man is 33 tons per day. With increased and improved machinery, this too could be increased.

There is not any guesswork about these estimates. For example, the Truax-Traer Coal Co., Minot, N. Dak., operating 3 open strip mines with 200 men and a dozen shovels at 1 shift per day, produced in 1940, 757,250 tons of coal, with an average output per man of 33 tons.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. I have visited some of the North Dakota coal mines, and as I recall they have veins of coal 18 feet thick. The ash content of that coal is very low. It burns up about as clean as oak wood.

Mr. BURDICK. The gentleman is correct. Instead of digging in the earth as they do in Wales for this coal, they strip off the earth and expose the coal.

This was 10 times the production speed of Pennsylvania anthracite and 15 times the production speed of the deep mines of Wales. Comparing this production speed to that of France, which was 2 tons per day per man, we can very clearly see what France was up against in facing Germany. Just visualize what could be done by this 1 company for the defense of the United States if it were to employ 3,000 men in 3 daily shifts with shovels enough to keep them busy.

Another element of speed in turning these great mines into actual defense weapons is that four great railroad lines already run into and through this huge deposit of coal. They are the Great Northern, the Northern Pacific, the Soo Line, and the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Cos., with all their branches. They are all set waiting the command to go ahead.

If 10 percent of the men now employed in the alphabetical bureaus in the United States and in the rationing program were released, we could not only man these mines but have a big quota for enlistment purposes. With the development of this potential source of oil the need for rationing would soon disappear. If 10 percent of our huge taxes—and they will be much higher—was shifted to mining the necessities of war, where there is absolutely no gamble, we would not be worried about keeping our armies equipped.

It is estimated that we are using about 100,000 persons at an expense of $200,000,000 annually to carry out our rationing program. Suppose we did not have to ration gasoline, engine oil, fuel oil, and explosive ingredients. You can see what a horde of workers could be turned loose to mine in abundance the very things we now must ration.

Hitler is no superman, but there must be some secret to the power he demonstrates. When an army can invade a thousand miles of Russian territory in a few weeks there is more than a Hitler to the story. The story is told in coal. The brown coal of Europe is very similar to our own lignite, though inferior in quality and in quantity. In 1922 Germany was producing 100,000,000 tons of brown coal and processing it into oil, rubber, and explosives. In 1933, when Hitler came to power, this production was increased to 180,000,000 tons. By 1937 even this production was doubled, and while there are now no definite figures on present production, we do know that Germany grabbed 5,000,000 tons of annual output from Austria, 18,000,000 tons from Czechoslovakia, 30,000,000 tons from Poland, 35,000,000 tons from Holland, 40,000,000 tons from Belgium and France, 50,000,000 tons from Yugoslavia, Rumania, and Bulgaria. Besides this, Hitler has control of most of the coal of the Ukraine, and has converted two-thirds of the grand total of the coal of Europe to his war machine.

Germany is operating these mines by the gas-shovel process and has gone into mass production, and is able to produce 20 tons per man per day, while France was producing only 2 tons per man per day. These great European coal deposits furnish coal, oil, rubber, and explosives that have given the German war machine its tremendous power. Germany has been unconcerned about gasoline and rubber because she produces all her needs from the rich coal beds of Europe, which, taken altogether, does not equal 10 percent of the coal deposits in North Dakota alone. And remember that South Dakota, Montana, Wyoming, Colorado, and Texas also have vast fields of lignite. If the Allies generate power enough to drive Hitler out of his conquered territory, the war is as good as won. Germany, by herself, does not have enough coal to feed Hitler's war machine.

Let us see where Japan gets her power to operate her war machine. It is the common impression that after having overrun the East Indies, Japan came into great oil power. There is no question but what she did, but outside of that Japan has planned to supply herself in fuel, oil, rubber, and explosives. If the people of the United States were familiar with the monthly bulletins of the Bureau of Mines for the years 1935 to 1940, inclusive, we would have known what Japan was doing and was intending to do. For 7 successive years, as shown by these scientific bulletins, Japan has been installing, first small-scale laboratory plants, and then larger ones; then industrial plants for the conversion of the lignite reserves of Japan, Manchuria—Manchukuo—and Korea. German scientific processes were installed and the result was that oil, rubber, and explosives were produced in abundance. Japan would have had no dream of mastering the Pacific had it not been for this discovery of unlimited coal resources that would feed a war machine.

President Wilson saw the possibility of the value of our coal deposits from our experience in the last war. The United States Geological Survey and the Bureau of Mines went to work to determine definitely the extent of our coal and peat deposits, and then analyzed them. We have that information before us and yet, thus far, we have shut our eyes to the situation.

There is no other way in which I can bring this matter to the attention of the Government and the people than to explain it fully here on the floor of the Congress. While I have very little to do about the administration's war policy, or any other policy, yet I do represent a great State—in part—loyal to the core, ready and willing to do its part under any plan. It seems to the citizens of my State, however, a most strange thing that those in authority do not immediately see the great stores of vital materials resting almost undisturbed in North Dakota's soil. The people of North Dakota do not understand a forced scarcity, when they know there is plenty. It took time—about 500,000,000 years—to produce this lignite, but we hope its strategic value will be recognized in a lesser period of time. Dire necessity, bringing suffering, losses in property and lives, will eventually drive us to the use of this powerful weapon, but why wait until this condition arises? There is some excuse for a blind man who says he cannot see, but there is no excuse for those who are blessed with the sense of sight and will not see. Right here—right now—we are in possession of the greatest fighting power on the face of the earth. Shall we pass it by? If we do, the people of this country will want to know why. Do we want to continue this war short-handed and be responsible for the killing of millions of young men, when we can, by the use of supreme power, end the war quickly? Seven and one-half million men under arms sounds big, but it means nothing unless they are equipped with the best fighting material on earth—material that will match their patriotism and sacrifice.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, I have under unanimous-consent request permission to speak tomorrow. Due to the fact that the House is to recess over tomorrow, I ask unanimous consent that I may have 20 minutes to address the House at the conclusion of other special orders on the calendar for today.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HARRIS of Arkansas). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN]?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CARLSON] is recognized for 20 minutes.

PAY-AS-YOU-GO INCOME-TAX PLAN

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate very much the kindness of the House in granting me this time to discuss what I believe to be a very urgent tax problem. No one can study our tax structure without reaching the conclusion that the personal income-tax debt of our citizens has become a danger. Our income-tax law is the basis of a sound and stable government. It is based on the sound philosophy of "ability to pay." That is, it was based on that sound philosophy in 1913 when it was first approved by our Nation. Theoretically that principle holds true today, but from a practical standpoint I am not so certain that it will stand analysis.

In 1913 when the Federal income-tax law was approved by this Nation it had one defect which seemed of no practical consequence, but since that time has become of great importance. This defect was that a citizen was required to pay in the year 1914 a tax on his 1913 income. In this way we got started on a vicious practice of paying out of 1 year's income a tax on the income of a year that had already gone. It is true that for many years this made very little difference. In 1913 the rates began at 1 percent and the top rate, including the normal and surtax, was 7 percent. Exemption for a single person was $3,000. A study of the Revenue Act of 1942 reveals the startling growth of the income-tax rates and great reduction in exemptions.

Under the present law a single person is entitled to an exemption of $500 with rates beginning at 19 percent and from that point moving up sharply to 88 percent. In addition to this the 1942 Revenue Act carries a victory tax of 5 percent with an exemption of $624. I believe everyone agrees that this rapid increase in the personal income-tax burden is a national problem. This problem was recognized by the Treasury in the last session of Congress. They submitted various relief proposals to the House Ways and Means Committee and the Senate Finance Committee during consideration of the 1942 Revenue Act.

Many economists and tax authorities have offered various proposals to get our taxes on a current basis. One of the original sponsors of a pay-as-you-go tax plan and an outstanding tax authority in the United States, Mr. Beardsley Ruml, of New York City, has proposed a plan that has received Nation-wide attention. It is commonly referred to as the Ruml plan. His proposal was used as a basis for the legislation I have introduced in this session of Congress as House Joint Resolution 17.

During the past few weeks I have spent considerable time studying a number of pay-as-you-go tax proposals. I can definitely state that in my opinion just criticism can be leveled at any or all of them. It was after this study and research that I have reached the conclusion that the Ruml plan offers the best solution to our current tax problem. It was with this thought in mind that I introduced House Joint Resolution 17. It is my intention to discuss this legislation fairly and frankly. It involves no legerdemain. Before proceeding I want to say that I am deeply indebted to Mr. Ruml for the study and material he has prepared on this pay-as-you-go tax proposal. It is being largely used as a basis for my statement today.

My studies convince me there are only two methods of getting the taxpayer on a current basis; first, we can advance the tax payments 1 year, or, in other words, move the tax clock ahead. Secondly, we can collect 2 years' taxes in 1 year or over a period of years. There are legitimate objections to either of these plans. I contend, however, that the problem is so great that Congress should immediately study the various proposals and secure enactment of a pay-as-you-go tax program before March 15, 1943, when the next quarterly installment of income tax is due.

Unfortunately, many citizens have been led to believe that if the Ruml tax plan is approved, they will be relieved of their immediate tax liability. That is not correct. This bill does but one thing, and that is move the tax clock of the Nation ahead 1 year. It makes your taxes current by providing that the taxes you pay this year shall be in discharge of this year's income to liability.

First, I am going to discuss the definite need for this tax legislation. Few people realize how much money they owe the Government for income taxes for 1942. There seems to be a prevailing impression that when you pay your quarterly income-tax payments everything is paid until the taxes for the next quarter are due, or at least they assume they are not in debt to the Federal Government. This is an erroneous impression. The facts are that every citizen is indebted to the Federal Government for last year's taxes until they are fully paid and more than that, he is indebted to the Federal Government for the accrued taxes due in the year in which he is paying income taxes. This tax indebtedness is a threat to the solvency of our Federal Budget and a millstone around the neck of the taxpayer.

The income tax debt is the meanest kind of debt there is because it hurts people when they are in trouble. We can keep on paying our income taxes as long as we have an income which is not decreased during the next year. In fact, with higher income taxes from year to year, salary and income must be on a substantial increase. The income tax debt hurts most when sickness strikes, when a shift of employment reduces your salary, or when you have lost your regular income.

This past year has resulted in a changed income status for millions of our citizens. I shudder to think what will occur when we must shift from wartime production to peacetime economy. Certainly no one believes we can make this shift without financial shock to a large portion of our population.

In 1940 there were 3,896,435 income-tax-payers; in 1941 there were 7,437,307; in 1942 there were 16,760,865. On the first day of January 1943, under the Revenue Act of 1942, there were 27,200,000 taxpayers in debt to the Federal Government for taxes on their 1942 income, an increase of 23,300,000 since 1940. In other words, our Government is a creditor to some 27,000,000 taxpayers who are in debt for the taxes on their 1942 income. It is my thought that we cannot afford to continue this shaky system of income-tax collections when we can adopt a pay-as-you-go tax plan without substantial loss of revenue.

If the pay-as-you-go tax plan is approved all these income-tax payers will be income-tax debt free. They will be on a current basis. As our taxpayers receive their income they will pay their current income taxes.

As our war production expands and our Nation increases its Federal expenditures for the prosecution of this war, it becomes even more necessary to make immediate plans to take care of this income-tax debt It is estimated that our national income for the present fiscal year ending June 30, 1943, may reach $125,000,000,000. The Federal Government during that period plans on spending about $90,000,000,000.

When the war ends, this Federal spending will most certainly drop to at least $20,000,000,000 annually. It is estimated that during the present fiscal year 30,000,000 of our citizens will be directly connected with our war effort. Twenty million of them will be employed in war industry, and 10,000,000 will be in the armed forces. No doubt at least 15,000,000 of those so engaged will have to find other work. During this transition period it is reasonable to assume that these millions of employable people will be forced to live on their unemployment insurance. This means that their taxes incurred on a high wage level will have to be paid largely from social-security benefits. This year the farmers of our Nation are going to be the recipient of an abnormal income. Present indications are that it will reach $15,000,000,000. This is the largest percent of the national income the farmers have ever received. Bountiful harvests and fair prices have brought this about. One must assume that this abnormally high income will not continue. The agricultural sections of our Nation have in the past and will, no doubt, in the future suffer from droughts and greatly reduced production. This, together with low prices, will very materially affect the farmers' income. Anyone familiar with agriculture knows these conditions will reoccur. Every fair-minded person knows also that the farmers will be unable to pay high income taxes during periods of drought and low prices unless tax payments are current. Provision must be made to take care of the income-tax liability of the citizen who will be affected by this post-war transition. It is imperative that Congress take immediate action.

I now propose to discuss House Joint Resolution 17 which, if approved, would place into effect the Ruml pay-as-you-go income-tax plan. As I have said, I expect to discuss it frankly and fairly. There are some provisions in it I do not like but am convinced it is the best plan offered so far.

This plan is to be applied to individuals and not corporations. It is my intention to discuss the proposed plan under headings and with permission from the Chair I shall insert at the conclusion of my remarks a detailed analysis of the bill.

The plan provides:

First. Skipping a year to begin 1943 on a pay-as-you-go basis.

Second. Provides for monthly income tax payments.

Third. Making our income tax returns on a tentative basis with a year-end adjustment.

Fourth. Giving relief provisions for those whose income varies from year to year.

Fifth. Giving fair treatment to all taxpayers under the plan, starting the new year on a current basis for everyone.

The first question is now to get our personal income taxes on a current basis without paying 2 years' taxes in 1 year. Mr. Ruml says the answer is as simple as daylight saving. This bill proposes to turn our tax clock ahead 1 year. In other words, the taxpayer's personal income tax liability for 1942 becomes his tax liability for the year 1943.

The question naturally arises in everyone's mind as to how we can drop an income tax year out of the calendar in this way without having the Treasury lose a lot of money badly needed for the war effort. The answer is that we shall all go along paying our income taxes as we have before, except they will be on a current basis. The Treasury will also go along getting its revenues.

Unfortunately, many of our people have been led to believe that by setting the tax clock ahead 1 year they would not be obligated for payment of current taxes. Everyone must realize that our Federal Treasury must have more tax revenue, not less tax revenues. I would be the last person to suggest that any plan be proposed which would threaten the solvency of our Federal Government. This bill protects our Federal Treasury. The big difference between proposed and existing tax collections is that when a taxpayer dies he does not owe the tax as he does under the present system. The only reduction that is possible under the proposed bill is when the taxpayer's income ceases or declines. The reduction is therefore spread over the whole lifetime of the present income-tax-paying generation, and occurs beneficially for each taxpayer at the time when his income fails. The Treasury has at no time ever considered taxes receivable as an asset, and accordingly they can be written off the balance sheet of the Government without the change of a single penny.

The tax experts estimate that the rate of loss to the Government by such means would be so slow that 35 years would pass before a total sum equal to 1 year's income-tax revenue from the whole country would be dropped out of the Treasury's anticipated revenue.

The second point is that the loss of revenue in any case would be partially offset by better tax collections and collection methods.

This bill, if approved, would provide for monthly income-tax collections. I contend this would be to the advantage of the Treasury as well as a large portion of our income-tax payers. The tax collections would also receive the benefit through estate taxes of part of what otherwise would have been payable as income taxes.

At the present time tax collections are important as a part of the anti-inflation control, and the point has been raised that this method of advancing tax collections might have an inflationary effect by releasing funds set aside for last year's tax liability. I doubt this very much, as there are comparatively few people who make provision in advance to take care of their income-tax payments. These people who do are not spendthrifts and are not the type who would go out into the open market and spend their money promiscuously.

The current tax collections might have a wholesome effect on inflationary tendency because our people would be required to pay their taxes from current income. The Revenue Act of 1942 carries a provision for a Victory tax which was enacted by Congress to siphon off excess purchasing power in addition to furnishing needed revenue.

The third point in the pay-as-you-go income-tax plan is designed to solve the problem of how we can pay our income taxes on a current basis, when we do not know at the beginning of a year what our income is going to be in that year. The way of solving this problem is not too difficult. We will go ahead as we do today, filing an income-tax schedule about the 15th of March, declaring our previous year's income. But this will be a tentative return for the year then beginning and we will pay our current taxes on the basis of this tentative return. After the year had ended there would have to be an adjustment up or down, depending on whether our actual income for the year was greater or less than that on our tentative return. But this adjustment would be made on the same blank and at the same time as our return for the following year. This return would be at one time the final return for the old year and the tentative return for the new. There would be no doubling of returns involved and only a few extra lines for the adjustment computations.

The fourth feature of the plan is the provision for relief in case a taxpayer knows his income in the current year is going to be less or greater than that of the year of his tentative declaration. The plan provides that he may declare his true knowledge of lower or higher income, as a result of salary changes, and so forth, which have actually occurred, and make his current payments accordingly. This provision eliminates the awkwardness of year-end adjustments and keeps the plan closer to a true pay-as-you-go basis than it would otherwise be.

The fifth point about the pay-as-you-go income tax plan is that it proposes to give fair treatment to all taxpayers under the plan. This means to skip a tax year for all alike in every bracket and start the whole country debt free as far as the personal income tax is concerned.

The Treasury has proposed a modified plan which would apply to the full tax debt of some taxpayers and to only a part of the tax debt of the rest. Concretely, the Treasury proposed that the tax year be skipped for only the normal tax and the lowest bracket rate of surtax—that is, a total of 10 percent—and that the balance of the tax debt remaining should be paid over the next 2 years—this, in addition to current income taxes that will be payable in those years. The Treasury concedes that this would leave between 10 and 20 percent of our taxpayers still owing the Government for taxes on their last year's income. This group of 10 to 20 percent includes practically all the administrative, technical, and professional men and women who need freedom from income-tax debt danger as much as anyone else.

Quite apart from the question as to who is included or excluded, or for how much, I personally favor as a matter of principle the over-all application of the pay-as-you-go plan for eliminating tax debt, giving all taxpayers the same treatment under the plan.

These are my reasons: For those in the lower brackets, the plan will obviously have far-reaching beneficial results since unfortunate circumstances of loss of income will not be doubly unfortunate because of last year's debt.

For those in the middle brackets, the plan will eliminate countless personal and family tragedies, free many able citizens for public service, and step up the efficiency of American industry by making possible the retirement and pensioning of executives who are holding on, largely to pay their income tax, and never catching up.

For those in the upper brackets, it will make much less practical difference than might appear. First, because like anybody else, as long as they have their income, they continue to pay their taxes; and, second, because when they die, what would otherwise have been paid as income tax on the taxpayer's previous year's income is subject to estate taxes in his highest brackets.

But apart from the practical considerations, the reason I favor over-all application of the principle is because it gives fair treatment to all tax-payers under the plan. In adopting pay-as-you-go, by skipping a year, I believe we should treat all citizens alike. As we turn the tax clock ahead for some, we should turn it ahead for all, and get the whole Nation out of income-tax debt by the beginning of 1943.

The true significance of the pay-as-you-go plan is that it denies the applicability of last year's income as a criterion either of current wealth or of income presently to be received; and therefore rejects the use of last year's income as a basis of taxation according to ability to pay. The plan involves not only the elimination of income-tax debt; basically it involves a change in the criterion of ability to pay.

I stated at the beginning of this discussion that I would discuss this bill frankly and fairly. Some objections have been offered to it and I want to mention them briefly, as I believe every legislative proposal must stand on its own merits. So far as I know, no bill has ever been introduced that was perfect. It is only by constructive criticism that we adjust varying viewpoints on legislative proposals.

One objection that has been offered to this bill is its administrative difficulty. I challenge that point. The return you file at the beginning of the taxable year is your tentative tax liability for that year. Any adjustment of either underpayment or overpayment of taxes is made in the return at the beginning of the next taxable year.

The second objection is the windfall problem. There is some merit to this criticism, but I am convinced a thorough study of the entire tax structure will convince anyone that fair treatment for all taxpayers is more important in a democracy than trying to penalize a few individuals who were fortunate enough to receive increased incomes during the previous year. This is a problem that I hope will receive the serious consideration of the Ways and Means Committee, and I am certain that my views will prevail.

A third criticism is that it is wrong to cancel a debt. I do not generally approve of the cancelation of debts. In fact, I grew up in a school where once an obligation was contracted it should be paid in full.

I do not admit that this proposal provides for a cancelation of debt in a true sense. The fact is that we started off on the wrong foot when we measured current tax liabilities by last year's income and thereby placed the taxpayer in debt to his Government. We now propose to get on the right foot by measuring this year's tax by this year's income.

It is true that a taxpayer under this plan is not in debt to his Government for last year's taxes. However, he does not escape paying income taxes, but pays on the current year's income—not last year's. That is all it does.

Broadly speaking, what will the plan accomplish?

The pay-as-you-go income-tax plan is a three-way plan:

First of all, it is a plan that will relieve thousands of citizens from hardship and distress arising from income-tax debt, and that will bring peace of mind to millions more who are in income-tax-debt danger.

Second, it is a method for clearing the decks for an all-out war financing program. If we can all be free of income-tax debt on the first of 1943 we can start on a pay-as-you-go basis and stay there. If we need high, withholding taxes we can have them; if we need to supplement voluntary savings with compulsory savings, we can do that, too. But whatever is called for, it would be paid out of the current year's income as an assessment on the same year's income. We would not be paying for dead horses while we are fighting a war.

In the third place, the pay-as-you-go income tax plan is the best kind of financial planning for the post-war period. Our policies can then be forward looking not backward looking. We will not be trying to collect income taxes from people who are unemployed; we will not be debating whether we should collect taxes on 1941 or 1942 income from men demobilized from the armed forces. We will not have a spending spree in the first little boomlet, financed on unpaid taxes, and then a tax-debt headache if incomes should drop off for a year or so.

As a Nation of individuals we will be better able to meet the present and to attack whatever the future has in store for us if we are paid up in our income tax, and, being out of income-tax debt, can pay as we go out of what we earn.

I believe that the problem of tax debt must be solved in some manner. As I have pointed out, the problem is an intensely personal one affecting every taxpayer. The suggested solution offered in the pay-as-you-go plan gives relief to the taxpayer and yet does not embarrass the revenues. The pay-as-you-go plan may not be, in all its details, the very best solution, but it is the best that I and those with whom I have consulted have been able to devise. Whether the solution of the problem of income-tax debt takes the exact form suggested in the pay-as-you-go plan is not important; what is important is that the problem should be solved.

Mr. REED of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. REED of New York. There is one very tragic consequence that I think the gentleman's plan will correct. I have seen several instances recently where the husband has died toward the end of the year. The result is now the widow faces the proposition of paying this heavy tax which practically bankrupts her or uses up the little that he has saved.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. Does this plan apply to corporations or does it apply to individuals only?

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. This bill applies only to personal-income-tax payers.

Mr. MICHENER. There has been quite a bit of discussion on the floor about this, and some Members are apparently opposed to the plan, because certain corporations making large war profits have set aside certain amounts of money to pay the 1942 tax. As I understand the gentleman's plan, the corporation tax would in no way be affected?

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. That is absolutely correct. This, according to the Treasury, will affect about $7,600,000,000 of personal-income-tax payments. I think we might just as well discuss that a minute.

The statement is frequently made, and it is natural that it should be made, that by skipping a year's taxes the Federal Government is going to lose $7,000,000,000 immediately. That is not true. This spreads out over a generation of time; and, if we count as a generation 35 years and estimate $7,000,000,000 of personal-income-tax liability this year, it means $200,000,000 a year over 35 years. Is it not reasonable to assume that we can increase the tax collections much more than that by this proposed method of collection?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I am very much in favor of the gentleman's proposal but I would like to find something out from him. At the beginning of his remarks he mentioned something about paying the last year's tax this year. Possibly I misunderstood the gentleman, but did the gentleman mean that the current income would be used as the basis for income-tax payment for 1943?

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. That is correct. Your actual income tax liability for 1942 is the yardstick measuring your tentative tax liability for 1943, subject to adjustments that may occur during the year, which, of course, would be taken care of when you file your next return on or before the following March 15.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. If that is the case, then there will not be a forgiveness of the 1942 tax because it in fact will be collected in 1943.

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. The word "forgiveness" is a very unfortunate word. We move the tax clock ahead 1 year. That is just exactly what we do. Taxpayers will continue making their payments as before, the only difference being that the payments would be treated as being in discharge of the 1943 tax liability, rather than the 1942 liability as at present.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I really think that the main objection has been the understanding that has gone out over the country that they are canceling the tax liability for 1 year.

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. I think that is correct. There is no cessation of tax payments into the Treasury.

Mr. PLOESER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. PLOESER. I think it should be made plain, and I think the gentleman has done so, that the Treasury does not actually suffer any current dollar loss. Most people confuse the method by which the Treasury keeps books with the method by which an individual keeps books.

The Treasury does not carry an accounts receivable item on an amount owed it until the first tax payment is made in March. It is all income and outgo with the Treasury, and it is a matter of receipts. The receipts will not be diminished by this plan. On the contrary, they might well be accelerated.

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. The gentleman is absolutely correct.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. I yield.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. I hesitate to take the gentleman's time because he has made this so clear that it ought to be apparent, but, as I understand, under the gentleman's plan, we will simply call the payment on the 1942 income a discharge of the liability on 1943 income?

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. That is correct.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM Will exemptions and deductions be computed in line with what the taxpayer would be entitled to in 1942, and apply just the same in 1943?

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. That is correct.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Then a man who died near the end of the year or who has no income in 1943 would naturally profit by it, and he would be about the only one who would profit by it?

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. His tax liability would not hang over him or his estate after he had ceased to earn income. It would be discharged currently.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. First, may I ask the gentleman specifically, is this plan which has been referred to here in the colloquy the Ruml plan, or is it a plan of the gentleman's own as set forth in his bill?

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. This is the Ruml plan put into bill form. It is not my own plan, except as I have made it so by introducing the bill. I have written into this plan a monthly tax collection which is not in the original Ruml plan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I want to definitely identify your bill as embracing the Ruml plan, because there will be much correspondence on this question, undoubtedly.

Second, does this plan, the Ruml plan as the gentleman has interpreted it, remove from me, an individual, my income-tax liability on income which I received in the year 1942?

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. Yes; in order that we may make 1943 payments apply to 1943 income, without any doubling up of 2 years' taxes in one. This will be done by moving the tax clock ahead 1 year.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The reason I submit the question that way is that I know positively there are thousands of people in my district who assume that the Ruml plan—and this has been defined as the Ruml plan—will forgive them and remove from them the tax liability on their income for the year 1942.

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. This plan does forgive last year's tax liability, but it uses your 1942 tax liability as the yardstick for your tentative 1943 income-tax payments and thereby makes your tax payments current, instead of always being 1 year in arrears.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Let me resubmit my question, if the gentleman will be patient with me. My question is this: Will this plan relieve me, an individual taxpayer, of my liability to the Government based upon the income I received in 1942?

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. It will not relieve you of your current payments. It does relieve you of the 1942 tax debt, so that we can make tax payments current. Otherwise you would be collecting 2 years' taxes in 1 year.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Then, if the income tax which I pay in the calendar year 1943 under this Ruml plan is the tax liability against my income for 1942, at what point do I begin paying the income-tax liability to the Federal Treasury on the income I received in the calendar year 1943?

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. Under my bill, the tax you pay in 1943 will be on 1943 income. The year 1942 is dropped out of the picture except as it is used as a yardstick for measuring your tentative tax for the current year.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I am paying the 1943 income tax to the Treasury, assessed against my 1942 income in accordance with law, which says that I may pay it in 1943, but the liability runs against the 1942 income and not against 1943. Now, if under the plan I am permitted to pay 1942 tax liability, based on 1942 income, in the calendar year 1943, at what time do I pay my 1943 liability, assessed whenever it may be, against the 1943 income?

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. Your 1942 income-tax liability is your tentative 1943 income-tax liability. Adjustments may be made up or down for a substantial decrease or increase in your income.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have 10 minutes more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair reminds the gentleman from New York that there are other special orders following this.

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I do not like to impose myself upon the House.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Kansas be given 10 additional minutes, with the consent of those having special orders following him.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Kansas be granted 10 additional minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PLOESER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. PLOESER. I want to make this observation, that the 1942 income is not a liability, but is just a yardstick.

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. That is correct.

Mr. PLOESER. By which to gage the basis on which you make payments until the 1943 liability can be established.

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. That is correct.

Mr. CRAWFORD. But if the taxpayer should become deceased, then his estate will find out that it is a liability.

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. Under my plan, there would be no tax debt hanging over a man's estate when he dies. His tax payments would be kept current with his income.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. If under the gentleman's plan the 1942 tax liability is payable monthly in 1943, would you also be paying in addition to the 1942 liability on the income monthly during 1943?

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. No; you would not pay on the 1942 liability in addition to the 1943 liability.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. When would you pay on your 1943 income?

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. In 1943. Adjustments can be made for any change in the taxpayer's status.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. Assuming your taxes in 1942 under existing law amount to $1,000, can you pay this by monthly payments during 1943?

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. Under the present law your 1942 tax liability is due in 1943 on a quarterly basis. My bill provides for monthly payments.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. That is, if the 1942 income tax is $1,000, if a man owes the Government that amount for 1942 tax, when do you pay the 1943 tax?

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. The 1942 tax liability is dropped. You pay the 1943 tax out of 1943 income, in nine installments.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. Let us take the case of a Member of Congress, where the income is a specific amount. Your liability for 1942 is so many dollars. In 1943 you have the same income; do you pay an increased amount for the 1943 income?

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. You use your 1942 tax liability as a tentative yardstick for measuring your 1943 tax and pay according to whatever rates are currently applicable.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. And the 1943 tax is paid in 1944?

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. No; in 1943. The 1944 tax is paid in 1944. In other words, we make tax payments current.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. HOPE. After the taxpayer has paid whatever tax may be assessed against him for 1943, plus such adjustment as may be made on account of a change in his income or circumstances over 1942, that will discharge his tax liability for both 1942 and 1943?

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. That is correct.

Mr. REED of New York. If the gentleman will permit, let me make this comment. I think one of the great contributions which the gentleman has made here today is to let the country know that the people are not going to have their taxes due on March 15 forgiven under this plan, because already the letters are beginning to come in, in which people are very strong for the Ruml plan, but they ought to be made to understand right now that they are not going to be forgiven this tax.

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. I thank the gentleman for making that statement, because certainly everyone should know, particularly a Congressman, that we will have to have more revenue instead of less. The personal income-tax revenue will continue to flow into the Treasury as usual under my bill.

Mr. ARENDS. The point the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HARNESS] is trying to get at, assuming that the income of a Congressman is $10,000 and that the tax on the 1943 income is $1,200, is that then, instead of paying $1,200 on March 15, he will be able to make monthly payments of $100 a month during 1943.

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. Under my bill, provision is made for payment in nine equal installments, beginning with March 15.

Mr. TREADWAY. I suggest that some of these complicated questions that our colleagues are asking the gentleman from Kansas now will have to be eventually worked out in committee before any bill can be reported in regard to the Ruml idea.

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. That is an excellent statement. I threw this into the hopper in order that we might get a discussion of the pay-as-you-go tax plan. I simply offer the plan as a basis for discussion, in order to get something tangible to work with.

Mr. TREADWAY. As I understand, the gentleman is not advocating any particular device; he is simply taking up a discussion of this question.

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. I merely brought this up for discussion.

Mr. TREADWAY. With the thought that the method under which it will be administered will be worked out later on.

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. As a member of the Ways and Means Committee, I know that committee will have to work out whatever provisions are reported to the House, and I know they will be thoroughly considered. We have an excellent chairman and an excellent committee.

Mr. CASE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. I yield.

Mr. CASE. The only thing that is confused in my mind about the gentleman's statement was his reference to the change in the status of a taxpayer, that if for instance he were married in June some adjustment would be made. This, it seems to me, would lead to confusion because what would be done with regard to deductions for taxes paid on real estate or other things. It seems to me the status that should be maintained is the status the taxpayer had in 1942.

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. My bill has a specific provision covering that point, covering change in marital status. There is no difficulty in making allowance therefor.

Mr. CASE. But suppose the individual has State taxes on real estate, or a State income tax; these are logical deductions, and they should be allowed on the basis of his 1942 status.

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. They will be allowed in computing the 1943 liability, since the 1942 tax is used as a yardstick for measuring the tentative tax, and it, of course, makes allowance for such deductions.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. Assuming there were no income-tax law on the statute books; if the Congress should pass the Ruml plan we should then be paying taxes in 1943 under the Ruml plan. Does the gentleman under his plan do substantially anything except that which is done under the Ruml plan?

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. No; and I am sure that had Congress back in 1913 believed that there would ever have been any such condition as prevails at the present time they would have included that provision in the original income-tax law.

Mr. MICHENER. Their failure to do so is the cause of a lot of this confusion and this talk about allowances here and there; but if we start with that premise we are writing a new tax law for 1943 and are going to pay according to that law. Now, if this be true, the other conclusive point is, What becomes of the tax that is due under existing law?

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. That, of course, is the problem. I believe there are two ways of handling it: One, by moving the tax clock ahead; the second, by collecting 2 years' taxes in 1 year, or collecting the back liability over a number of years. My bill adopts the first method and drops out the 1942 liability.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. I yield.

Mr. HOPE. Along the line of interrogation just pursued by the gentleman from Michigan, does it not clear up the confusion somewhat if one simply says that the only purpose in using 1942 figures is to get a basis for making payments which can be adjusted later?

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. That is correct.

Mr. HOPE. It is not paying the 1942 taxes, but simply taking 1942 income as a basis on which to make adjustment at a later date.

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. As a matter of fact you have got to have something as a tentative tax base on January 1, 1943, and when you pay under this bill on 1943 income you pay at the 1943 tax rate.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. I yield.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Under the gentleman's bill would losses occuring in 1942 be deductible, for example, fire loss?

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. I do not believe I understand the gentleman's question.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Suppose the gentleman's bill were passed and became law, would losses occurring during the calendar year 1942 be deductible? For instance, I suffered a fire loss. Would I be able to deduct that in computing my tax?

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. The usual deductions would be allowed.

Under leave granted by the House, I am including the following detailed explanation of provisions of House Joint Resolution 17.

DETAILED EXPLANATION OF PROVISIONS

The first section of the bill states that the bill may be cited as the "Current Payment of Individual Income Tax Act 1943." It also contains two technical provisions, one of which is merely a drafting device to avoid repetition of the words Internal Revenue Code throughout the bill, and the other of which provides that terms used in the bill are to have the same meaning as when used in the Internal Revenue Code.

RELIEF FROM 1942 TAX

To enable individual taxpayers to get their tax payments in 1943 on a current basis, it is necessary to consider the payments made in 1943 as payments on account of the 1943 tax. Thus section 2 of the bill provides that payment of the amount which without regard to the bill would constitute payment of the 1942 tax due in March of 1943—in the case of calendar year taxpayers—is to be considered, not a payment of the 1942 tax, but an advance payment of the 1943 tax—a payment of a tentative tax for 1943. Through this device taxpayers will be making payments on their 1943 tax out of 1943 income. If the tentative tax for 1943 is less than the 1942 tax liability, the 1942 tax is, to the extent of the difference, to be abated, or be credited as refunded in the same manner as an overpayment. Under the terms of the bill this situation will exist only in cases where the taxpayer establishes that by reason of changed circumstances his net income for 1943 will be less, or his credits against net income greater, than they were in 1942. The manner in which the relief on account of changed circumstances operates is explained in connection with the amendment made by section 3 of the bill adding a new subsection (j) to section 56 of the Internal Revenue Code. Hence in the absence of changed circumstances, the amount which would otherwise constitute the tax for 1942—minus the foreign tax credit and the Victory tax—is considered as the tentative tax for 1943. As explained in connection with the amendments made by section 3 of the bill, if in 1944 when the taxpayer makes his final return for 1943 it is determined that the tentative tax paid is in excess of his actual tax liability for 1943—excluding the Victory tax—the excess is to be credited or refunded as an overpayment made on the due date of the tax for 1943—which would be March 15, 1944, in the case of a calendar year taxpayer. Section 2 of the bill does not affect a taxable year beginning in 1942 if the next succeeding taxable year also begins in 1942.

AMENDMENT TO CODE TO PROVIDE FOR PAYMENT OF A TENTATIVE TAX

Section 2 of the bill does not by its terms require the payment of a tentative tax in 1943, but merely provides for relief from the 1942 tax. Section 3, by amendment to sections 56 and 51 of the Internal Revenue Code, makes provision for a tentative tax for 1943 and subsequent taxable years by (1) stating how much the tentative tax is, (2) prescribing the time and manner of its payment, (3) providing penalties for willful failure to make payment, and (4) making special provision for payment of a tentative tax by new taxpayers. The provisions with respect to a tentative tax apply only to individuals.

Subsection (a) of section 3 adds three new subsections to section 56 of the code—relating to the payment of tax. The first so added—subsection (i)—defines, in paragraph (1) thereof, the tentative tax for any taxable year as an advance payment of the actual tax for that taxable year, and provides that the amount of the tentative tax is either—

(1) the tax shown on the return for the preceding taxable year, minus the foreign tax credit and the Victory tax, or

(2) if the taxpayer establishes—as provided in the new subsection (j) added to section 56 of the code—that circumstances have changed so as to make his net income less, or his credits against net income greater, than for the preceding taxable year, the tax which would have been shown on his return for the preceding taxable year if the changed circumstances had been reflected in his net income or credits—minus the foreign tax credit and Victory tax that would have been applicable;

(3) in the case of a taxpayer not required to make a return for the preceding taxable year, but who exercises his election to make a tentative return for the current taxable year—as provided in the new subsection (e) inserted in section 51 of the code by section 3 (d) of the bill—the amount that would have been his tax for the preceding taxable year if his net income and credits against net income had been as included in the tentative return made for the current taxable year—minus the foreign tax credit and Victory tax that would have been applicable.

Three examples will illustrate how each of the above paragraphs will operate:

Example 1: On March 15, 1944, John Doe, single, with a net income for 1943 of $3,000, makes his return for 1943, and finds that his tax liability for 1943—excluding the Victory tax—is $472. During 1943 he has paid $472 as a tentative tax for 1943. Thus he has already paid his 1943 tax—excluding the Victory tax—in full. His tentative tax for 1944 will be the same as his tax for 1943, or $472, and during 1944 he will be required to pay $472 as his tentative tax for 1944.

Example 2: On March 15, 1944, John Doe, who had a net income for 1943 of $3,000 and who was married on July 1, 1943, finds that his tax liability for 1943—excluding the Victory tax—is $395. On March 15, 1943, before his marriage, he computed, on the basis of his 1942 income and credits, his tentative tax for 1943 at $472 and began paying installments of the tentative tax on that basis. After his marriage he notified the Commissioner of his marriage and showed him that the tentative tax he had been paying had been computed on the basis of his single status and was thus too high. Having made this showing, his tentative tax for 1943 was recomputed, on the basis of his 1942 income, but on the assumption that he was married on July 1, 1942, in order to reflect, for the purpose of the tentative tax for 1943, a married status during half of the year. His tentative tax thus recomputed amounted to $395, and the remaining installments of his tentative tax in 1943 were adjusted accordingly. So on March 15, 1944, he has already paid in full his tax liability of $395 for 1943. He now is required to compute a tentative tax for 1944, which on the basis of his 1943 tax would be $395. But his 1943 tax reflects his married status only for one-half of the year, and he will have a married status during the whole of 1944. So he makes this showing to the Commissioner, and for the purpose of computing his tentative tax for 1944 he recomputes his 1943 tax in order to reflect therein a married status for a full year, and by so doing finds his tentative tax for 1944 to be $324. Thus during 1944 he will be required to pay $324 as a tentative tax for 1944.

Example 3: John Doe, single, with no income other than his wages, becomes a wage earner for the first time on January 1, 1943, and receives wages at the rate of $3,000 per annum. Not having any income in 1942, he was not liable for any 1942 tax. On March 15, 1943, pursuant to the amendment made by section 3 (d) inserting a new subsection (e) in section 51 of the code, he makes a tentative return of his 1943 tax, estimating that his net income for 1943 will be $3,000, and computes his tentative tax for 1943 to be $472. He is not required to make a tentative return, but he knows that unless he does and pays during 1943 a tentative tax for 1943, he will be required in 1944 to pay all of his 1943 taxes and in addition his tentative tax for 1944.

Paragraph (2) of the new subsection (i) of section 56 of the code provides that the tentative tax for any taxable year is payable in nine equal installments, the first of which is to be paid on March 15 of the taxable year—in the case of a calendar-year taxpayer. The taxpayer is given the election of prepaying any one or more installments. Thus he could, if he so desired, pay the whole of the tentative tax on March 15.

Under paragraph (3) of the new subsection (i) a tentative tax is not payable for any taxable year the taxable year next succeeding which does not begin in the following calendar year.

The operation of the new subsection (j) inserted in section 56 of the code by section 3 of the bill has already been explained in example No. 2, above. Subsection (j) (1) permits a taxpayer to show to the Commissioner that by reason of his having gone into the armed forces during the preceding taxable year, or his status with respect to the personal exemption or credit for dependents having changed during the preceding taxable year, or by reason of other changes in circumstances during the preceding taxable year, his tentative tax—which is computed on the basis of his status during the preceding taxable year—is higher than it would be if his tax for the preceding year had reflected such change in circumstances for the whole of the year. If he makes this showing his tentative tax is the amount that it would have been if the change in circumstance had taken place at the beginning of the preceding taxable year, and thus been reflected for a full 12 months.

Subsection (j) (2) contains the rule for changes in circumstances during the current taxable year, that is, the taxable year for which the tentative tax is being computed. In that case the tentative tax is the amount it would be if the change had taken place 12 months before it did, and hence been reflected in the previous year for the same length of time that it will be effective during the current year.

The new subsection (k) of section 56 of the code added by section 3 (a) of the bill provides that where the tentative tax paid for any taxable year exceeds the tax imposed for such taxable year—excluding the Victory tax—the excess is to be credited or refunded in the same manner as an overpayment made on the due date for the payment of the tax for the taxable year.

Section 3 (b) of the bill adds a new section 36 to the code to provide that the amount of the tentative tax paid for any taxable year shall be allowed as a credit against the tax imposed for the taxable year—excluding the Victory tax.

Section 3 (c) of the bill amends section 145 (a) of the code to extend the criminal penalties for willful failure to pay the tax to include willful failure to pay a tentative tax.

Section 3 (d) of the bill permits an individual not required to make a return for a taxable year, to make—at the time he would have had to make a return if his income had been sufficient—a tentative return for the succeeding taxable year, that is, the taxable year in progress on March 15, in the case of calendar year taxpayers. In the tentative return the individual is to estimate his income and credits for the taxable year in progress and pay a tentative tax on that basis. Thus individuals who by the other provisions of the bill are not required to pay a tentative tax—there being no return for the previous year on which to compute a tentative tax—are nevertheless permitted to do so and get themselves on a current basis with respect to income-tax payments. The tentative return is to be a return only for the purposes of section 145 (c), prescribing penalties for making false return, and section 55 (f) (1), prohibiting Government employees from disclosing information contained in a return, of the Internal Revenue Code.

Section 2 (e) of the bill makes section 3 applicable only with respect to taxable years beginning in 1943 and subsequent taxable years.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HARRIS of Arkansas). Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to permit a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. MASON. I yield.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Some time after the election the able commentator, John B. Hughes, over the Mutual network gave in his observations an analysis of the political scene. These observations are as pertinent today as they were then. I ask unanimous consent to insert them in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

THE DIES COMMITTEE

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, last March I spoke in the Well of the House on the subject The Dies Committee, Its Friends and Its Foes. I used as the theme for that speech the well-known quotation: "A man is known by the company he keeps." And I advanced as a corollary of that quotation the statement, "A legislative committee may be known by the character of the friends that it makes and by the character of the foes that it makes."

In order to bear out that theme I gave you a list of the friends that had gone on record in favor of the committee and also a list of the foes who had gone on record as opposed to the committee. I want to repeat that list at this time because I think it is as applicable today as it was a year ago.

Its friends—The American Legion, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, Disabled War Veterans of America, Daughters of the American Revolution, Sons of the American Revolution, Knights of Columbus, The Catholic Churches of America, Federation of Women's Clubs of America, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, Junior Order of American Mechanics, and the American Federation of Labor.

I listed as the foes of the committee the following:

Fritz Kuhn and the German-American Bund, a Nazi organization, the Silver Legion of America, the Pelley outfit, The Kyffhauserbund, another Nazi organization, National Workers League, a Nazi anti-Jewish group, Knights of the White Camellia, George Detheridge's old outfit, a Fascist group, the Communist Party and its many front organizations, National Lawyers Guild, controlled by Communists, International Labor Defense, also controlled by Communists, International Workers Order, controlled by Communists, and the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties, another Communist outfit.

That was the end of the list last year, but I am adding one more this year because it has already gone on record as opposed to continuation of the Dies committee and that is the C. I. O., a new addition to the list since last year.

Mr. Speaker, today I propose to analyze our annual report, to pick out its high points and to touch rather lightly upon the minority report, which is included in our report, but which was prepared by the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS]. I want you today to keep in mind the Biblical injunction, "By their fruits shall ye know them," when I am making this analysis and discussing our present report because that is another measuring stick by which you can judge the work of the committee.

Every Member of the House has been furnished with this annual report of the committee. I want to pick out some of its high points and analyze them a little bit for you. For instance, on page 2 it states:

> After the entrance of the United States into the war the committee proposed to refrain from holding public hearings which might involve the activities of Nazi saboteurs so as not to run any risk of premature disclosures which might embarrass those whose responsibility it is to prosecute those guilty of espionage and sabotage.

I think you will agree with me that this program of refraining from public hearings was a good program to adopt at the beginning of this year. The committee has lived up to that program.

Back in 1938 when this committee was organized, it set up as a part of its job, and I think the most important part of its job, a compilation and tabulation of subversive activities uncovered by this committee and we compiled them in such shape that they would be available for use hereafter by Government departments. At that time our files consisted of just two filing cabinets. Today we have 135 filing cabinets filled with facts and documentary evidence, tabulated and indexed, with over 1,000,000 index cards, so that this material is available to any Government agent who desires to find out what are in those files.

With that as a basis, I want to again read from the report on page 3, but before I do so I want to state that the Dies committee has compiled and tabulated the most valuable stock pile, if you want to call it that, or reservoir, if you want to call it that, of the activities of subversive agents that is in existence today anywhere in the world and this stock pile or reservoir is being used every single day by agents from the F. B. I., from Naval Intelligence, Military Intelligence, and the Secret Service of the United States. That is what is going on today behind the scenes, but very little, if any, publicity has been given to it. Here are the facts as pointed out in the report:

The committee reports to the House that during the past 14 months some 1,600 agents from various intelligence units of the Army, Navy, the Federal Bureau of Investigation, and Secret Service have called at the committee's office in Washington for information and hundreds of agents from the same agencies have called at the committee's branch offices in New York, Philadelphia, Los Angeles, and Chicago for similar information.

That is the service the committee has been rendering during this past critical year. I could go on, but I do not want to take the time because I want you gentlemen to read this report and see what is in it.

On page 4 there is a tabulation of the number of requests for information from Government agents and others which totals 138,807 requests that have been honored by the committee during this past year. Those are the fruits of the committee during this year. Going on from there, may I say that the committee report is signed by four of the five present members of the committee, and only four. We have 5 members now. Four of the 5 signed this report. The fifth member refused to sign the report, but did compile, and we included in the report, his minority views; the fifth member, of course, being the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS].

In his minority report—and I urge you to read it along with the majority report—he gives two main reasons, there being many others, for his refusal to sign the report. What are the facts in connection with these reasons? His first reason is that this majority report was not discussed in committee, it was not worked over by the committee, but was presented to each member on a take-it-or-leave-it basis. That is his statement, but it is only a half truth.

Here are the facts: There were only two members of our committee in Washington during the past 6 weeks or 2 months, these 2 members being the gentleman from California and myself. The committee was required to present this printed report to the Congress on January 3. There was no possibility of getting the other members of the committee here to work it over, as should have been done. So the only thing that could be done was to do the best that we possibly could under the circumstances that we found ourselves in and the committee in preparing the report did submit it for criticism and for changes to myself because I was here, and also, I am told, that the committee secretary talked it over with the gentleman from California, the other member of the committee who was here in Washington.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASON. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. The gentleman's recounting of the facts is, of course, correct, and I believe that the gentleman will agree with me that under the circumstances there was, as the gentleman himself states, no chance for our committee to meet to exchange views and to work over our report, as we had done in every previous case, and in every previous case I signed the report.

Mr. MASON. That is right.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. It is true that the report was submitted to the Members on the 28th of December and from the practical standpoint the only thing that could be done was to agree with it in toto or to file what I did, a minority report, in which I gave my reasons why I could not give unqualified approval to the majority report.

Mr. MASON. That is true. I have also stated that one of the reasons that the gentleman would not sign the majority report was a half truth, because we could not get together to discuss it and it was impossible to get together to discuss it. We had to do the best we could under the conditions we found ourselves in. The report was submitted to myself and to the gentleman for our suggestions, but it could not be submitted to those who were out of town.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I did the best I could.

Mr. MASON. I did, too, and the committee did also, under the circumstances.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be permitted to proceed for 7 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, may I correct the gentleman on this point? The report was submitted to all the members of the committee, even though they were not in Washington. Perhaps I did not quite understand the gentleman on that.

Mr. MASON. I certainly did not deny that, because it was.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Further, we had plenty of time either to amend the report or make recommendations, subtractions, or additions. We had the same amount of time that we have had on many other reports. This was not the only time a report was issued even though all the members were not here in Washington.

Mr. MASON. That does not change the issue, or the reasons the gentleman from California advanced—and he was perfectly sincere in advancing them—as to why he could not sign the minority report.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. I agree with the gentleman from Illinois. I just wanted to make it clear to the House that many other times we have approved a report in the manner in which we approved this particular report.

Mr. MASON. Because we had to.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. That is right.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, and I shall not object, may I make the record clear insofar as I am concerned? I received a copy of the report in sufficient time to read it. I was asked to make any objections or corrections or notations I cared to. I read the report and notified the clerk of the committee that I approved it. That was before it was ever published and issued.

Mr. MASON. We all did that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASON. I yield.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. I assume I have given the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois the same careful attention that many other Members of the House have given them. It seems to me that the important thing in connection with the matter the gentleman is discussing is whether or not the members of the committee, with the exception of the gentleman from California, have approved the report as it was submitted to the House.

Mr. MASON. They would not have signed it if they had not approved it.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. That is to be assumed.

Mr. MASON. Now I want to go on with the second reason why the gentleman from California did not feel that he could sign this report. In his minority report he points it out very carefully and clearly. In substance it is this:

In his opinion the annual report of our committee this year should have emphasized and borne down on the Nazi and Fascist influences and dangers in connection with our present enemies. I agree fully with him that that is true, but here are the facts.

Our committee has prepared a full report, consisting of about 500 pages, on the very things about which the gentleman complains, and that he says should be included in this annual report. Because committee members differ as to what should be included in that report of 500 pages, which was due to be issued last December, the report has not been issued as yet. The gentleman from California objected to issuing it and said we ought to postpone the issuance of that report until the committee could get together and iron out its differences of opinion on that report. In conformity with the gentleman's request, that report has been delayed and is still in the committee. It contains 500 pages on the very thing the gentleman thought should go in our annual report.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASON. I yield.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. In the first place, an annual report is a very different thing from the large and voluminous reports the committee has issued from time to time on special subjects. The report to which the gentleman refers will be, when issued, one of those large, voluminous compendiums of material in a certain field. The annual report, however, receives a great deal of public attention as a rule, and should, it seems to me, emphasize the things that most need emphasis.

At the chairman's request, I have worked on the very report the gentleman mentioned. I hoped it could be issued before this, but some members did not agree with it, and for that reason I said of it as of the annual report, that it would have to be talked over in a meeting. But surely the gentleman does not want to give the House the impression that the report constitutes the only work this committee has done in that field. Quite the contrary. In the past, as emphasized over and over by the gentleman and other members of the committee, the committee has done a lot of work in the field of investigation of Nazi and Fascist activities. My point is that this annual report issued in the middle of the war should have emphasized the main thing this committee has on its doorstep and which this Nation faces—namely, activities calculated to weaken our war effort.

Mr. MASON. And following that, I agree with the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS] that he has the right to have his opinion, that this annual report should have emphasized that, but the other members of the committee, believing that that was so comprehensive, including some 500 pages, felt it should not and could not be boiled down and placed in this annual report, and the fact that we differed upon it and could not agree to issue it, prevented our agreement on placing a boil-down or digest of that in this annual report, and, therefore, the four of us have agreed to this annual report, leaving that out, but hoping that very soon the committee can issue that report.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASON. Yes.

Mr. FISH. I assume the annual report is very largely a digest of the activities of the Dies committee?

Mr. MASON. It is a factual digest.

Mr. FISH. And on that factual digest will depend whether the Members of the House want to continue the Dies committee?

Mr. MASON. That is true.

Mr. FISH. I ask the gentleman this question. Are there any members of the Dies committee who are opposed to the continuation of the Dies committee or does the gentleman know that?

Mr. MASON. I, of course, cannot speak for the others, but I am quite sure that no member of the committee as it is composed at present is opposed to the continuation of the committee. I feel quite sure that that is true.

Mr. FISH. I have read in newspaper reports that there were about 60 Members who opposed the Dies committee and that about two-thirds of that 60 were defeated in the last election.

Mr. MASON. I would not know how many, but my understanding is that some 20 or 30 of the 40 who voted against the committee were defeated.

Mr. FISH. I understood that the number is 38.

Mr. MASON. I would not know.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASON. Yes.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Regardless of the emphasis or lack of emphasis placed in this report on the apparent difference between the Communist and Fascist theories, I think it is significant at this time that Mr. Earl Browder, who is one of the leaders of the Communist Party in the United States, has characterized within the last 24 hours the Congress of the United States as a saboteur of our war efforts.

Mr. MASON. That the Congress is a saboteur of our war efforts? I am very glad to have that information.

Mr. CRAWFORD. What is the position of the Council of Churches in respect to the Dies committee?

Mr. MASON. I do not know.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman leaves the subject of the defeat of Members, I think the gentleman ought to emphasize the fact that while about two-thirds of the Members who opposed the continuance of the Dies committee were defeated, yet they were not all defeated in the general election. Many of them were defeated in the primaries.

Mr. MASON. Be that as it may, I want to get back to the Biblical injunction, that "By their fruits shall ye know them," and if Members of the House will summarize the fruits of this committee during the past year, I am sure that they will give a vote of confidence to the committee and vote to continue it.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ARENDS] is recognized for 15 minutes.

THE PROBLEM OF THE FARMER

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Speaker, one of my friends has a sign over his desk which reads something like this:

> It takes us some time to do the hard things; the impossible takes a little longer.

I am motivated today in making this talk by the fact that the farmers are asked to do a big job in fulfilling the request of increased food production for 1943. That, Mr. Speaker, is not only a hard job, but I am wondering if it is not also an almost impossible job to accomplish under the conditions which I will talk about.

On today, January 12, farmers all over the country are observing M-day, the day on which they will begin to sign up in a program calling for increased production and complete mobilization of all resources to meet food goals for 1943. On this date local meetings will be held throughout every community or in county-wide rallies, where the farmer will be acquainted with all details of the production objectives set for the year.

From the experience of last year, there is or can be no doubt but that farmers as a group will willingly and patriotically cooperate and pledge their best efforts to make possible the production of the necessary foods to win this war. 1942 was the best crop year ever experienced, our production being 14 percent greater than in 1941 and 12 percent greater than the previous best crop year of 1937. The good Lord gave us the growing weather and the farmer did the balance.

This coming year, however, presents for production purposes various obstacles with which the farmer did not have to contend in 1942. First, through divine help, we must have the most perfect climatic conditions. Secondly, there is the manpower or farm help problem. Department of Agriculture figures disclose that the American farmer lost, through selective service and movement to war industry up to January 1, 1943, about 2,000,000 men and the only thing that can possibly replace the man labor shortage is power equipment. Such a drain of farm labor cannot help but vitally affect the whole picture and attention must be given this angle. Next, and the subject I want to discuss with you, is the machinery problem which is growing acute since the issuance of the W. P. B. Limitation Order L–170. All of us must realize that if less manpower is at hand, then more machine power must be made available. This applies particularly to tractors, combines, corn pickers, and so forth. Order L–170 limits the production of farm machinery for 1943 to 20 percent of 1940–41 production, and this 20 percent includes repair parts, so the actual production of new machines is approximately 14 percent.

This 14 percent is not enough for replacement of obsolete machines and gives no consideration to those machines required for the additional production of food to feed our armed forces and those of our allies.

The Farm Machinery Section of the War Production Board started work on this order in June of 1942 in connection with the recommendations of the Department of Agriculture. Their recommendations were that the very minimum of farm machinery required for 1943 would be 50 percent of 1940–41 production, and after months of debate on the subject with the Civilian Supplies Section of the War Production Board—this section controls the raw materials for civilian needs—it was decided by the Civilian Supplies Section that all raw materials they could provide would be 20 percent for 1943 for the production of new farm machinery and repair parts, or in other words, the Civilian Supplies Section of the War Production Board, a group of people that knew nothing of the farmers' needs, took it upon themselves to cut the recommendations of two other departmental organizations who did know the farmers' needs, by more than half.

I will not attempt to explain what the effect of this order will be on the farmer on each of the many machines required by him to produce a crop, but I will deal now with only one machine, the tractor, which is his power plant and the most vital machine he uses. Without it, he can do nothing.

The L–170 order permits the manufacture of 14 percent for 1943 of the 1940–41 production on tractors. This means that the whole farm tractor industry can only produce 37,000 tractors.

The minimum required for replacements alone is approximately 200,000, or in other words, the farmer is expected to increase his production with only 18 percent of his actual replacement needs.

Would our Government ask any other war industry to increase their production for the war efforts and at the same time tell them that they could only have for replacement 18 percent of the actual power needs. It is obvious that they would not.

The question has been raised, What did the farmer use for power before the advent of the tractor?

He used horses and a plentiful supply of man labor.

The next question is, Why cannot he go back to this method? The answer is that neither is available at this time. I quote from an address by Frank J. Zink, research department, Farm Equipment Institute, at the annual meeting of the American Society of Agricultural Engineers, Hotel Schroeder, Milwaukee, Wis., on July 1, 1942. Mr. Zink had this to say about the power required for farmers:

It is estimated that on our farms there are 1,800,000 tractors, 1,047,000 trucks, and 4,140,000 automobiles and that the power plant is in the aggregate, the largest on record. For primary production of food and food crops, however, tractors and animal power units are the only units of substantial value. Trucks and automobiles are indispensable in conjunction with farming, but contribute little, if anything, to crop production. Tractors in this country include everything on wheels, including improvised, home-built units of limited value in food and feed crop production, garden tractors, and old tractors used as stationary power units principally. While many tractors are new, the average age, according to the 1940 census, is 7 years; therefore, many very old tractors must have been included in the counts.

During the past decade of census figures there was a decrease of 4,085,000 animal power units and an increase of 637,000 tractors on farms. This is a ratio of change of 1 tractor replacing 7.5 horses. Animal power population does not maintain itself by a net annual unit replacement of 434,716 necessary to maintain itself static, according to the 1940 census.

Based on the record of the past 10 years, there are annually required 57,962 tractors to replace the declining trend of animal power unit population. It is probable that this ratio is currently more nearly 1 tractor to approximately 4 animal power units. In this case there would be needed about 109,000 tractors to replace estimated birth rate under death rate of animal power units. Further, because of withdrawals of animal units from farms to city usage, a new trend, this number of tractors may be considerably too low for animal replacements. It is estimated that approximately 85,000 tractors are needed annually to replace worn-out units. Thus it is indicated through past experience that approximately 195,000 tractors are required for replacements only. It has been a contention that 4 steel-wheeled tractors are needed to equal the work capacity of 3 rubber-tired tractors, and now that rubber tires are not available for new tractors, there exists an additional circumstance of tractor replacement requirements to maintain the substance of our farm power plant.

Thus tractor production rate for which materials were available in 1942 falls short of a maintenance level. While it is advocated that life of tractors may be prolonged by repair, many of these 85,000 required units are obsolete to the degree that repair in the face of farm-labor shortage is not good engineering, and is also questionable in conjunction with increasing food goals for the war effort.

To farm a 160-acre farm in my district, using animals for power, it requires the farmer and one hired man, but with a tractor for power, the farmer can do most of the work himself with a little help at harvest season, by working 16 hours per day. The farmers in my district and every other district in these United States are willing to work those 16 hours and more per day to meet the demand of producing food to win the war, but they cannot do the impossible if they are deprived of their machine tools. There is only one answer—they cannot produce.

On December 2, 1942, Mr. Donald Nelson made the statement that he ranked agricultural production along with the production of munitions, and that agriculture is a war industry. If this statement is correct, why does he permit agencies under his direction to cut so drastically the output of farm machine tools? Sometimes I wonder why a man from New York City, Mr. Joseph Weiner, happened to be appointed to the job in charge of farm machinery supplies. I do not know Mr. Weiner, but if he lives in New York City, I wonder what he actually knows of true farm conditions. I believe Mr. Nelson might have benefited his office by going out into districts like mine and getting advice and suggestions and even personnel from amongst some of our experienced, common-sense, practical, and able farmers who do know what it takes to run a farm and meet production goals.

Secretary Wickard, speaking from Chicago on December 3, 1942, said that he realizes that there is not enough fertilizer or farm machinery, or other supplies, and that he is doing his level best to improve the situation to make the present supply go as far as possible and be effective as possible in the food-production program. I quote:

With farm manpower being depleted, we need new machines to increase output if we are to increase maximum production. We need more new machinery than we are going to get. I have tried, and tried hard, to get more; I am going to keep on trying, but we may as well face the facts that we cannot get enough new machinery for maximum production; maybe not enough for replacement.

He went on to point out the increasing needs not only in our own country but abroad, saying:

Millions of enslaved people are living in conquered lands and long for the day when American food will follow the American flag in the march of liberation.

He indicated that this year military and lend-lease took about 13 percent of our total food production. Today the estimate is up at least to 25 percent, and he urged farmers to convert completely to war basis.

You have undoubtedly all noticed through the recent press releases and from information disclosed on this floor that the effect of this program is causing farmers to sell out at an alarming rate. Representative HULL, of Wisconsin, recently stated that 10,000 auction sales had been held in Wisconsin alone. Kansas reports about the same number and Minnesota likewise. These are only typical of what is taking place throughout the country.

Yes; our farmers will sign up in the program for all-out food production for 1943. As patriotic citizens they will do their best, will gladly work hard through long hours. But if they are to milk a few extra cows, feed additional pork or beef, raise more chickens to get more eggs, then they must have the time to attend to such duties. More farm manpower with adequate machine equipment is the solution.

Most of you know how important a crop the soybean has grown to be. Last fall, in my district, and this holds true throughout a great part of Illinois, and that State produces by far the greatest bushelage of beans in the United States, from 25 to 30 percent of these beans are still in the field where they are fast deteriorating and becoming of less value each day. Had more combines been available, most of these beans would have been harvested. We should not permit a recurrence of such loss of an essential crop.

Again, indications for 1943 point to the possibility of great insect damage to crops. The European corn borer, running as high as 294 for 100 stalks of corn, has already been noted in the corn belt area of Illinois. Chinch bugs in winter quarters are found in goodly numbers. Other sections of the country have similar insect troubles peculiar to crops grown in their localities. Sufficient up-to-date machinery in the hands of farm operators will minimize the danger from insect damage, for with good tools, used at proper times, better farming methods will help control such pests as the corn borer.

Frankly, I am worried about the food situation for this coming year. Oh, yes; the farmer will do his best, but will he have enough to do it with? I hope those in control of priorities at the War Production Board will give this problem more consideration and make possible a sizable percentage increase in production of machinery for the farmers. To win this war we need food and lots of it, food sufficient to feed our boys in service and ourselves, and at the same time supply our allies with as much as possible. President Roosevelt recognized the importance of the matter when he stated:

Food is no less a weapon than tanks, guns, and planes.

Unless a definite change is made in our food program at once, there is only one answer—the American farmer cannot produce the food required for our war efforts without the proper tools and manpower to produce that food.

Mr. ANTON J. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ARENDS. I yield.

Mr. ANTON J. JOHNSON. What percent of the 1940 production of tractors are they allowed to have?

Mr. ARENDS. It amounts to about 14 percent for 1943.

Mr. ANTON J. JOHNSON. Fourteen percent. At the present time no tractors are going out on rubber. When the old rubber tires wear out the farmer has got to put steel lugs on his wheels, and every farmer knows that efficiency then drops another 10 to 20 percent.

Mr. ARENDS. In other words, it takes four steel-tired tractors to do the work of three rubber-tired tractors.

Mr. ANTON J. JOHNSON. That is right. He does not therefore add any power.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ARENDS. I yield.

Mr. HILL. We have a peculiar situation in Colorado with regard to sugar beets. This is the first year we have been able to get a beet puller and piler that would work successfully. Up to now it has all been a hand-labor proposition, but now we are not going to be given any priorities on beet pullers and we are thrown back to a reliance on manpower. We are asked to increase our production, but we are given neither manpower nor the priorities to get these machines that cut the tops off beets, pull them, and pile them. Then another machine comes along and picks them up. We must have both machines to work beets expeditiously.

Mr. ARENDS. It must be a combination of supplying both men and machines.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ARENDS. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Do you think it would help any, instead of having this M Day where they get all the farmers into town and have some county agent or some half county agent and half politician tell them how to run their business, if we just gave the farmers the tools and let them go ahead they would produce the stuff we need?

Mr. ARENDS. Given both manpower and machines, the farmer will do a splendid job.

[Here the gavel fell.]

SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HARNESS] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, on June 4 of last year I addressed the House at some length on the subject of this balooning bureaucracy. At the time I spoke on that subject Mr. Henderson, head of the Office of Price Administration, was asking the Congress for an appropriation to put on the pay roll a hundred thousand Federal policemen and Gestapo agents. I want to quote one paragraph from that speech of last June, which appears in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

> We have all heard Mr. Henderson's estimate that it will require another army of 100,000 Federal employees to maintain the system of price controls which he is putting into effect. Here is another matter, which this Congress should take the time to look into very carefully. Just why we need 100,000 Federal snoopers and Gestapo agents riding hard on American shopkeepers and merchants is a little hard for me to understand. Does Mr. Henderson follow the habitual administration attitude that every American enterpriser, per se, is a fellow to be watched, suspected, and hounded at every turn? Does he believe that every American businessman is a cheater and chiseler at heart, who must have a Federal checker at his elbow every time he makes a sale?
> Instead of this system of Federal price policemen, why does not Mr. Henderson recognize the shrewd shopping instincts of the housewives of America? Why does not he organize select committees of these shoppers in each community and give to them the job of policing prices. Capable purchasing agents that they are, I am confident that they would have no trouble in spotting the occasional chiseler and reporting him to Mr. Henderson if he failed to make immediate adjustments of any prices on which he was out of line.

While Mr. Henderson did nothing about my suggestion, I am glad to report that the Department of Agriculture has, or is about to inaugurate a very similar plan in connection with food rationing. Notwithstanding our protests, however, the O. P. A. has put on the pay roll a staggering number of new employees to further harass and annoy the people. In my congressional district O. P. A. has just established two regional rent-control offices with a large group of snoopers and Gestapo policemen to chart every rental residential property in the district, requiring every person who rents a property for residence purposes to file in triplicate a questionnaire with the Rent Control Director. There is no need of this army of civilian employees. There are no large cities in my district; in fact all but two are small towns. Control of rents in this district could very easily and simply be handled by local patriotic groups who would gladly serve without compensation and keep a close check on any violation of the Rent Control Act. I shall insist that the Congress abolish this needless waste of public funds and discharge from the pay roll these snoopers who are accomplishing no good purpose, but are driving honest patriotic citizens almost to distraction.

So far as the grim determination to win the war just as quickly and at as little cost in lives and treasure as possible is concerned, the people's decision which created this Congress has changed nothing. That was our one important purpose and it will be until the job is done.

As to administrative policies and methods on the home front, however, the American people issued a clear mandate that drastic changes be made immediately. The voters made it perfectly clear that they have become sick and tired of social planners, teaming with political opportunists and bureaucrats to endanger free government in America.

If this Congress is to obey the desires of the people who created it, it will immediately attack this overgrown Federal bureaucracy which is rapidly strangling American enterprise, destroying all rights of States and individuals, and adding alarmingly to the costs of government. Worst examples are the emergency agencies, such as the Office of Price Administration which is now enjoying a field day in imposing all manner of restrictions upon the people, but there is hardly a Federal agency, emergency or regular, where the pruning knife cannot be used to great advantage. This goes even for the War and Navy Departments which have expanded so completely without coordinated plan that we have one civilian employee for every three men in fighting uniform.

If we will simplify and streamline the essential services, and will cut out the dozens of purely nonessential activities in which this administration still persists, I am sure we can weed out upward of 1,000,000 Federal employees who can go into the essential private fields now crying for help.

By a thorough house cleaning in Federal activities we can make a good start on the problem of manpower, but nothing more than a start. The shortage of manpower has already become so critical, in fact, that we are threatened with the necessity of a total draft of the American people. If this is to be avoided, and at this late stage no one can say for sure that it can be avoided, this Congress must drive the administration into steps which for political expediency it has so far refused to take. Whether we like it or not, everybody who is able to work simply must work harder and longer. Whether we like it or not, we are simply forced to recognize the farmer's labor problems and help him meet them, or face the prospect of actual hunger in America. The time for kid-glove treatment and mollycoddling of any special group or class is over. It is up to this Congress to force the formulation of a manpower policy in which every last person contributes his best efforts for the common good.

As for rationing of goods and services, a great deal of it is simply unavoidable. Many severe shortages might easily have been avoided had we followed a more far-sighted program from the beginning of this emergency, but that is water over the dam. We are faced now with the job of avoiding any unnecessary sacrifices, and of making the unavoidable sacrifices just as light as possible. This means a forced general revision in the bureaucratic conception of seeking results by compulsion, rather than by cooperation.

It isn't necessary to use compulsion on the American people. In fact, the bureaucrats will some day learn that you simply can't put the yoke on people who cherish liberty as we do in this country. The American people, however, will cooperate, no matter what the sacrifice, if they merely are given the facts to prove the sacrifice necessary. It is the job of this Congress, therefore, to see that the whole rationing program is simplified and to see that it is based primarily upon popular cooperation.

Certainly, also, at the very outset we ought to strip the rationing program of its sillier aspects which make it so much harder for the American people to accept cheerfully. All of us could cite a dozen different ways in which rationing regulations simply don't make sense, but consider, as an example, this recent order that your baker may no longer slice bread. In the absence of any official explanation, I have tried to figure out why the baker, who for years has had the slicing machinery, and who would be glad to go on using it, since it adds nothing to his production costs, must now deliver your bread whole loaf. But I am forced to conclude that the order is as pointless as that one prohibiting the cuffs on men's trousers.

When this Congress has forced the people's will upon the administration, it will then be our further duty in the 2 years ahead to keep a constant check upon the Executive. There must be no more blank checks, no more blanket grants of authority offering new loopholes for the bureaucrats.

Above everything else, of course, it will be made and kept plain that this Congress will back the President and Commander in Chief to the limit in the prosecution of the war; and will vigorously promote sound, long-range plans for lasting peace, once total victory is won. Nothing else will so quickly convince the skeptical, both at home and abroad, that the American people were everlastingly right on November 3; and that their unmistakable decision ordering drastic changes in domestic policies and philosophies is a real and important contribution to the effectiveness of the American war effort.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and to incorporate therein a speech delivered in Washington last night by the commander of the American Legion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. KENNEDY] for 5 minutes.

TAXATION

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, if you lived in the city of New York, every time you went to the store you would pay a sales tax in the amount of 1 percent to help finance the city government. As a resident of New York State you would be subject to the State income tax. Added to these taxes would be the Federal income tax. If you owned a house that was worth $10,000, you would find it assessed for its full value and at times in excess of its market value, on which you probably would pay $250 a year for real-estate tax, plus the water tax and a few other special taxes.

My purpose in rising today is to join with other Members of this House who are putting forth plans to bring about a revision of the Federal income tax law, making it easier for the average citizen to pay his taxes. There is no use fooling ourselves; the average citizen pays the taxes due on last year's income out of this year's earnings.

If we are going to treat these figures in an arbitrary manner, we will not get very far because a man who has to support a family and who receives one, two, or three thousand dollars a year will be hard pressed. In many cases some of his children are away to the war. Although that man cannot pay 2 years' taxes in 1, he is just as loyal, patriotic, and devoted citizen as you will find in the land. You cannot get water out of a stone.

It behooves us to act promptly and to do something about a workable plan. I do not care whether you want to call it the Ruml plan or the Carlson plan; you might even call it the Kennedy plan. Whatever it is, let us have it and let us have it quickly. We have over 7,000,000 people in the city of New York, and they are pleading and begging for some favorable action on the part of the Congress in the tax situation. They are not irritable; they are not being quarrelsome; they are being logical; they want to cooperate in the war effort; they want to respond; they want to pay their fair share of taxes, but we must point the way.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. TREADWAY. The gentleman says he want something put into effect quickly.

Mr. KENNEDY. Yes, Mr. TREADWAY.

Mr. TREADWAY. Of course, knowing the gentleman's ability and standing, both as a Congressman and as a citizen of New York, he does not want it done so quickly that it is not thoroughly done?

Mr. KENNEDY. No; I want it done thoroughly, equitably, and fairly.

Mr. TREADWAY. That is a very big contract, particularly to have it ready to put into effect by the 15th of March.

Mr. KENNEDY. I know the average Member of the House has complete confidence in the membership of the Ways and Means Committee and, while other committees might take a long time, I am sure that the Ways and Means Committee has the ability and the facilities to do an excellent job.

Mr. TREADWAY. We have not any superlative knowledge of the subject before us at the present time, especially when the President asked us yesterday for $16,000,000,000 in new taxation.

Mr. KENNEDY. I realize it is going to be a difficult task, but I also know that the Committee on Ways and Means will find a way. The members of that committee have the right disposition, they have the needed knowledge, and they are assured of the cooperation of the entire membership of the House in their unpleasant assignment.

Mr. TREADWAY. The gentleman would not be surprised if it extended beyond the 15th of March to discover the manner in which it could be done?

Mr. KENNEDY. I would not be surprised at such a delay. I do not expect the committee to act in a hasty manner. I am not trying to stampede the committee because I know that cannot be done. All of the members of that committee are good, sensible citizens. Let us all get to work on this problem. It is a serious proposition, affects every person in the country. The people want to pay, but do not ask them to do the impossible.

I ask for your assistance and best thought on the subject.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN] is recognized for 20 minutes.

FOOD WILL WIN THE WAR AND WRITE THE PEACE

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, the most critical problem on the domestic production front consists in our ability to produce and supply an abundance of food for the armed forces, and for civilian needs and our allies. At long last, the administration recognizes that the winning of the war and the writing of a lasting peace depends upon food, and the ability of American farmers to produce and supply it to the peoples of the world. The United States is now the "food basket" for the world.

The stupidity of the administration's past policies of plowing under surpluses and destroying food has brought our country face to face with a possible famine and scarcity in essential foods. It is now apparent that within the next 6 months all essential foods will be strictly rationed. The food problem as it appears today may eventually result in such a scarcity that certain foods cannot be procured at any price.

For the past year many of us have tried to convince New Deal executives that it takes manpower and machinery to produce beef, pork, dairy products, poultry, and other foods. But it is only within the past 60 days that these officials were finally forced to admit the validity of our contention. Of course, one cannot expect eastern bred and born graduates of the Frankfurter school of philosophy, from New York and Brooklyn, to understand much about the need for manpower or machinery as being essential in food production. Scores of these intellectual bureaucrats are key men in the New Deal to make the decisions on food production and farm life.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. Who appointed these incompetent bureaucrats who are administering all of this rationing program?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I do not know who was responsible for the appointment of many of them, but apparently they came in with the "new order" which had for its objective the remaking of the life and government of the American people.

Mr. KNUTSON. Why beat around the bush? As a matter of fact, the President appointed them, or he is primarily responsible for their appointment.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. There is no question about his responsibility, because he was given the authority and if he delegated it to some incompetent who did not understand anything about the practical life of the farmer and the middle classes of this country, he must bear that responsibility.

One-third of America's skilled farm manpower has gone into the armed forces and defense industries. Lack of understanding on the part of selective-service officials in Washington forced the induction of tens of thousands of essential farm workers into the military service, when they should have been retained on the farm to produce food. Several hundred thousand skilled farm workers have also been attracted by the high wages and short hours prevailing in defense industries. American farmers cannot compete with a 40-hour workweek, and a high wage scale with time and one-half for overtime now prevailing in defense industries. This war cannot be won on a 40-hour workweek.

We in Congress from the agricultural districts, have repeatedly urged, for more than a year, that essential farm workers should be retained in the production of food, but we have met with little success in dealing with bureaucrats, who feel that they know it all. Policy changes are now taking place to safeguard agricultural manpower and food production, but many believe that such action is coming too late.

Mr. CURTIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. CURTIS. I have one or two questions. In reference to the deferment of farm workers, is it not true that after the regulations went on down pursuant to the mandate of this Congress for the deferment of agricultural workers, they did not reduce the quotas, and I refer to the draft quotas, in those counties that are purely agricultural? The instructions were quite complicated that came to the local boards and it ended up by the boards raising quotas. Is that not true?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I think that is substantially correct.

Mr. CURTIS. Is it not true also that along with the deferment there must be a lowering of quotas for the agricultural areas?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. As a matter of fact, I understand that for the past year they have been taking larger quotas from the Midwest farming sections than they have from the more thickly populated and congested sections of the country.

Mr. CURTIS. The gentleman has been in Congress for many years and has a very distinguished career here. Would he inform me, how did it happen that they passed the 40-hour-week act? Under Secretary of War Patterson said if we would raise the workweek to 48 hours it would release 1,500,000 workers for other jobs. How did that thing happen to be jammed through Congress?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. During the past 10 years, as the gentleman knows, and up to Pearl Harbor, a good deal of so-called New Deal legislation was sent up here by the Chief Executive as "must" legislation and jammed through the Congress by the large majority on the Democratic side, who put it through at the request of the Chief Executive.

Mr. CURTIS. Its purpose was to relieve unemployment?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. That was the idea but, of course, it was never successful in that respect.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield to the gentlewoman from Illinois [Miss SUMNER].

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. I have heard a lot of comment about the plowing under of crops and the slaughtering of pigs as if that were a policy or something that happened in the past and there had been reform since. It seems to me the same situation exists today. For instance, in my district farmers who have corn are not going to be able to harvest the corn. It is not going to be harvested. The snow is on it. The farmers cannot get the corn pickers or help. They have soy beans that are not going to be harvested. They are going to rot in the snow because they cannot get combines. I know several farmers who sold their steers when they were small because they could not get barbed wire to fence the cattle in to keep them away from the crops. That is the same thing as plowing under. That stuff will be plowed under next spring.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. KNUTSON. It is less painful.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. But it will be plowed under next year.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I thank the gentlewoman for that contribution.

Mr. KNUTSON. When it rots on the ground it becomes an act of Providence and thus relieves the administration.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. It is better to have 1 experienced man on a farm than 10 individuals who are not familiar with agricultural life. The employment of transient labor is not desirable or satisfactory in diversified farm areas, where full-time employment is needed.

Secretary Wickard is proposing the employment of Mexican labor. He, and Manpower Chief McNutt, are working on a proposal to move thousands of unemployed, colored and white individuals, from larger cities, to American farms. This type of transient and untried labor will never be satisfied to put in the long hours and do the hard work required on every farm, and I am satisfied that these programs will not bring results in securing an increase in food production.

Mrs. Roosevelt is toying with the idea of recruiting battalions of women workers for American farms. She got the idea on her recent and well-publicized trip to England.

THE GOODHUE FARM MANPOWER PLAN

The best plan thus far proposed to secure additional manpower for farmers in the harvest season was originated in Goodhue, Minn. Two years ago, the loyal and resourceful businessmen of this community recognized the growing scarcity of farm workers. They got together in a meeting and agreed to close up their places of business during the stress of the harvest season, in order to help harvest the crops. The Goodhue plan worked. Storekeepers, clerks, mechanics, laborers, and other willing workers in the community, stopped their usual activity and went to work on neighboring farms in the harvest. They did a splendid job. The Goodhue plan demonstrates what can be done without the aid of bureaucrats from Washington. It looks to me as though the Goodhue plan is too simple for New Dealers to understand, as it does not involve the usual red tape with scores of high-paid employees to put it into operation.

I suggest that the Goodhue plan be tried in every community in the country. Washington will never solve the farm manpower problem. Lack of coordination between various Federal agencies, red tape, waste, and inefficiency have effectively stopped constructive action for securing real results in settling or distributing essential manpower in our production and war effort.

FARM MACHINERY

The falling off in farm manpower makes it imperative that farmers be provided with an adequate supply of essential farm machinery and equipment in order to meet the increasing demand for essential foods. The latest decision of the War Production Board will only permit the manufacture of 20 percent of 1940–41 production in farm machinery in 1943. Such a small amount of essential farm machinery will be of little or no value in the production of food. If the administration is sincere in its latest slogan that "Food will win the war and write the peace," and therefore desires a tremendous increase in 1943 food production, the War Production Board should promptly authorize the manufacture of a hundred-percent supply of both essential machinery, parts, and equipment. The machinery most needed to secure production, in addition to manpower, is generally known to be the following: Corn planters, cultivators, and pickers; mowers and hay loaders; farm tractors, plows, drags, and elevator equipment; dairy supplies, such as milking machines and other essential equipment; additional material for the construction of silos, as well as poultry equipment and other supplies so essential in the production of dairy, beef, pork, poultry, and vegetable products.

It is not surprising that farmers have experienced so much difficulty in securing farm machinery. Directing the W. P. B. farm machinery program is Mr. Joseph L. Weiner, New York lawyer, who cannot be said to be too familiar with farm life or the production of food. It is quite apparent from his actions to date that he believes that milk, butter, beef, and other food will be forthcoming by simply pressing an electric button or turning on a faucet.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. KNUTSON. I did not catch the name of that New York lawyer.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Joseph L. Weiner.

Mr. KNUTSON. Is he the gentleman who made the profound discovery that there are both male and female steers?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I am not familiar with his observations in that respect.

Mr. GILLIE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield to the distinguished agriculturalist from Indiana.

Mr. GILLIE. The gentleman from Minnesota a few moments ago made mention of bringing into agriculture some new types of labor. What is the gentleman's opinion about bringing this labor from submarginal land into the better agricultural districts?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I did not touch on that, but that is a very important part of the manpower problem.

Mr. GILLIE. What is the gentleman's opinion of it?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. For the past 7 or 8 years, under the farm-tenancy and farm-security program, officials have taken these submarginal farmers throughout the country and purchased farms for them and equipped them with buildings, fences, livestock, and everything they needed to get a start in life. About 2,000,000 of them have had the benefits of this beneficent program. Now they propose to take these people away from the farms the Government has acquired for them and move them into areas where it is claimed they are needed because, it is said, they do not now engage in the production of food essential to help win the war. So it is proposed to move them. I do not know what is going to happen under the program, and I am sorry I cannot answer the question.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield.

Mr. HILL. We of the West would like to know why the O. P. A. would select a lawyer from the center of New York to tell us out there in this great irrigated section of the West how many pieces of farm machinery we can buy in 1943. What we want to know is, where is his background of experience? Has the gentleman an answer to that?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. As I understand, those who believe in or who have followed the Frankfurter philosophy are holding nearly all of the key positions, and make the decisions as to how you and I and the rest of the people shall live our lives.

Mr. HILL. It does not help our farmers to know that Frankfurter is to blame, because who is Frankfurter?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I shall not give the gentleman any biography of him today, but he has quite a following and has educated a large number of men in one of the great eastern colleges, and they are holding key positions in the Government.

Mr. HILL. Yesterday I placed in the RECORD the life history, given by Fulton Lewis, Jr., over the radio, of five or six of the very important men in O. P. A. giving their background of experience. It is ridiculous to place men with no more background and experience and understanding of the practicality of the American economy in positions like these, men whose best recommendation for their jobs is that they have held teaching positions in some college.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. The gentleman fails to recognize the fact that most of the men to whom he refers are believers in the theory that our American system has outlived its usefulness and that they have been ordained by some high power to give us a new type of economy and a new government in the United States.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. I was just going to call attention to the fact just mentioned by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. HILL] in connection with his speech of yesterday. I hope the Members will read it. It contains a factual statement by Fulton Lewis, Jr., the Mutual broadcaster. It is worth reading. Our people will understand better the administration of some of the rationing rules and regulations when they appreciate the experience and the background of the men who are making the orders.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I thank the gentleman. I have said before on this floor, and I say it again, that Fulton Lewis, Jr., is making a real contribution to the welfare of our country. His research and study covering the economic problems of agriculture and of the common man, and his broadcasts that result therefrom, are bringing to the American people an insight into some of the things that are going on. I think we all owe a debt of gratitude to him.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. CURTIS. Considerable stress is placed upon the removal of the head man in these various agencies. When the seat gets hot, the Administrator of the O. P. A. resigns and they change one man. Does that do any good as far as removing this reform group and changing the administration of these laws to make them more reasonable is concerned?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I do not think it does any good, because the man who does remove himself from the scene still directs it, because his remaining associates are of a similar philosophy and they continue to run the show.

Mr. CURTIS. There is a superorganization within?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. That is right.

To take care of our obligations to the men in the armed forces and our allies, and to avoid famine in this country, we must have a decided change in the food policies of the administration. Experienced men must be placed in charge of manpower and equipment problems for maximum food production.

Due to lack of coordination and friction between Federal agencies over the manpower problem, President Roosevelt is the only official who can straighten out the mess in food production. I call upon him to do so at once before it is too late. The farmers will cooperate in every possible way, but they must have the tools and equipment, as well as manpower, with which to secure results. They want to win the war and will work around the clock to do so without strikes or squabbling. I agree with the farmers that a 40-hour workweek will never win this war in any type of production.

In conclusion, let me again urge that it is time for the President to provide a coordinated and effective system of manpower and equipment necessary for food production. All bottlenecks must be removed before it is too late. Remember what Napoleon said: "An army travels on its stomach." It is up to us to provide the food to "Win the war and write the peace."

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, and to include certain statements and excerpts.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include several letters.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include an article entitled "An Open Letter to the Members of the Seventy-eighth Congress" printed in the Farm Journal of January 1943.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 33 minutes p. m.) the House, under the order heretofore adopted, adjourned until Thursday, January 14, 1943, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

50. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting supplemental estimates of appropriations for the Department of Commerce for the fiscal year 1943, amounting to $181,000 (H. Doc. No. 41); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

51. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a deficiency estimate of appropriation for the fiscal year 1942, amounting to $15,000, for the judiciary (H. Doc. No. 42); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

52. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the Veterans' Administration for the fiscal year 1943, amounting to $165,000 (H. Doc. No. 43); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

53. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the national defense activities of the Federal Communications Commission, amounting to $140,500, for the fiscal year 1943, as well as a proposed provision relating thereto, said proposed provision involving an appropriation for the Navy Department (H. Doc. No. 44); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

54. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting supplemental estimates of appropriations for the Department of State for the fiscal year 1943, amounting to $7,433,405 (H. Doc. No. 45); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

55. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the fiscal year 1943, in the amount of $40,000,000, for the Federal Works Agency (H. Doc. No. 46); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

56. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting supplemental estimates of appropriations for the District of Columbia for the fiscal year 1943, amounting to $8,320, together with a draft of a proposed provision pertaining to an existing appropriation (H. Doc. No. 47); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

57. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the Federal Security Agency for the fiscal year 1941, amounting to $652.91 (H. Doc. No. 48); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

58. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the fiscal year 1943 for the United States Maritime Commission in the amount of $4,000,000,000 cash and $5,250,000,000 contract authorization, toward which authorization $3,076,280,455 cash is provided in the estimate (H. Doc. No. 49); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BURDICK:

H. R. 1104. A bill providing for the removal of local superintendents; and providing for the manner of calling elections; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. BROOKS:

H. R. 1105. A bill to establish a Board of Appeals and Reviews in the Army for hearing and passing upon petitions for correction of records of persons discharged under other than honorable conditions; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. FORD:

H. R. 1106 (By request). A bill to authorize the payment of additional compensation to special assistants to the Attorney General in the case of United States against Doheny executors; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HOBBS:

H. R. 1107. A bill to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HARNESS of Indiana:

H. R. 1108. A bill providing for the issuance of a certificate of citizenship to any person claiming to be a citizen of the United States at birth in whose case no official record of birth is available; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. KILDAY:

H. R. 1109. A bill to provide for the establishment and maintenance of a national cemetery in every State; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. IZAC:

H. R. 1110. A bill to establish boards of appeals and reviews in the Navy and Marine Corps for hearing and passing upon petitions for correction of records of persons discharged under other than honorable conditions; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. PETERSON of Florida:

H. R. 1111. A bill to provide for increasing or decreasing the compensation or pension payments, payable to veterans of all wars, campaigns, and expeditions, or of peacetime service, and to their dependents, under laws administered by the Veterans' Administration, by 10 percent for every 10 percent increase or decrease in the cost of living above the basic cost of living during the first 6 months of 1940, as computed each 6 months, provided that such compensation and pension payments shall not be reduced below the basic amounts provided for under such laws, and for other purposes; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

By Mr. LECOMPTE:

H. R. 1112. A bill to transfer the functions of the board of directors of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation to the Administrator of the Federal Housing Administration; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. MILLS:

H. R. 1113. A bill to provide that interests in real property, acquired on behalf of the United States for war purposes, shall be acquired by lease except when the use of such method would impede the war effort; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MOTT:

H. R. 1114. A bill to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Columbia River at or near Astoria, Clatsop County, Oreg., and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. NICHOLS:

H. R. 1115. A bill to amend the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, as amended, to further regulate the operation and navigation of aircraft using the navigable air space overlying the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. O'BRIEN of Michigan:

H. R. 1116. A bill authorizing the printing, with illustrations, of the proceedings of the national encampments of various veterans' organizations in the United States as separate House documents; to the Committee on Printing.

By Mr. PETERSON of Florida:

H. R. 1117. A bill to provide for the recognition of the services of the civilian officials and employees, citizens of the United States, engaged in and about the construction of the Panama Canal; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

H. R. 1118. A bill to provide that inability of the individual veteran to follow any substantially gainful occupation resulting from service-connected disability shall be deemed to be permanent total disability; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

By Mr. PETERSON of Georgia:

H R. 1119. A bill to amend Public Law No. 257, Seventy-sixth Congress, approved August 4, 1939, so as to provide pensions to peacetime veterans of the Regular Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard suffering from arrested tuberculosis contracted while in the service; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PETERSON of Florida:

H. R. 1120. A bill to so amend the World War Veterans' Act, 1924, as amended, as to eliminate all statutes of limitations on automatic, yearly renewable term, or United States Government life (converted) insurance policies; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

By Mr. RANKIN:

H. R. 1121 (by request). A bill to provide that the rates of compensation or pension to veterans and dependents of deceased veterans under laws and veterans regulations administered by the Veterans' Administration shall be increased by 15 percent, and for other purposes; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

By Mr. SHAFER:

H. R. 1122. A bill to extend pension benefits under the Railroad Retirement Act of 1937 to certain employees for services rendered outside the United States and to increase the amount of pension payable to pensioners under such act; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

H. R. 1123. A bill to provide that the Railroad Retirement Board may award disability annuities to totally and permanently disabled individuals who have completed a period of service within a reasonable time of 30 years' service; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. WELCH:

H. R. 1124. A bill to provide for the recognition of the services of the civilian officials and employees, citizens of the United States, engaged in and about the construction of the Panama Canal; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. SABATH:

H. R. 1125. A bill to amend the Budget and Accounting Act with reference to transfer of property; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

By Mr. McGREGOR:

H. J. Res. 48. Joint resolution to relieve motorists of unnecessary governmental interference by abolishing compulsory tire registration and inspection as a condition of the use of gasoline, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. DICKSTEIN:

H. J. Res. 49. Joint resolution to declare certain papers, pamphlets, books, pictures, and writings nonmailable, to provide a penalty for mailing same, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. SHAFER:

H. J. Res. 50. Joint resolution to repeal section 3716 of the Revised Statutes, as amended; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

H. Con. Res. 6. Concurrent resolution recommending that any parties or organizations advocating overthrow of the United States Government be prohibited from entering candidates in any State or National election; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SENATE

THURSDAY, JANUARY 14, 1943

The Chaplain, Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., offered the following prayer:

God of all grace and glory, so teach us to number our days that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom. In a confused day, keep our minds clear and clean and uncluttered by prejudice. In a darkened day, give us the sight and insight of the pure in heart, that we may see God and the godlike everywhere. In a clamorous day, filled with angry accents of hate, give us ears to hear the voices that speak of justice and freedom and world brotherhood. In a mad and sad day, grant us sanity of mind and spirit and a glad hope which sees a shining ray far down the future's broadening way.

"Lord, in this hour of tumult,
Lord, in this night of fears,
Keep open, O keep open
Our eyes, our hearts, our ears.

Not blindly nor in hatred,
Lord, let us do our part.
Keep open, O keep open, dear Lord
Our eyes, our mind, our heart."

Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Monday, January 11, 1943, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

NOTICE OF HEARING ON NOMINATION OF W. B. RUTLEDGE TO BE ASSOCIATE JUSTICE, SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, on behalf of the Committee on the Judiciary, and in accordance with the rules of that committee, I desire to give notice that a public hearing of the committee will be held on the morning of January 22 at 10:30 o'clock a. m., in the office of the committee, upon the nomination of Wiley Blount Rutledge, of Iowa, to be an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. Any persons who may be interested in the matter may make representations to the committee at that time.

THE SULLIVAN BOYS OF THE U. S. S. "JUNEAU"

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, the loss of any American serviceman in this war is a heavy loss to the Nation and particularly a bitter sorrow to his family, and, of course, is worthy of a place in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD by reference, but such a procedure would be impracticable. Within the last few days the Navy Department has made public a report which for poignancy and stark tragedy has seldom been equaled. Five brothers of a family living in Waterloo, Iowa, were serving together on the light cruiser Juneau which was sunk. These brothers had entered the Navy in a spirit of resentment over the loss of a boyhood pal who was killed in the attack on Pearl Harbor. They all enlisted and asked to serve together, and were serving on the Juneau when she was sunk. They are all listed as missing in action. The Navy Department has stated that in all the history of the Navy there is no record of such a tragedy happening to any family. In view of the unusual circumstances, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point in connection with my remarks a letter received by me from the Chief of Naval Personnel.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JANUARY 12, 1943.

Hon. G. M. GILLETTE,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR GILLETTE: Pursuant to my conversation with you this morning with reference to the Sullivan boys who are reported missing following the loss of the U. S. S. Juneau as result of enemy action on 13 November 1942, I am furnishing you a few of the details.

These boys, Francis Henry, coxswain; Jcseph Eugene, seaman second class; George Thomas, gunner's mate second class, Madison Abel, seaman second class; and Albert Leo, seaman second class, are the sons of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas F. Sullivan, of 98 Adams Street, Waterloo, Iowa. Only one, Albert Leo Sullivan, is recorded as having been married, and his wife, Katherine Mary Sullivan, resides at 2228 Hawthorne Street, Waterloo, Iowa. All five sons enlisted in the Navy on 3 January 1942 at Des Moines, Iowa.

When the loss of the U. S. S. Juneau was reported the Bureau contacted Lt. Comdr. Truman Jones, the officer in charge, Naval Recruiting Station, Des Moines, Iowa. He was instructed to proceed to Waterloo, Iowa, to convey to the parents, Mr. and Mrs. Sullivan, and to Mrs. Albert Leo Sullivan, the news as to the fate of the Sullivan boys, which mission has been accomplished. A confirming telegram has been sent to the parents and the wife by this Bureau.

* * * * *

Sincerely yours,

RANDALL JACOBS,
Rear Admiral, United States Navy,
The Chief of Naval Personnel.

A. C. JACOBS,
Lieut. Commander, U. S. N. R.,
The Head of the Casualties and
Allotments Section, by direction.

A letter from the Archivist of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, lists of papers and documents on the files of the Departments of the Treasury, Navy, and Agriculture (15); Federal Security Agency, and The National Archives which are not needed in the conduct of business and have no permanent value or historical interest, and requesting action looking to their disposition (with accompanying papers); to a Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Papers in the Executive Departments.

The VICE PRESIDENT appointed Mr. BARKLEY and Mr. BREWSTER members of the committee on the part of the Senate.

PETITIONS

Petitions, etc., were presented, and referred as indicated:

By Mr. WALSH:

A petition of sundry citizens, instructors, and employees of Wentworth Institute, of Boston, Mass., praying for the prompt enactment of the Ruml pay-as-you-go income-tax plan; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. STEWART:

A joint resolution of the House of Representatives of the State of Tennessee; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

"Whereas the President of the United States, his Cabinet, military aides, and the Congress have worked untiringly and unselfishly in giving their leadership for the prosecution of the war; and

"Whereas considering the magnitude of their task, we feel that they have led us in making most excellent progress toward saving our Nation and the world from tyranny and slavery: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Tennessee (the Senate concurring), That we hereby express our sincere appreciation and gratitude to the President, his Cabinet, and other aides, and the Congress for their invaluable and sacrificial services which they have rendered to the Nation since our country has been at war; and be it further

"Resolved, That this body most heartily endorse the general idea of a 'world congress' to keep the peace, when, through God's help, we shall have attained it, so that our posterity may be saved from the constant recurrence of war, and the dire threat of the annihilation of our civilization; and be it further

"Resolved, That this general assembly assure said leaders of the Nation that it is most anxious to cooperate in any way possible toward hastening the day of victory; and be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to President Roosevelt, Secretary of State Hull, and to each Member of Congress from Tennessee, and that it be spread upon the journal of the house and senate."

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized, during the Seventy-eighth Congress, to send for persons, books, and papers; to administer oaths; and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words, to report such hearings as may be had on any subject before said committee, the expense thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during any session or recess of the Senate.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS

Mr. MALONEY submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 54), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized, during the Seventy-eighth Congress, to send for persons, books, and papers; to administer oaths; and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words, to report such hearings as may be had on any subject referred to said committee, the total expenses pursuant to this resolution (which shall not exceed $5,000) to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during any session or recess of the Senate.

HEARINGS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON CLAIMS

Mr. ELLENDER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 55), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Claims, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized, during the Seventy-eighth Congress, to send for persons, books, and papers; to administer oaths; and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words, to report such hearings as may be had on any subject referred to said committee, the total expenses pursuant to this resolution (which shall not exceed $5,000) to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during any session or recess of the Senate.

INVESTIGATION OF MATTERS WITHIN JURISDICTION OF THE COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE COMMERCE

Mr. WHEELER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 58), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Interstate Commerce, or any subcommittee thereof, hereby is authorized to sit during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Seventy-eighth Congress at such times and places as it may deem advisable, to make investigations into all matters within its jurisdiction, and to compile and prepare statistics and documents relating thereto as directed from time to time by the Senate and as may be necessary, and to report in due course to the Senate the result thereof; to send for persons, books, and papers; to administer oaths, and to employ such expert stenographic, clerical, and other assistance as may be necessary; and all the expenses incurred in pursuance hereof shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

DEVELOPMENT AND CONSTRUCTION OF CIVIL AIRCRAFT AND ITS USE IN WORLD AIR COMMERCE

Mr. McCARRAN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 59), which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Whereas it is imperative that the United States maintain its proper sphere in world air commerce during the immediate post-war period of development; and

Whereas immediately following the end of World War No. 1 it became necessary to readjust aircraft production to civil needs of the United States; and

Whereas immediately following the end of the present war it will be necessary to establish a civil aviation program for the United States for both domestic and foreign air commerce; and

Whereas the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938 specifically provides for the encouragement and development of an air-transportation system properly adapted to the present and future needs of the foreign and domestic commerce of the United States, of the Postal Service, and of the national defense; and

Whereas the time to determine international air rights for civil air transport to establish a charter for freedom of the air is during peace treaty negotiations; and

Whereas it is desirable and necessary to accumulate and compile adequate data prior to such peace treaty negotiations; and

Whereas such data have been heretofore accumulated by various and sundry interdepartmental committees: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce, or any subcommittee thereof authorized by the chairman of such committee, is authorized and directed to make a full and complete investigation with respect to (1) the feasibility of adapting current types of aircraft used in the war effort to use in civil-air transport; (2) the feasibility of incorporating in the construction of civil aircraft such features as will make them readily adaptable for immediate conversion and use for war purposes; (3) the feasibility of using world air transport as an international air police force to enforce peace terms; (4) the program of training and providing a reserve of skilled aircraft personnel, including ground crews and operations personnel for the immediate mobilization of civil air forces to adequately meet war emergencies, as well as preliminary training of personnel to be directly available to the War and Navy Departments in a war emergency; (5) the provision for world-wide weather observation facilities for forecasting weather over all civil airways, both domestic and foreign; (6) the provision for adequate landing and refueling facilities for world air commerce; (7) the planning, development and construction of aircraft which will assure to the United States at all times its proper sphere in world air commerce; (8) the coordination of civil air transport with other means of transportation; and (9) any other matters which such committee or subcommittee may deem it necessary to investigate for the purpose of obtaining adequate information to enable it to make recommendations for the supremacy of the United States in world air commerce. The committee shall report to the Senate, from time to time, the results of its investigation, together with its recommendations.

For the purpose of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Seventy-eighth and succeeding Congresses, to employ such clerical and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such correspondence, books, papers, documents, and other records, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures, as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $50,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. HILL. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Aiken | Green | Overton |
| Andrews | Guffey | Pepper |
| Austin | Hatch | Reed |
| Barbour | Hawkes | Revercomb |
| Barkley | Hayden | Robertson |
| Bilbo | Hill | Russell |
| Bone | Holman | Scrugham |
| Brewster | Johnson, Colo. | Shipstead |
| Bridges | Lodge | Stewart |
| Burton | Lucas | Taft |
| Butler | McCarran | Thomas, Idaho |
| Capper | McClellan | Tobey |
| Chandler | McFarland | Truman |
| Chavez | McKellar | Tunnell |
| Clark, Idaho | McNary | Vandenberg |
| Connally | Maloney | Van Nuys |

| Eastland | Moore | Wherry |
| Ellender | Murdock | White |
| Ferguson | Murray | Wiley |
| George | Nye | Willis |
| Gerry | O'Daniel | |
| Gillette | O'Mahoney | |

Mr. McNARY. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. BALL] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BUSHFIELD] is absent because of illness in his family.

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. BROOKS], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BUCK], the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GURNEY], and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER] are necessarily absent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

ELECTION OF PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, before the morning business is concluded, I wish to offer a privileged resolution with reference to the organization of the Senate. I send it forward, and ask for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the resolution.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 47), as follows:

Resolved, That Hon. CARTER GLASS, a Senator from the State of Virginia, be, and he is hereby, elected President of the Senate pro tempore, to hold office during the pleasure of the Senate, in accordance with the resolution of the Senate adopted on the 12th day of March 1890 on the subject.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, in accordance with the unanimous action of the Republican conference held a few days ago, I am pleased and privileged to suggest the name and to nominate the distinguished senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] for the position of President pro tempore. I therefore move to strike out the name of CARTER GLASS and to insert the name of ARTHUR H. VANDENBERG.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. McNARY. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. VANDENBERG (when his name was called). Mr. President, on this important but not entirely doubtful vote I am paired with the distinguished senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. Not knowing how either of us ought to vote, I withhold my vote. [Laughter.]

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BRIDGES (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. BROOKS], who would, if present, vote "yea," and allow my vote to stand. I understand that, if present and voting, the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] would vote "nay."

Mr. HILL. I announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] is absent from the Senate because of illness.

I also announce that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] and the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY] are absent because of illness. I am advised that if present and voting, these two Senators would vote "nay."

The Senators from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY and Mr. REYNOLDS], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE], and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] are necessarily absent. I am advised that if present and voting, these Senators would vote "nay."

The Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], who, if present, would vote "nay," is detained in one of the Government departments. He is paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. BALL], who, I am advised, if present, would vote "yea."

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], who, if present, would vote "nay," is necessarily absent. He is paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BUCK], who, I am advised, if present, would vote "yea."

The Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY], who, if present, would vote "nay," is paired with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BUSHFIELD], who, I am advised, if present, would vote "yea."

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], who would vote "nay," is necessarily absent. He is paired with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER], who, I am advised, would vote "yea."

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], who would vote "nay," is necessarily absent. He is paired with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GURNEY], who, I am advised, if present, would vote "yea."

The Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] are detained in Government departments. I am advised that if present and voting they would vote "nay."

Mr. McNARY. I announce the following pairs on this question:

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. BUCK], who would vote "yea," with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], who would vote "nay";

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BUSHFIELD], who would vote "yea," with the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY], who would vote "nay";

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GURNEY], who would vote "yea," with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], who would vote "nay";

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER], who would vote "yea," with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], who would vote "nay"; and

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. BALL], who would vote "yea," with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], who would vote "nay."

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. BALL] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BUSHFIELD] is absent because of illness in his family.

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. BROOKS], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BUCK], the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GURNEY], and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER] are necessarily absent.

The result was announced—yeas 29, nays 43, as follows:

YEAS—29

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Aiken | Ferguson | Robertson |
| Austin | Hawkes | Shipstead |
| Barbour | Holman | Taft |
| Brewster | Lodge | Thomas, Idaho |
| Bridges | McNary | Tobey |
| Burton | Millikin | Wherry |
| Butler | Moore | White |
| Capper | Nye | Wiley |
| Danaher | Reed | Willis |
| Davis | Revercomb | |

NAYS—43

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Andrews | Chavez | Ellender |
| Barkley | Clark, Idaho | George |
| Bilbo | Connally | Gerry |
| Bone | Downey | Gillette |
| Chandler | Eastland | Green |
| Guffey | Maloney | Scrugham |
| Hatch | Maybank | Stewart |
| Hayden | Mead | Truman |
| Hill | Murdock | Tunnell |
| Johnson, Colo. | Murray | Van Nuys |
| Lucas | O'Daniel | Wagner |
| McCarran | O'Mahoney | Wallgren |
| McClellan | Overton | Walsh |
| McFarland | Pepper | |
| McKellar | Russell | |

NOT VOTING—23

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Bailey | Clark, Mo. | Reynolds |
| Ball | Glass | Smith |
| Bankhead | Gurney | Thomas, Okla. |
| Brooks | Johnson, Calif. | Thomas, Utah |
| Buck | Kilgore | Tydings |
| Bushfield | La Follette | Vandenberg |
| Byrd | Langer | Wheeler |
| Caraway | Radcliffe | |

So Mr. McNARY's amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question recurs on agreeing to the resolution offered by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY].

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, on behalf of the Republican Members of the Senate I second the nomination of the distinguished Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] to be President pro tempore of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution is agreed to.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish to express not only my own appreciation and the appreciation of the Democratic side of the Senate, but, I am sure, the appreciation of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], of the very generous action by the Senator from Oregon.

ELECTION OF SECRETARY OF THE SENATE

Mr. BARKLEY submitted a resolution (S. Res. 48), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That Edwin A. Halsey, of Virginia, be, and he is hereby, elected Secretary of the Senate.

ELECTION OF SECRETARY FOR THE MAJORITY

Mr. BARKLEY submitted a resolution (S. Res. 49), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That Leslie L. Biffle, of Arkansas, be, and he is hereby, elected secretary for the majority of the Senate.

ELECTION OF SECRETARY FOR THE MINORITY

Mr. McNARY submitted a resolution (S. Res. 50), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That Carl A. Loeffler, of Pennsylvania, be, and he is hereby, elected secretary for the minority of the Senate.

ELECTION OF CHAPLAIN OF THE SENATE

Mr. BARKLEY submitted a resolution (S. Res. 51), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That Dr. Frederick Brown Harris, of Washington, D. C., be, and he is hereby, elected Chaplain of the Senate.

SENATOR FROM IOWA—ADMINISTRATION OF OATH

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the junior Senator-elect from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] is present, and I ask that he be permitted to take the oath at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the Senator-elect will present himself at the desk, the oath of office will be administered.

Mr. WILSON, escorted by Mr. GILLETTE, advanced to the Vice President's desk, and the oath prescribed by law was administered to him by the Vice President.

STANDING COMMITTEES OF THE SENATE

Mr. BARKLEY. I send to the desk a Senate resolution, and ask for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 52), as follows:

Resolved, That paragraph 1 of rule XXV of the Standing Rules of the Senate be, and it is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"1. The following standing committees shall be appointed at the commencement of each Congress, with leave to report by bill or otherwise:

"Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to consist of 20 Senators.

"Committee on Appropriations, to consist of 25 Senators.

"Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to consist of eight Senators, to which shall be referred all resolutions directing the payment of money out of the contingent fund of the Senate or creating a charge upon the same: Provided, That any such resolution relating to substantive matter within the jurisdiction of any other standing committee of the Senate shall be first referred to such committee.

"Committee on Banking and Currency, to consist of 20 Senators.

"Committee on Manufactures, to consist of 13 Senators.

"Committee on Military Affairs, to consist of 18 Senators.

"Committee on Mines and Mining, to consist of 13 Senators.

"Committee on Naval Affairs, to consist of 18 Senators.

"Committee on Patents, to consist of eight Senators.

"Committee on Pensions, to consist of 11 Senators.

"Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, to consist of 19 Senators.

"Committee on Printing, to consist of eight Senators, which shall have power to act jointly with the same committee of the House of Representatives.

"Committee on Privileges and Elections, to consist of 17 Senators.

"Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to consist of 14 Senators, which shall have power to act jointly with the same committee of the House of Representatives.

"Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to consist of 15 Senators.

"Committee on Rules, to consist of 13 Senators.

"Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs, to consist of 17 Senators."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution is agreed to.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in accordance with the resolution which has just been adopted, I move that the Members whose names I send to the desk representing the majority be assigned to the committees set out in the list of committees contained in the resolution. I make the motion by order of the Democratic steering committee. I understand the minority leader, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY], wishes to present a list of the minority Members to be represented on the committees.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, as chairman of the Republican conference, I submit a report containing the list of minority Members to be placed on the Senate committees, and ask that like consideration be given these Senators as members of the committees as is given to the Senators contained in the list submitted on behalf of the majority.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the lists of committee assignments on behalf of the majority and the minority, and, without objection, they will be considered together.

The Chief Clerk read the majority and minority assignments, which, in the form of an order, were agreed to, as follows:

By Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, from the Committee on Indian Affairs:

S. Res. 17. Resolution further continuing the authority for a general survey of the condition of Indians in the United States; without amendment (Rept. No. 11), and, under the rule, the resolution was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS

As in executive session,

Mr. CHANDLER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported favorably the nominations of several officers for temporary appointment as general officers in the Army of the United States, under the provisions of law.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS

Mr. LUCAS, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate Resolution 54, submitted today by Mr. MALONEY, reported it without amendment and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized, during the Seventy-eighth Congress, to send for persons, books, and papers; to administer oaths; and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words, to report such hearings as may be had on any subject referred to said committee, the total expenses pursuant to this resolution (which shall not exceed $5,000) to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during any session or recess of the Senate.

HEARINGS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON CLAIMS

Mr. LUCAS, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate Resolution 55, submitted today by Mr. ELLENDER, reported it without amendment and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Claims or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized, during the Seventy-eighth Congress, to send for persons, books, and papers; to administer oaths; and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words, to report such hearings as may be had on any subject referred to said committee, the total expenses pursuant to this resolution (which shall not exceed $5,000) to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during any session or recess of the Senate.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON TERRITORIES AND INSULAR AFFAIRS

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report favorably, with amendments, Senate Resolution 8, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

The amendments were, on page 1, line 7, before the word "said", to strike out "before" and insert "referred to"; in line 8, after the word "committee", to insert a comma; and in the same line, before the word "to", to strike out "expenses thereof" and insert "total expenses pursuant to this resolution (which shall not exceed $5,000)"; so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and hereby is, authorized during the Seventy-eighth Congress to send for persons, books, and papers; to administer oaths; and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be referred to said committee, the total expenses pursuant to this resolution (which shall not exceed $5,000) to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during any session or recess of the Senate.

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON PATENTS

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report favorably, with amendments, Senate Resolution 44 and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I should like to know if all the resolutions provide for the revival of old hearings, or whether any new hearings are contemplated by the resolutions.

Mr. LUCAS. Let me say to the able leader of the minority that all the resolutions deal with the standing committees of the Senate, and the amendments offered to each are the same. The amendments deal primarily with the limitation of $5,000 on money which can be expended by each committee. Heretofore the resolutions which have been presented have provided no limitation of funds, but under the rules it is very plain and certain that limitations should be placed, and that is what the amendments provide. No resolutions as to any special committees of any kind are being taken up today.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

The amendments were, on page 1, line 7, before the word "said", to strike out "before" and insert "referred to"; and in the same line, after the word "the"; to strike out "expenses thereof", and insert "total expenses pursuant to this resolution (which shall not exceed $5,000)", so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Patents, or any subcommittee thereof be, and is hereby, authorized during the Seventy-eighth Congress to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be referred to said committee, the total expenses pursuant to this resolution (which shall not exceed $5,000) to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during sessions or recesses of the Senate.

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report favorably, with amendments, Senate Resolution 45, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

The amendments were, on page 1, line 6, after the word "subject", to strike out "before" and insert "referred to"; and in line 7, before the word "to", to strike out "expense thereof" and insert "total expenses pursuant to this resolution (which shall not exceed $5,000)", so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized, during the Seventy-eighth Congress, to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per 100 words, to report such hearings as may be had on any subject referred to said committee, the total expenses pursuant to this resolution (which shall not exceed $5,000) to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during any session or recess of the Senate.

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE COMMERCE

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report favorably Senate Resolution 46, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 46) was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Interstate Commerce, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized, during the Seventy-eighth Congress, to send for persons, books, and papers; to administer oaths; and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per 100 words, to report such hearings as may be had on any subject referred to said committee, the total expenses pursuant to this resolution (which shall not exceed $5,000) to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during any session or recess of the Senate.

PRODUCTION OF GOLD AND SILVER—REFERENCE OF SENATE RESOLUTION

The VICE PRESIDENT. The routine morning business is concluded. Under Rule VIII, the call of the calendar is in order, and the clerk will state the measure on the calendar.

The CHIEF CLERK. A resolution (S. Res. 20) to authorize the continuation of the Special Committee on the Production of Gold and Silver.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I think the resolution should go to the Committee on Banking and Currency, because under the rule all resolutions for investigations that involve expenditures must go to a standing committee, and, in addition to that, a special committee cannot, I think, under the rule, bring in a resolution continuing itself and authorizing further expenditures by it. Under the rule all such resolutions must go to the standing committee concerned, and I am sure that this one was referred to the special committee by oversight.

Therefore, I hope that the resolution may be sent to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and I have no doubt that it will promptly report. However, if one special committee could act on a resolution continuing itself, others could do likewise, and that would be in violation of the rule which has been established. I hope that the course I have suggested will be taken.

Mr. McCARRAN. Let me say that I am interested in the resolution, as the majority leader knows.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. McCARRAN. I think I may safely state that when the original resolution was adopted in the last days of the last session it was understood that it would be readopted and put in force again.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is correct.

Mr. McCARRAN. The majority leader, the chairman of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, and I had that understanding.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is correct.

Mr. McCARRAN. If the resolution goes to the Committee on Banking and Currency—and I think the majority leader is entirely correct in his attitude on that point—I hope that the resolution may be reported promptly to the Senate so that certain work which has been started may proceed.

Mr. BARKLEY. I appreciate that, and the Senator is correct about the understanding. The same understanding was had about other committees in order that we might clear the slate of any deadwood and reestablish committees which needed to be continued and were really active. I appreciate the Senator's attitude on the point I have made, and I ask that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

JOINT COMMITTEE ON WAR PROBLEMS

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there may be printed at this point in the RECORD a letter, written by T. Harry Williams, appearing in the New York Times of January 10. The letter refers to a proposal to establish a joint committee of Congress, and I am offering it for the RECORD because on October 22, 1942, and again on January 7, 1943, I submitted a concurrent resolution which would establish such a committee.

I also ask unanimous consent that immediately following the letter there be printed a copy of the aforementioned resolution which I offered, and thereafter a copy of an editorial appearing in the New York Times of January 10, and an editorial, referring to the same resolution, which appeared in the New York Herald Tribune.

There being no objection, the letter, resolution, and editorials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times of January 10, 1943]

PRECEDENT EXISTS FOR CONGRESSIONAL WAR COMMITTEE—BUT OUR EXPERIENCE WITH RADICAL REPUBLICAN GROUP IN WAR BETWEEN THE STATES WAS NOT A HAPPY ONE AND MAY SERVE AS A WARNING AT THIS TIME

(The writer of the following letter is assistant professor of history at Louisiana State University. He is the author of "Lincoln and the Radicals," published by the University of Wisconsin Press in 1941.)

To the EDITOR OF THE NEW YORK TIMES:

Congressional leaders who have recently advocated the establishment of a joint committee of Congress to sit down with the Executive and the military to formulate war policies and war legislation can find a precedent for their proposed organization in the Civil War. It is a precedent, however, that they might not care to advertise. The congressional agency of the Civil War was the Committee on the Conduct of the War—the most powerful body ever created by Congress in our wartime history. In general, its influence upon the conduct of the war was bad and its interference with the military machine had highly unfortunate results.

The committee was the brain child of the radical Republicans, that faction of the dominant party which determined to make the abolition of slavery and the destruction of the southern social system the great objective of the war. The radicals were sneeringly contemptuous of Abraham Lincoln's announced intention to conduct the war for the sole purpose of restoring the Union, and fiercely determined to sabotage his program. They wanted a remorseless and revolutionary war. They demanded that the important military commands be given to generals who believed in the radical war aims. They shouted for an all-out offensive that would crush the Confederacy.

OPPOSED TO LINCOLN

In 1861, at the beginning of the war, the radicals raged because the Lincoln administration was following a policy diametrically opposed to their own. The President, striving to unite the people in support of the war and to hold the border slave States in line, had proclaimed the restoration of the Union as the only war aim of the Government. He refused to touch the issue of emancipation.

In the Army the major and brigadier generalships were overwhelmingly held by men known as Democrats or conservative Republicans. The general in chief, George B. McClellan, was a Democrat, and so were his two most important subordinates, Buell and Halleck. The radicals believed that McClellan and other Democratic officers secretly sympathized with the southern cause and hoped that a resort to arms would be unnecessary.

Visions of McClellan in the role of Cromwell, purging Congress of Republican members and restoring the Union, and slavery, with the aid of southern bayonets, haunted the Radical mind. The Radicals ascribed the inactivity of the Federal armies in 1861 to the southern sympathies of the Democratic generals. Why didn't McClellan advance and sweep the Confederates into the Potomac? they cried. Why was he wasting all this time in drill and training and other West Point foolishness? Because he didn't want to hurt his friends?

STRONG FACTION

Before December 1861, the Radicals had manifested dissatisfaction with the administration and conduct of the war by sniping at Lincoln from the stump and the press. In that month they decided that some more adequate weapon of protest than mere "growling and showing of teeth" would be necessary to force Lincoln to adopt the Radical war aims.

The Radical faction in Congress was strong and aggressive; it did not have an absolute numerical control, but it was powerful enough to dominate Congress on most issues. The Radical leaders resolved to channel or institutionalize their opposition to the administration's war program in the creation of some congressional agency to represent the legislative branch in the formulation of war policies. Such an agency could delve into the secrets of military administration, supply the faction with needed information for the enactment of military legislation, and act as a liaison body between Congress and the Executive and the military.

The obvious device was a joint investigative committee, "to probe the sore spots to the bottom," as one Radical Senator grimly exclaimed. So in the first part of December the Radical bosses piloted through Congress a measure establishing such a committee, composed of three members from the Senate and four from the House. This was the agency that came to be known as the Committee on the Conduct of the War. It was granted spacious powers to investigate "the general conduct of the war," past, present, and future, and to summon before its bar "persons and papers."

ASSERTED AUTHORITY

The speeches of the Radical sponsors of the committee showed that they intended it to exercise more important functions than the mere digging up of facts. Thus one Senator proclaimed that the committee's big job would be "to keep an anxious, watchful eye over all the executive agents who are carrying on the war at the direction of the people. * * * We are not under the command of the military of this country. They are under ours as a Congress."

The Committee on the Conduct of the War was an important experiment in the relations between the legislature and the executive, the civil and military authorities of a democracy at war. The guiding spirits of the committee were resolved that it should be more than an investigative agency. The chairman, Senator "Bluff Ben" Wade of Ohio, envisioned it as a representative of Congress whose function was to insure the legislative branch a voice in the conduct of the war and the determination of war policies. Congress, he asserted, expected the committee to obtain such facts as would be useful in determining the causes of military failure, "in order to apply any remedy that may be necessary."

STORMY SCENES

Whenever the inquisitors in the course of their inquiries decided that something was wrong with the conduct of the war, they asked for an interview with Lincoln and sometimes with the Cabinet. At these sometimes stormy meetings the committee would demand that the President remove some general suspected of treason or incompetency or that he order the armies to advance. If Lincoln demurred, the members threatened to stir up Congress and the people against him. When Lincoln felt strong enough, he defied the committee. At other times he yielded to its dictates.

Although not a single member possessed either military experience or education, the committee did not consider that this should preclude it from investigating Army affairs or rendering judgments on the capabilities of military men. The inquisitors, like most civilians of the sixties, felt a profound contempt for any claims that military science was a specialized, technical subject, mysterious to anyone not educated at West Point or Annapolis. Convinced that their opinions on questions of strategy and tactics deserved as much respect as those of any general, the members never hesitated to overrule the military men.

This was especially true when the committee attempted to impose its concepts of strategy upon commanding generals. The members possessed very positive ideas about how the war should be fought, and they continually urged their plans upon the generals and Lincoln. They believed that wars were won by fighting; their notion of strategy was perpetual attack. "In military movements delay is generally bad—indecision is almost always fatal," was the committee's maxim. The committee always censured officers who, before a battle, took precautionary measures to insure a safe retreat. Such measures, the members thought, indicated a lack of resolve and the will to win.

ARMY MEN ANNOYED

Most of the witnesses who testified before the committee were officers of the Army. Many of these men, products of West Point and the Regular Army, viewed the committee as a meddlesome civilian agency and objected to supplying it with information of a military nature. This was most marked when the committee, eager to find out the plans of generals like McClellan, tried to persuade witnesses to disclose what operations were proposed for the future. When the investigators failed to get this information from the commanding generals, they endeavored to secure it from subordinate officers. The Army, insisted Wade, had no right to withhold secrets from Congress. Most military men recoiled from such questions. Not only did the soldier deem it dangerous to reveal military secrets to a number of civilians but his training inhibited him from discussing the plans of his superior with other people, especially civilians.

The committee met much the same reaction when it asked officers to discuss and criticize the actions and decisions of other officers. It encouraged subordinates to speak freely about their superiors, to give opinions about battles they had not seen, and to say what they would have done had they been present on a certain field. To the members, seeking to ascertain the causes of Union defeats, it seemed perfectly natural to collect the opinions of all Army witnesses, regardless of rank. For a subordinate to criticize his superior was heresy to the military creed, and many officers refused to answer. There were always some officers, however, ambitious for place and angling for the committee's support, who were willing to give the inquisitors what they wanted. The net result was to sow seeds of dissension and faction among the officers which sprouted into sordid intrigues and seriously impaired the morale of the whole Army.

SECRET HEARINGS

Certain rules of procedure adopted by the committee and its incessant attempts to secure the removal or subordination of generals opposed to the radical war policies caused hostile critics to label it a court of star chamber or an inquisition conducting military trials. At its first meeting the committee decided that all hearings would be secret, and the members swore not to reveal any of the testimony. This was obviously a wise regulation for an agency that received vital military information. The committee, however, sometimes violated its own rule. The members surreptitiously furnished material drawn from witnesses to the radical press or announced the results of their findings in speeches in Congress.

The secret hearings gave the committee a sinister and unfair advantage when it was seeking the downfall of some general and summoned him before it to testify. He appeared alone, unrepresented by counsel. He was not permitted to examine the previous testimony, and hence could not know what charges against him the committee was framing. In fact, he might not even dream that the committee was after his military scalp, and innocently he would supply testimony that helped to bring about his own destruction.

The committee exercised a tremendous influence during the war. On several occasions it was largely instrumental in forcing Lincoln to order premature offensive movements. It took the lead in pushing radical legislation through Congress. It poisoned Lincoln's mind against McClellan and helped to bring about that general's eventual removal. On the eve of McClellan's most important campaign the committee persuaded Lincoln to withdraw 40,000 men from the Army on the false plea that the general had left Washington undefended. With his Army thus sabotaged, McClellan failed. The committee secured the removal of several other Democratic officers and the arrest of one, General Stone; it smeared in its reports the records of the generals whose disgrace it could not accomplish.

IN TUNE WITH TIMES

The committee was an experiment in civilian, Congressional control of the executive and the military in a democracy at war. In no other of our wars has Congress made such a successful attempt to dictate military operations and the personnel of the Army. The committee was a powerful agency because it was a product of the times, and the American public of the times expressed a contempt for scientific military education and a preference for amateurism in war.

Again, the committee reflected the popular spirit in its concepts of strategy and tactics—constant offensive movements and ceaseless fighting. The members were scornful of generals who spoke about the necessity of adequate training of troops, careful preparation, siege machinery, and proper precautionary measures in case of defeat. The guess might be hazarded that any similar congressional agency in this war would be animated by the same impatience for a quick, smashing victory.

The history of the committee provides some valuable lessons concerning the functions that an investigative body of Congress should exercise in wartime. The committee's influence was bad, because, in the first place, it assumed to impose its inexpert knowledge of military affairs upon trained experts in the art of war. The members were civilians. They vaguely grasped the broad concepts of strategy as related to the whole theater of war, but the important details of battlefield tactics and the problems of logistics they rarely understood.

SOME GOOD WORK

On the other hand, when the investigators turned their attention to such subjects as the production of war materials, where they could act with a degree of competence, they did worth-while and needed work.

The second fault of the committee was the violent partisan bias which characterized its every thought and action. Whether any congressional committee, composed of politicians, can divorce itself from politics is open to serious doubt. If it can and if it restricts its duties to matters where it can speak with authority, it will perform a valuable service. If it cannot meet these conditions, it had better not be born.

T. HARRY WILLIAMS.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 1

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there is hereby created a joint congressional committee to be known as the Joint Committee on War Problems (hereinafter referred to as the "joint committee"), and to be composed of six Members of the Senate to be selected by the Senate and six Members of the House of Representatives to be selected by the House of Representatives. Not more than three of the members of the joint committee selected by the Senate, and not more than three of the members of the joint committee selected by the House of Representatives, shall be from the same political party. The joint committee shall select a chairman from among its members. A vacancy in the membership of the joint committee shall not affect the power of the remaining members to execute the functions of the joint committee, and shall be filled in the same manner as the original selection.

SEC. 2. It shall be the duty of the joint committee to make a special study and investigation of the problems arising out of the war under existing and future acts of Congress; to confer with the President, and with the various departments and agencies of the Government, from time to time, with respect to such problems; to consult with other committees of both branches of the Congress, and to report to the Congress from time to time, together with such recommendations with respect to legislation as it deems advisable.

SEC. 3. For the purposes of this concurrent resolution, the joint committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Seventy-eighth and succeeding Congresses, to employ such clerical and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such correspondence, books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures, as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the joint committee, which shall not exceed $ , shall be paid one-half from the contingent fund of the Senate and one-half from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the joint committee.

CONGRESS IN WARTIME

We publish on this page today a letter from Prof. T. Harry Williams, on the Congressional Committee on the Conduct of the War which was formed in December 1861, shortly after the outbreak of the War between the States, and continued until June 1865. In view of the proposals in Congress for another joint committee on the conduct of the present war, Professor Williams' account should serve as a warning. Because the 1861 committee did so many things that it should not have done, and did them often in so partisan a spirit, it does not follow that no congressional committee with a similar purpose should be formed now. But if it is, it has much to learn from the errors of its predecessor.

Writing on the same subject in 1917, Prof. W. W. Pierson expressed the belief that in spite of its shortcomings the 1861 committee had "brought speed and energy into the conduct of the war; that they ferreted out abuses and put their fingers down heavily upon governmental inefficiency; and that they labored, for a time at least, to preserve a balance and effect a cooperation between the legislative and executive departments." Prof. Lindsay Rogers, similarly, has expressed the opinion that "the most valid objections to the committee were to its members and to their behavior, rather than to the device as such."

It is academic to ask at this point whether there ought to be congressional committees or the conduct of the present war. We already have several such committees—the Truman committee in the Senate, the Tolan committee in the House, the various standing committees on military and naval affairs, and so on. The present question is whether some of the committees should not be consolidated into a single joint committee. As Professor Williams concedes, in spite of the particular faults of the committee of 1861–65, if a congressional committee today can keep within its proper sphere and act without partisanship it can perform a valuable service.

It is not the function of Congress, or of any committees representing it, to conduct the war. But it is the function of Congress to see that the war is well conducted. For this function a properly organized single joint committee, dominated by a cooperative and genuinely patriotic spirit, could prove of the first importance.

THE WHITE HOUSE AND CAPITOL HILL

Senator MALONEY, of Connecticut, has announced that in the new Congress he will seek to revive a bill lost in the shuffle of the old, to provide for a bi-partisan congressional super committee which would consult with administration officials in advance of requests for legislation. Senator MALONEY'S plan calls for a 12-man committee composed of Members of both Houses, with Republicans and Democrats represented equally. He hopes that these men, by expressing the congressional view beforehand, will eliminate or diminish friction and controversy between the White House and Capitol Hill on war legislation.

The success of such a device depends, of course, upon the spirit in which it is operated. It might easily become a focus for increated resentment between the executive and legislative branches. But if both Congress and the administration accept it frankly as a method of promoting cooperation for the solution of the vital problems facing the Nation, it can have immense advantages in the conduct of the war and in preparations for the peace.

Many Congressmen have expressed fear lest wartime measures be converted into permanent peacetime instruments without congressional approval. Others have been displeased by the proliferation of administrative government under blanket grants of power—to say nothing of such open attempts by the Executive to circumvent the expressed will of Congress as the $25,000-a-year salary limit. A public temper which is critical of the administration, reflected in the election returns last November, adds to these specific grounds for suspicion, and with the close party balance in the new Congress could easily lead to a stalemate, blocking essential legislation and hampering the progress of the war.

Congressional investigations after the fact may help to correct errors or to inform public and congressional opinion as to the course of the administration. But they also lead to irritation, use up valuable time, and do not provide for constructive congressional participation in policy making. Only frequent and candid consultation between the President and congressional leaders can do that. Nor can the President select only leaders representing his own party for this purpose without running the danger of such revolt as cost Wilson his leadership and left the Nation without a fixed policy at a critical time. That tragedy must not be repeated, and it is certainly not too early to organize relations between the President and Congress in such a manner as to avoid it. Senator MALONEY'S plan merits careful consideration.

CONSTRUCTION OF FUEL-OIL PIPE LINES

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHANDLER in the chair). The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, because of the deep interest of our citizens and State and municipal officials along the Atlantic seaboard in the shortage of the supply of oil, renewed interest has been developed in the progress that is being made in the construction of oil pipe lines to meet future needs.

I request that there be inserted in the RECORD a memorandum from the Navy which indicates the progress in the construction of these pipe lines.

There being no objection, the memorandum was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

1. That the first section of the pipe line from Longview, Tex., to southern Illinois is practically completed—all the pipe is laid—but materials for some of the pumping units have not yet been received. He expects the line to be in operation by February 1. This will increase the eastern oil supply, as tank cars will have a shorter run, as many of them will run only as far west as Illinois instead of going to Texas.

2. The pipe is now being processed for the second section of the line; that is, from southern Illinois to the Philadelphia-New York area.

This project is going along satisfactorily, and this section should be in operation by next fall. The priorities on the materials for this section of the line are now satisfactory, and they hope to retain these priorities. This pipe line will be capable of delivering 300,000 barrels daily.

INTERIM REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE THE NATIONAL DEFENSE PROGRAM—BARGES (PT. 1 OF REPT. NO. 10)

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, at the request of the Special Committee to Investigate the National Defense Program, and at the instance of the chairman of that committee the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN], I submit a report on the barge program. It is referred to as an interim report on barges.

Mr. President, the shortage of petroleum products in the east coast region of the United States is primarily a shortage of transportation rather than a shortage of the products themselves. When this shortage became apparent it was immediately necessary to explore every means of increasing the facilities for transporting petroleum and petroleum products.

In the spring of 1942 this committee made an investigation to ascertain what progress had been made in converting existing dry cargo barges and building new wooden barges for the purpose of transporting petroleum and petroleum products. The committee found that there had been a great deal of discussion about barges but that no important action had been taken.

Shortly thereafter a committee appointed by the President—consisting of Secretary Harold Ickes, Department of Interior; Secretary Jesse Jones, Department of Commerce; Mr. Leon Henderson, Administrator, Office of Price Administration; Major General Reybold, Chief of Engineers, United States Army; Mr. Joseph B. Eastman, Office of Defense Transportation—recommended to the President that a specific program be adopted to obtain increased use of the intercoastal and intracoastal waterways for the movement of petroleum. The President's committee also recommended that existing bulk cargo steel barges be converted to make them suitable for transporting petroleum and urged that 500 wooden barges with a capacity of 6,000 barrels each, 100 wooden-hull tugboats of 600 horsepower each, and 20 steel-hull river towboats of 2,000 horsepower each should be constructed.

These facilities together with additional terminal facilities and a trans-Florida pipe line were expected to provide for the movement of 50,000 barrels of fuel oil per day from Texas to Illinois for transshipment to the east-coast region, 50,000 barrels of fuel oil per day from Texas to Florida for transshipment by rail to Norfolk and intermediate points, and 35,000 to 50,000 barrels per day of gasoline and other petroleum products from Texas to Florida for use in the south Atlantic seaboard area.

By the end of July the President approved the recommendations of his committee and the Corps of Engineers of the Army reported to the Office of Defense Plant Corporation that with the necessary priorities the program might be expected to be completed on or before April 1, 1943.

In August the program for the conversion of existing bulk cargo steel barges was reduced by one-half from 259 to 130 barges by the requirements committee of the War Production Board. The War Production Board also decided that the balance of the program for the construction of new wooden barges, towboats, and tugboats was to be held in abeyance.

So the report of the President's committee—an adequate report, a report which, in my judgment, should be followed to the letter—was not only reduced by one-half but was eventually entirely eliminated.

This action was taken because of the shortage of steel and on the report of the Bureau of Ships of the Navy Department that the most likely source of Diesel engines was the General Motors Corporation, all of the facilities of which would be required until the middle of April 1943 for essential Navy programs. The Diesel Engine Section of the War Production Board was not even consulted concerning availability of smaller Diesels.

In September the Office of Defense Transportation reported to the Defense Plant Corporation that steam engines and 250 horsepower Diesel engines could be made available for use in towboats and tugboats, and the Defense Plant Corporation and the Office of Defense Transportation joined in urging that the War Production Board reconsider the towboat program. In October the War Production Board concluded that the program should be resubmitted in the spring of 1943 on the theory that so much time had been lost that towboats could not be completed until February or March of 1943, when it would be too late to have any effect on the oil shortage during the winter of 1942 and 1943.

In November 1942 Donald M. Nelson, Chairman of the War Production Board, authorized a reexamination of the matter, when his attention was called to the suggestion that a gasoline engine built by the Chrysler Corporation known as the sea mule might be used as a possible substitute for Diesel power. A test of the sea mule has been ordered, but will not be completed for some weeks. The Diesel Engine Section of the War Production Board finally was consulted and reported that Diesels in the 1,000- to 2,000-horsepower class would not be available for the proposed program, but that there was no question of the availability of steam engines and boilers and small Diesel engines and power units for tugs and towboats. This report resulted in the resubmission of the barge program by the Defense Plant Corporation to the Requirements Committee of the War Production Board. At the time of resubmission the Office of Defense Transportation asserted that every available tank barge was in service and that the conversion program was not being held up by a lack of motive power but rather by the failure to convert the existing steel bulk cargo barges. The Office of Defense Transportation asserted that sufficient tugboats and towboats could be made available by transfers from existing nonessential uses and by the transfer of tugboats and towboats which could not be used in their normal operations during the winter months because of freezing conditions.

Up to December 31, 1942, contracts had been let by the Inland Waterways Corporation on behalf of the Defense Plant Corporation for the conversion of only 84 of the 259 steel bulk cargo barges. These contracts represent a total capacity of 1,005,000 barrels. Little progress had been made on the conversion program. Only 4 barges with a capacity of 15,000 barrels each had been converted as of December 31, 1942. The explanation for the lack of progress assigned by the Office of Defense Transportation was that the conversion program was being held up by financial and other restrictions imposed by the Defense Plant Corporation, which made it difficult to use available shipyard capacity.

Late in November, Mr. Donald Nelson asked Mr. Jesse Jones either to modify the contract restrictions or to proceed by letters of intent, and he asked Mr. Joseph B. Eastman to take drastic steps to increase the petroleum deliveries by barge. Mr. Nelson also asked Mr. Ferdinand Eberstadt, chairman of the requirements committee of the War Production Board, to take the barge-construction program personally in hand.

Mr. President, if this had been accomplished as it should have been, as required by the President's committee, it would not be found necessary to close schoolhouses and in some instances, perhaps, churches, as well as factories and industries in the northeastern section of the country.

Thereupon, after the matter had been referred to Mr. Eberstadt by Mr. Donald Nelson, the Program Adjustment Committee of the War Production Board considered a revised barge program substituting motive power which had been found to be available, but the Navy and Maritime Commission representatives suggested that even the revised program might interfere with Navy and Maritime Commission programs, and it was again held up. At a later meeting it developed that the Navy's opposition was on the theory that the barge program might conflict with its requirements for lumber and that the Maritime Commission's opposition was based on the theory that steel was more urgently needed for tankers and ore carriers. An examination of the lumber situation developed that sufficient quantities of yellow pine could be made available and an examination of the steel situation developed that although it was tight, it was not sufficiently critical to require the abandonment of a program as essential as the barge program. Mr. Eberstadt as chairman of the Requirements Committee approved the barge program and assigned it an AA-3 priority rating without dissent. The Requirements Committee further decided that where the necessary materials could not be obtained on such a priority rating, application could be made for a higher rating, and where the program was found to conflict with the Navy program the Navy could appeal for reconsideration.

On December 18, 1942, it was agreed by the departments concerned that the construction of the towboats should be pushed with all speed by the Inland Waterways Corporation so as to be ready upon completion of the barges. It was also agreed that contracts for the construction of tugs, wooden barges, and terminal facilities would be let by the Engineer Corps of the Army and financed by the Defense Plant Corporation. The Corps of Engineers estimated that it would require from 4 to 6 weeks of preliminary work such as negotiation, placing of orders, and delivery of material before the shipyards could get into actual production and that the entire program could be completed by the summer of 1943.

Mr. President, from the time the President called this committee together, and from the time the committee submitted what they assumed to be an adequate program, there were certain activities in the various bureaus, to an account of which we have listened, which had to do with the setting up of this program and providing it with material. The postponement reached until the first of the year, and I wish to read to the Senate at this time the conclusions arrived at by our committee:

CONCLUSIONS

The committee believes that there has been unnecessary delay and confusion in carrying out a program essential to the national welfare. The delay which occurred prior to the recommendations of the committee appointed by the President is most regrettable, but the delay which occurred after the matter had been studied by that committee and after its recommendations had been approved by the President is inexcusable.

The lengthy and frequent conferences which took place between the numerous agencies involved produced many arguments but few decisions.

The program recommended by the President's committee and approved by the President ought not to have been discarded on the Navy's suggestion that high-powered Diesels necessary for motive power could not be obtained without exploring whether existing tugboat and towboat power could be made available by a transfer from other uses and without exploring whether steam engines, gas engines, or smaller Diesel engines could be made available.

The following committees and agencies all had a hand in making decisions with respect to barges: The President's Committee to Investigate the Problem of Supplying Additional Means of Transportation to Satisfy Petroleum Requirements of the Eastern Seaboard, and a technical subcommittee thereof; the Defense Plant Corporation; the Army Engineer Corps; the Requirements Committee, War Production Board; Program Adjustment Committee, War Production Board; Diesel Engine Section, War Production Board; Office of Procurement and Matériel, Navy Department; Bureau of Ships, Navy Department; the Maritime Commission; and the Inland Waterways Corporation, Department of Commerce. The confusion resulting from this overlapping of authority and duplication of effort is revealed in the following discussion of facts—

Which I shall submit with the report—

There was simply too much talk and not enough action.

Valuable time has been lost. If the barge program had been carried out expeditiously, the shortages of both fuel oil and gasoline in district 1 (the east coast region), particularly the southern and western portions thereof, would have been much less severe. The committee recommends that no further delays be permitted to occur in this vital program.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I am glad to yield.

Mr. BREWSTER. Does not the Senator feel that the administrative ineptitude and confusion which have been so glaringly illustrated in the report which the Senator has submitted are calculated to undermine the confidence of the country generally in the efficiency with which the war effort is being carried on?

Mr. MEAD. With that statement, Mr. President, I cannot quite agree, for the reason that in the main the over-all production directly connected with the war effort has been little less than miraculous. But as it applies to carrying on essential programs, and the production of items directly connected with and yet perhaps removed from the actual scene of conflict, as well as essential civilian programs, it has not met with the same prompt response as has been the case with the direct program, such as the production of tanks, ships, planes, guns, and so forth.

The reason for that can be found in analyzing this report. The President recognized the situation and set up a committee. That committee realized the situation and adopted a program, and, insofar as that is concerned, there was no delay. But when the matter was referred to the War Production Board and to the very necessary subcommittees, one having to do with Diesel power, another having to do with materials, another having to do with priorities, there were of necessity conferences with the military and with the Maritime Commission, and it was the postponements in most cases ordered in connection with those military activities that caused a great deal of the delay. I presume the delay ensued because it was felt that the program would interfere first of all with the direct war effort, namely, the production of guns, tanks, and ships. But if the matter had been analyzed a little more deeply, if it had been investigated a little more thoroughly, ways and means could have been found for the completion of the greater portion of the program assigned by the President's committee to the various agencies for their consideration.

Mr. BREWSTER. Would the Senator agree that all our observations in the past 2 years have argued strongly toward the fixing of individual responsibility in these programs, as distinguished from that of committees?

Mr. MEAD. Perhaps in a number of instances that suggestion would apply appropriately, but, unfortunately, in setting up any over-all agency such as the War Production Board, we must of necessity break it down into sections, as the Senate breaks down its membership into committees, and the committees are broken down, again, into subcommittees. Each section must be consulted with reference to the authority delegated to it, just as we delegate authority to full committees and to subcommittees.

While there are at times suitable reasons why power should be given to an individual rather than to a committee, there is in the study of the program as it has been set up ample justification for the apparent need for conference, whereby several agencies handling one program must of necessity come together. I know of no method whereby we might take away from Mr. Eastman, the Director of Defense Transportation, all the transportation facilities that have anything to do with the transportation of petroleum, and yet it might be considered proper, if we were going to have a system whereby individual responsibility, and individual responsibility alone, should rule, that the Oil Coordinator have all that authority. So there must be a division.

Mr. BREWSTER. I am very much interested in the suggestions which have been made. I heard the distinguished mayor of New York, who, I think we all recognize, is a very good administrator, urge very strongly before the Maloney committee, that Mr. Ickes be given that very responsibility, and he said he saw no reason why Mr. Ickes should not control the tank cars which can be used for no other purpose, in view of orders which the Office of Defense Transportation has only very recently put into effect which are vital to the supply of oil to New York and to New England.

Mr. MEAD. I have no argument, because I am not making an argument for either the committee method or the administrator method, but the Senator can see that if the program which he now suggests were put into effect, then Mr. Eastman would have charge of the box cars on the railroads and Mr. Ickes would have charge of the tank cars on the railroads, and the Senator would by the method he suggests divide the responsibility with respect to the railroads. It is difficult to draw a line so there will be no overlapping of authority. Wherever it must be drawn, however, I agree thoroughly with the Senator's suggested principle that authority be lodged in the individual rather than in a committee or in a section of a given agency.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, it was not my intention in my first question to do anything other than raise the point of individual responsibility as distinguished from committee responsibility. I agree that we must have certain overlapping, but let us take the case of Mr. Eastman and Mr. Ickes. The Senator will agree that it is much wiser to place all the power we can in Mr. Ickes, and all the power we can in Mr. Eastman, rather than in a tribunal composed of half a dozen men who never can get together on their actions. With that general conclusion, I think the Senator from New York will agree?

Mr. MEAD. I agree with that; and then these two gentlemen in turn should report, as they do, and as they did in this case, to the President of the United States.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. BURTON. As I understood the Senator's statement of the report of the committee, the report places emphasis on the fact that the President's committee had reached a conclusion on the policy that a certain number of barges should be constructed?

Mr. MEAD. That is correct.

Mr. BURTON. Through the nine agencies the Senator named there has been inevitable delay, perhaps by reason of the number of agencies and the number of people involved. As a result the Senator is pointing out that at this time the greatest need in this country is the saving of time in the production of barges and war material. The investigating committee is devoting itself to speeding up these operations and eliminating confusion.

I notice that the Senator from New York stated at one point that the agencies had overlooked the fact that there was a committee on Diesel engines in the War Production Board, and that there was an absence of a report from that committee on Diesel engines. It is a question of eliminating the extra committees and agencies and individuals, and the need is for greater speed in the production of barges.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, I assume we can find an answer to some of the delays, principally the ones encountered in the War Production Board, in the fact that for the first time in all our history we were called upon to enter into a global conflict, and to build for that conflict an overwhelming volume of new equipment; that in every field of war production we were pioneering, and we were without knowledge as to how we could attain quotas. The Army, agreeing that we have the first line of defense well bolstered, would object when it came to the carrying on of programs which were not directly associated with the battle front; the Navy might step in and say, "The carrying on of such programs may interfere with our program"; and the Maritime Commission might do likewise. But today, after pioneering in this war effort for a year, we have established quotas, and we are able to make more accurate estimates, and now by a scientific division of material we may be able to allocate a certain quota of material for one activity, and realize that we will have a certain amount of the material left for another activity. In other words, as was proper, we were emphasizing the war effort, as it applied to the battlefields of the world, and at the same time we were groping for a new concept of the volume of goods necessary to conduct this all-out mechanized war with materials and equipment we never before heard of. So there probably has been some reason for the delay, but that reason will not be valid from now on.

Mr. BURTON. We say we have developed a way by which we can determine our quotas and our policies, and what we need now is action to put them into effect.

Mr. MEAD. That is quite right.

Mr. TRUMAN. Mr. President, I wish to compliment the very able Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD] for the excellent manner in which he has made his report to the Senate. It is the unanimous report of the Special Committee Investigating the National Defense Program.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, before the discussion is concluded, I wish to say that in our investigation, the magnificent contribution of the railroads to the transportation of petroleum products was brought to the committee's attention. Let me say a word of high commendation of the employees and the management of our railroads for the splendid response they have made in this emergency. I think the railroads throughout the United States are doing an excellent job in the handling of every commodity, they are doing a magnificent job. The emergency which confronts us at this time has made us realize how indispensable the railroads are.

Mr. TRUMAN. I thank the Senator from New York, and I agree with him entirely.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report submitted by the Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD] will be received and printed.

OIL FOR THE FIGHTERS OF AMERICA—ADDRESS BY SENATOR O'MAHONEY

Mr. TRUMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD an able radio address dealing with the oil situation, delivered by the distinguished Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY]. I wish to call attention to the fact that the subcommittee of the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, of which the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] was the chairman, went into the oil situation as it affects production, and made a recommendation that Mr. Ickes be placed in complete charge.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OIL FOR THE FIGHTERS OF AMERICA

The Washington Star has asked me to discuss the petroleum problem because a bill which I sponsored to stimulate the discovery of new sources of supply on lands belonging to the United States in the Far West was put through Congress in the closing hours of the Seventy-seventh session and is now on the President's desk for signature. This measure had the unanimous support of the Public Lands Committees of both the House and Senate and was actively urged in committee and on the floor by Congressman J. WILL ROBINSON of Utah, chairman of the House committee, Senator CARL A. HATCH, of New Mexico, chairman of the Senate committee, and by Senator ABE MURDOCK, of Utah, who had charge of the measure, in the closing day in the Senate.

The bill was needed because new supplies of oil are needed and because in the public land States, there still are possibilities of new discoveries, provided only that men are encouraged and permitted to search for new deposits. In his letter of November 10 to former Congressman William P. Cole, Jr., of Maryland, who for 9 years was head of the petroleum study of the House Committee on Interstate Commerce, President Roosevelt stated the simple truth when he said:

"The immediate discovery of additional sources of oil is imperative."

It is so imperative that unless new supplies are made available, we stand in grave danger of not having enough petroleum with which to fight the war. The present supplies are definitely not sufficient and we have not as yet taken adequate precautions to be prepared for the crisis that is now upon us. The fact that as a war measure, gasoline was last week denied to all except the most essential civilian uses in 17 Eastern States and the District of Columbia is proof enough of the desperate nature of the crisis. We have been trying to meet war needs by rationing civilian uses. We have been trying to meet the demands of the military forces by diverting supplies from the civilian economy and, until the passage of this bill, no substantial effort was made to bring in new reserves, but new reserves are what are most needed because we are confronted by military demands which are almost beyond imagination.

Let me say here, that no discussion of any problem associated with the war economy should omit acknowledgment of the perfectly remarkable job of mobilizing our resources which has been accomplished. The President and his aides have taken a country which was geared only to peace and in a short year have transformed it into a powerful military unit. They have accomplished wonders and to analyze some of the things that must yet be accomplished is not to be interpreted at all as withholding credit for what has been done.

The magnitude of the task we must perform grows as we contemplate it. Military estimates of materials needed expand steadily as the weeks pass. The Army and the Navy know now that they will need more oil than they dreamed of 6 months ago, because they have new instruments that burn it up.

UNITED NATIONS DEPEND ON OUR OIL

We now have more and larger airplanes in actual combat service than was deemed possible a year ago. Flying Fortresses which, early this year were almost unknown in the South Pacific theater of war, are now turning back every Jap attempt to retake Guadalcanal and are helping MacArthur to avenge Bataan. More than that, only last Monday we learned that American tanks have reached our forces now hammering at Buna Mission. The delivery of these planes and tanks to our men on that far distant front is in itself a most remarkable accomplishment for which our military and production command are deserving the highest praise. But these planes and tanks are burning up oil in an area which was scarcely within contemplation 6 or 8 months ago. And we are delivering this oil to the South Pacific. It comes from our supplies and it is being sent to a portion of the globe which is itself rich in petroleum, the supplies of which, however, have unfortunately fallen into the hands of the Japanese.

On February 2, 1942, more than 10 months ago, when I introduced the bill to stimulate the discovery of new sources of petroleum on the public domain I pointed out that even then the Japanese armies in the Dutch East Indies were being followed by drilling crews to sink new wells in the oil fields the Dutch had tried to destroy, and that it was incumbent upon us to begin immediately to develop new oil deposits.

Not only have our East Indian supplies of oil been cut off, but the German drive in the Caucasus has seriously endangered the Russian supply, and at the same time the Nazi U-boats have cut us off from Venezuela, from which in the days before the war we received on the east coast approximately 200,000 barrels of petroleum every day.

Two years ago exports and imports of oil, so far as the United States was concerned, were approximately balanced. Now imports have been cut off, but exports have been tremendously increased—exports for our allies as well as for our own forces. Thus United States deposits of petroleum have become practically the only sure and certain source from which the United Nations may draw their essential supplies of oil.

MILITARY DEMANDS GROWING

Meanwhile, the demand is so great and is growing so rapidly that failure on the part of the Government, the oil industry, and the people to prepare immediately can only result in disaster. American production of crude petroleum is now running at the rate of something more than 4,000,000 barrels every day. This was sufficient in the days before the war to take care of all industrial and civilian needs, but it is totally inadequate to fuel the tanks and planes that must carry the war to Tokyo and Berlin. It is not too much to say that it will require considerably more than that amount to fuel the air raids upon which the American Air Forces and the Royal Air Force have already been launched. Every bomber which leaves a United Nations airfield must carry its own supply in sufficient quantity to carry it to its objective and back again. When we talk of a flying radius of say 1,500 miles, it becomes at once apparent that we are talking in terms of gasoline consumption far exceeding anything to which we have ever been accustomed. When we talk of building bigger and bigger air fleets capable of longer and longer flight we are talking in terms of oil consumption that no one, either in the oil industry or in the Army or Navy, dreamed of 2 years ago.

The complexity of the problem is further enhanced by the fact that these air armadas need for their efficient operation a type of high-octane gasoline which is only now coming into manufacture in quantity and which is extraordinarily expensive in terms of crude petroleum, for scarcely 10 percent of a barrel of oil as it comes out of the ground can finally be manufactured into the sort of gasoline that is needed to supply power to our air armadas.

In addition to high-octane gasoline for airplanes, great quantities of ordinary gasoline are needed for tanks and trucks, great quantities of fuel oil for the Navy, large amounts of toluene, a byproduct of petroleum for the manufacture of explosives, and, finally, large amounts of butadiene, another byproduct, for the manufacture of synthetic rubber. It may be that grain alcohol will become an increasing source of the gasoline needed to make rubber, but to date petroleum rather than any agricultural product is the principal source of this material.

It thus becomes perfectly clear how necessary crude oil is to the winning of the war. I am told by those who are in a position to know that two-thirds of the tonnage shipped to our military forces consist of petroleum. It is the realization of this fact which has prompted Congress to pass the bill, the objective of which is to stimulate the discovery of new sources of oil upon the public domain. The measure undertakes to do that by providing a lower royalty to the Government for a period of 10 years for new discoveries. Under the present law, lessees of Government oil lands pay the United States a royalty which ranges from 12½ to 32 percent, according to the amount and the value of production. Under the new law any lessee who brings in a new oil field or who, on an old lease, brings in a new deposit of oil will be rewarded by being required to pay not more than 12½ percent for a period of 10 years after the discovery.

I would be the last person to predict that the passage of this bill will solve the petroleum problem. It will not; first, because even though there may be a large supply of undiscovered petroleum in the public-land States, the process of exploration and discovery is a long and arduous one and it may be doubted whether very many discoveries can be made under this bill in less than a year. Meanwhile, we shall be drawing upon our known reserves of petroleum at a rate which will hasten their depletion.

NEW DISCOVERIES ARE ESSENTIAL

The gravity of the situation will be understood when I point out that the amount of petroleum which has already been drawn from the ground and is in storage ready to be shipped, amounts to only about 250,000,000 barrels, or less than one-fifth of the annual production. The oil which is under the ground can only be estimated and may not in fact be as much as petroleum engineers believe. Whatever it amounts to, however, it cannot be withdrawn too rapidly without extreme danger to the deposits, for the amount of oil which may be taken from any field depends upon the maintenance of gas pressure at the bottom of the well. When a great many wells are drilled in a small area the producing life of the area is proportionately reduced. This is the reason why so-called conservation practices have been followed in most of the oil-producing States.

The rate of discovery of new fields has been falling off and, as a consequence, we have not been bringing in new supplies to make up for the withdrawals which are being made.

In 1942, according to the Office of the Petroleum Coordinator, the United States produced 6 percent more crude petroleum than it did in 1941, but if there are no new discoveries the production in 1943 will be 10 percent less than in 1941 and in 1944 there will be almost 20 percent less, indicating again how necessary it is to promote the search for new sources of oil. If we are to maintain the balance during 1943, disregarding completely the new demand, it will be necessary to discover, either in new fields or by extensions of old fields, enough new oil to amount to 400,000 barrels every day.

To promote the discovery of this oil, no other step has been taken than the passage of this bill, which affects only the public domain. The Senate Committee on Public Lands, which has given months to the study of the problem, has recommended not only the enactment of this measure, but it has also recommended that the Petroleum Coordinator, the War Production Board, and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation undertake immediately to finance exploratory drilling wherever oil may be found. Government loans to the so-called wildcatters are necessary because under present conditions the independent operator is unable to secure the necessary loans through ordinary banking channels. A short-term loan is not sufficient. The independent operator, who does not have the backing of large financial reserves, must have the support of long-term Government loans because in the present economic situation banks and other private sources of capital are unable to meet the emergency.

POSITION OF INDEPENDENT OPERATOR

How important this is to the maintenance of what we are pleased to call the free enterprise system will be recognized when I point out that the position of the small independent operator has been steadily growing weaker. In 1939 an examination of authoritative statistics showed that the major oil companies at that time controlled 52.7 percent of all the proven crude oil reserves in the United States. In 1942 they controlled almost 70 percent.

This is because the wildcat operator, when he discovers oil, usually seeks a purchaser for his discovery and usually it is a major oil company which buys the newly discovered oil lands.

The history of the oil industry is the history of the search for new fields by pioneers. It is the pioneer who takes the chance. It is the pioneer who plays the long shot and at a time like this when every petroleum expert and every congressional or executive investigator agrees that new reserves are imperative, it is essential that an inducement should be held out to the independent. The reduction of royalties upon the public domain and long-term loans upon good security through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation are two methods by which the Government may support the independent operator in the essential search for new sources of oil supply.

But even both of these inducements are not enough. The most serious obstacles to the search for new oil supplies are shortages of material and shortages of manpower. Unless there is a relaxation of present priority rules with respect to materials that are needed for the drilling of wells it is inevitable that even with lower royalties and long-term loans, fewer and fewer wells will be drilled to completion. It is the testimony of all who know the industry that the amount of critical materials needed for drilling wildcat wells is much les than that which is needed to complete a producing well, but when a well is drilled to production the resulting supply of new oil is of such great importance that priority rulings should be unhesitatingly relaxed to make certain that the new supply is brought in.

Much can be done also to relieve the situation by improvement in the means of transportation, Congressman Cole, who made his final report to the President on October 22 as he was resigning from the House of Representatives to take a seat upon the United States Customs Court, more than a year ago sponsored the Cole Pipe Line Act, but the construction of the pipe lines authorized by this law was delayed for months. Even now, largely by lack of steel and other materials, we are not doing enough to make existing oil reserves available. In west Texas, in New Mexico, and in Wyoming, there are not sufficient transportation facilities to bring into immediate use existing supplies of oil.

The areas in which oil is produced and in which it is refined and used are separated by such great distances that the problem of transportation is one of the most difficult of all factors. For example, in the eastern area, which refines normally about 15 percent of the total amount of crude oil produced, there is less than 2 percent of the total reserve, whereas in the Southwest 68 percent of the petroleum reserves are found while the local requirements for refining amount to only 37 percent.

Lacking in sufficient pipe lines and with the accustomed tanker service cut off by reason of the war, the petroleum industry was forced to turn to the railroads for relief, but although the railroads are now transporting approximately 850,000 barrels of oil a day as compared with less than 5,000 barrels 2 years ago, the facilities are not adequate. The tankers used to carry more than a million barrels a day and the cost was $750,000 less daily than railroad transportation.

PROBLEM OF PRICE

This raises the last and probably the most important factor, namely, the factor of price. The House Committee on Interstate Commerce, through Congressman Cole, on October 22 recommended to the President not only that there should be a centralization of Government authority over the production and distribution of petroleum, but that there should be an over-all increase of price.

The Senate committee, on the other hand, while recommending the reduction of Government royalties, Reconstruction Finance Corporation long-term loans and concentrated authority, did not make any recommendation with respect to price because the Public Lands Committee was of the opinion that that was a matter which was beyond its jurisdiction. It did, however, receive testimony upon this question. The industry, including the independents, urges a price increase and justifies it upon the ground that the war has utterly changed all of the conditions of production and distribution and, second, upon the ground that only an increase of price will enable the producer both of crude and of the refined products to meet the increased costs.

For the refiner it is pointed out that in normal times ordinary gasoline was the principal product and that the price which was received for the gasoline consumed by the civilian economy enabled the production and distribution of other byproducts, including fuel oil, at low prices. Rationing of gasoline, however, and the increased demand for fuel oil, as well as for other byproducts, made it necessary for refiners to produce larger quantities of the product which was sold for the smallest price. The Petroleum Coordinator, in his testimony before the Senate Public Lands Committee, referred "to the changes we have had to order in refinery yields so as to produce from crude oil more heating and industrial oils and less gasoline." He went on to say that "when a refiner is asked to make less and less of his high-value product and more and more of the low-value product, his net returns diminish toward the vanishing point," and that, in these circumstances, small refiners "are faced with the alternative of going out of business altogether or of being consolidated into their larger competitors."

Independent operators, too, urged an increased price of oil. Said one of these, Mr. Bert Aston, of Roswell, N. Mex., at our Artesia hearing:

"The oil man doesn't want a subsidy. He isn't that kind of an animal. He doesn't want the Government or anyone else to subsidize him. All we need is an adequate price for our oil. * * * I say to the Government quite frankly: If you help us get a reasonable price for our oil we will go out and get the wildcats. I represent dozens of fellows like me that drill them and pay for them. We miss them and hit them. We hit a few and miss a lot, but if you will help us get an adequate price you don't need to worry about the oil reserves. The independents will take care of that."

Congressman Cole, in his report to the President, also pointed out the readjustment of refinery production and the increased costs of wildcatting, leading to the following conclusion:

"An adjustment in the price of oil and a collateral adjustment in the price of products is a necessary war measure to insure the drilling of wildcats, to continue production of stripper wells, to rehabilitate wells long shut down and make possible secondary recovery operations in many fields where the oil is needed."

Opposed to this is the policy of the Office of Price Administration. Mr. Henderson, in his testimony to the committee was definitely of the opinion that a price increase would result in unnecessarily large profits for the companies which dominate the petroleum industry. His position was that it would be preferable for the Government to pay subsidies in necessary cases to stimulate production rather than to grant an over-all increase of price which would be paid by all civilians and by the Government in the purchase of petroleum products. It would be better, according to his testimony, for the Government to expend $250,000,000 in direct subsidies to the discoverers of new oil than by an increase of 50 cents per barrel on a daily production of 4,000,000 barrels to incur an additional cost of $730,000,000 for a year's oil supply.

Then, too, I remember the testimony of the late Mr. W. S. Farish, president of the Standard Oil of New Jersey, who told the Temporary National Economic Committee in 1939 that the Nation's oil reserves had been increased during the previous 14 years from 5½ billion barrels to 17 billion while the average price of crude oil was usually under $1.20 per barrel. The average price last year was $1.12. Of course, when Mr. Farish was testifying he was the head of the world's largest oil refinery. He was not the spokesman of the producer.

MAJOR COMPANY HOLDINGS

Whether price increase or Government subsidy is the device for stimulating the discovery of more oil, one thing is certain, namely, that more oil must be found. The royalty bill is an effort to open the public domain to renewed exploration. It must be supplemented by more complete exploitation of the undeveloped land now held by the twenty major oil companies. Though they control almost 50,000,000 acres, they are producing from only 3,750,000 acres. This tremendous undeveloped area must be explored. I am glad to be able to report that the Office of the Petroleum Coordinator is now working on this problem and that as a result of the suggestions of Secretary Ickes, the big companies at this moment have far more seismograph crews at work searching for new oil possibilities than at any previous time in history.

Seismograph search, however, is not enough. We must have drilling. It is not difficult to predict that if the independents and the majors fail to drill, the demand will grow for a drilling campaign under the direction of the United States Army engineers. The Army and the Navy must have the oil.

The testimony to the Senate Public Lands Committee raised the central question which lies at the heart of the whole current debate over price control. The Price Control Act authorized the payment of subsidies, but fixed no standards to guide the administrator, and Congress has not yet appropriated any money specifically for the payment of subsidies either for petroleum products or for agricultural products. This fundamental issue of whether the price system should be used in the traditional manner to bring needed commodities into the market or whether when a price ceiling prevents a producer from getting his costs out of his operation a subsidy should be paid is one which will have to be settled in the new Congress. It is not a question to be discussed here.

I am content to point out that the Office of Price Administration has recognized in some cases that price increases should be granted for the purpose of stimulating production and that this can be done without an over-all order. It has already been done in Pennsylvania with respect to lubricating oil which indicates the need for a price increase. There is another instance in the case of fuel oil. In Wyoming, there are 21 known fields capable of producing what is called black oil, that is to say, a heavy oil which is used for fuel purposes. Before the war there was comparatively little demand for this oil and at one time when the Government, through the Interior Department, sought to fix a price of about 90 cents a barrel on this oil it failed because there was no market for the oil at that price. Lack of market meant lack of development, but that was before the war. When the Office of Price Administration fixed the prices on crude oil of this character, it fixed them as of October 1, 1941, before the need for new production had developed.

The result is that the price of this oil, which is now very much needed, is fixed at the 50-cent level which was in effect October 1, 1941, at a time of little demand. Our committee was told that if the price of that oil were increased it would be possible to multiply the amount of production perhaps threefold; that is to say, to increase the daily output from 30,000 to 90,000 barrels.

California producers of fuel oil likewise assert that an increase of price would result in an increase of production. These questions are now under consideration in negotiations between the Office of the Petroleum Coordinator and the Office of Price Administration.

Whatever may be the merits of the controversy between price and subsidy, this is clear, that to win the war we need more oil. The military needs are the primary needs; and if we do not have sufficient petroleum to fuel our airplanes, our tanks, our battleships, airplane carriers, and destroyers, all questions of price and profit and of civilian use will be idle.

OIL IS THE MOST ESSENTIAL WAR MATERIAL

Whoever uses petroleum today must know that he is using the most essential of all war materials. It is true that the modern army moves only on rubber. It is true that no army can fight without weapons and equipment of steel, but the Armies and Navies of the United Nations could have unlimited supplies of both rubber and steel, but without petroleum they could not move.

To me, when I think of what the men on the front are doing, when I read the dispatches from the South Pacific and from north Africa, when on the radio I hear of the flying fortresses going out over enemy territory and sometimes suffering the loss of gallant men who will never return, I know that all theories of price, profit, and economic control are unimportant. The all-important thing now is the production and distribution of the materials that the men on the fighting front must have if they are to win the war for us.

The following is the full text of the new law which was signed by the President on Christmas Eve, December 24:

"An act to encourage the discovery of oil and gas on the public domain during the continuance of the present war

"Be it enacted, etc., That during the period of the national emergency proclaimed by the President May 27, 1941 (Proclamation No. 2487), upon a determination by the Secretary of the Interior that a new oil or gas field or deposit has been discovered by virtue of a well or wells drilled within the boundaries of any lease issued pursuant to the provisions of the act, approved February 25, 1920, as amended (U. S. C., title 30, secs. 181–263), the royalty obligation of the lessee who drills such well or wells to the United States as to such new deposit shall be limited for a period of 10 years following the date of such discovery to a flat rate of 12½ percent in amount or value of all oil or gas produced from the lease.

"Approved, December 24, 1942 (Public Law 832, 77th Cong.)."

ADMINISTRATION OF OATH TO SECRETARY OF THE SENATE

The VICE PRESIDENT. If it is agreeable at this time, the Chair will administer the oath of office to Mr. Halsey, elected Secretary of the Senate.

Thereupon Mr. Edwin A. Halsey advanced to the Vice President's desk, and the oath of office was administered to him.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. BARKLEY submitted a resolution (S. Res. 56), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be notified of the election of Edwin A. Halsey, of Virginia, as Secretary of the Senate.

NOTIFICATION TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. BARKLEY submitted a resolution (S. Res. 57), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the House of Representatives be notified of the election of Edwin A. Halsey, of Virginia, as Secretary of the Senate.

REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE INVESTIGATING THE NATIONAL DEFENSE PROGRAM ON ANTHRACITE COAL STRIKE

Mr. TRUMAN. Mr. President, I wish to make a short report from the Special Committee Investigating the National Defense Program, on the anthracite coal strike, which is now going on in Pennsylvania.

Early in January a number of the members of the United Mine Workers engaged in mining anthracite coal in Pennsylvania went on strike. By Wednesday, January 6, the strike had reached serious proportions and by Saturday, January 9, almost half of the 40,000 miners in the anthracite field were on strike.

The strike was not authorized by the United Mine Workers, which had a contract with the anthracite mine operators which does not expire until April 30, 1943. The reason assigned by the strikers for leaving work was the action of the operators in deducting from wages dues at the rate of $1.50 per month per man. The operators were compelled to make the deduction by their contract with the United Mine Workers.

The dues which have been charged by districts 1, 7, and 9, the three anthracite districts, had been $1 per month per man, from which the international received 50 cents and the district and local union 25 cents each. The constitutional convention of the United Mine Workers, held October 6 to 14, 1942, amended the constitution so as to provide:

SEC. 12. The local dues to be paid by each member shall not be less than $1.50 per month, together with such assessments as may be levied by the different branches of the organization.

This required the three anthracite districts and about one-half of the bituminous districts to raise their dues by 50 cents each. It was not necessary for some of the other bituminous districts, which were charging $1.50 or more per month per man, to change their dues.

The reason for changing the constitution was to enable the international to receive 90 cents per month in dues from each man, instead of 50 cents as originally provided. The constitutional convention adopted the following provision:

SEC. 13. Every local union shall pay direct or cause to be paid to the international secretary-treasurer a per capita tax of 90 cents per month per member and such additional assessments as may be levied by an international convention or referendum vote of the members, payment of per capita tax to be based upon the amount of dues collected each month by the local union.

This change from 50 cents to 90 cents per month per man dues to be paid to the international did not cause an increase in its revenues because during the period from February to November of 1942 the international had been collecting in addition to the 50 cents dues per month per man an assessment of 50 cents per month per man or a total of $1 per month per man. The assessment was collected pursuant to section 26 of the constitution, which provided that the board shall have power to levy and collect assessments when necessary, and the collection of the assessments was ratified by the constitutional convention.

The board referred to is the International Executive Board of the United Mine Workers of America, which consists of 1 representative for each of the 25 bituminous districts and the 3 anthracite districts. The power of that board to levy assessments was stricken by the constitutional convention.

The net result of these changes was that the international would receive 90 cents per month per man instead of $1 per month per man, but would not be able to levy any further assessments unless the assessment was made by a constitutional convention or by a referendum of the membership.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TRUMAN. I yield.

Mr. BREWSTER. I should like to ask the able Senator from Missouri whether he has received any information concerning the amount of money now reserved in the treasury of the United Mine Workers of America.

Mr. TRUMAN. I have been informed that it is $7,000,000.

Mr. BREWSTER. Has the Senator been informed why, with a reserve fund on hand of approximately $7,000,000, the dues of approximately 100,000 miners were increased during the past year, beginning with last February, to the extent that the yearly increase amounts to more than a half million dollars?

Mr. TRUMAN. I have no information on the subject.

Mr. BREWSTER. Has there been any showing, so far as the inquiries of the able Senator from Missouri are concerned, which would indicate why such an enormous increase in revenues is essential during the war period?

Mr. TRUMAN. No such showing has been made, to my knowledge. I know of no such information available.

Mr. BREWSTER. Has there been any indication that the miners are contemplating a more serious strike?

Mr. TRUMAN. Yes; there is a more serious strike in contemplation, with regard to which I shall speak a little later.

Mr. BREWSTER. Indicating that the anthracite workers may contemplate going on strike to demand an increase in wages in defiance of their existing contracts?

Mr. TRUMAN. That is possible.

Mr. BREWSTER. This action has been characterized by the majority leader in the other House, who is a gentleman who uses his words very carefully, as approaching treason. Without saying that such a characterization is justified, it is certainly to be remembered—and I have discussed this subject with the Senators from Pennsylvania, who are most vitally concerned—that as a result of the strike by the anthracite miners some years ago the users of anthracite in New England and other places began to learn how to get along without anthracite. Anthracite substitutes were found, and the consumption of anthracite declined. As we face the most critical winter in the history of New England we are now being told that there are substitutes for anthracite and we are being urged to use them. If there is no other recourse we shall be forced to use Yankee ingenuity and invention to discover ways in which we may use means other than anthracite to solve our problems.

I hope that the gentlemen concerned with the promotion of the agitation referred to will realize the terrific injury they may be doing to their industry by precipitating this issue at the present time.

Mr. TRUMAN. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, the situation with respect to anthracite has been tight throughout the year because of the difficulty in obtaining labor in the anthracite mines and because of the inability of the operators in the mines to do the necessary exploitation work to open up new faces for additional mining.

Anthracite is principally used for domestic heating at home, particularly in New England, and for space heating of offices, apartment houses, theaters, school houses, and the like.

Many anthracite dealers were not successful in obtaining the quantities of anthracite they would like to have had, because of the great demand for anthracite and the relative scarcity, and some of them now have no anthracite in their yards at all. Consequently, the loss to date of several hundred thousand tons of anthracite production has had a serious effect, and the continuation of the strike would have a most serious effect, especially in northern New York and in New England. This is true even though Mr. J. Elmer Thomas and Mr. Howard Gray, Deputy Administrators of Solid Fuels, have informed the committee that there is a relatively free supply of bituminous coal. Some of the grates used for home heating, and some of the stoker equipment used for space heating, are so designed that it would be difficult or impossible to use bituminous coal as a substitute for anthracite. Also, many of the dealers, particularly in New England, are not dealers in bituminous coal and cannot easily obtain supplies of bituminous coal. However, the committee is informed that the Deputy Administrators of Solid Fuels are using every effort to see to it that supplies of bituminous coal are rushed to the areas where the need is great.

The committee has kept closely advised of the facts with respect to the anthracite strike almost since its inception, and has discussed the facts with respect to it with Mr. Harold Ickes, the Administrator of Solid Fuels; Mr. J. Elmer Thomas and Mr. Howard Gray, Deputy Administrators; Mr. John R. Steelman, Mr. H. Ross Colwell, and Mr. Frank J. Sheehan, of the Labor Department; Mr. Thomas Kennedy, secretary-treasurer of the United Mine Workers; and Mr. John L. Lewis.

Representatives of the Labor Department and the War Department attended a meeting at Wilkes-Barre, Pa., on Saturday, January 9, at which representatives of the locals on strike were informed that if the strike continued there would be widespread suffering due to the inability to obtain anthracite with which to supply heat to homes, Army camps, and other essential installations dependent thereon. At that meeting demands were made by some of the representatives of the locals there present that Mr. John L. Lewis personally come to the anthracite field and promise, first, to take action to decrease the dues; and, second, to start active negotiations for an increase of $2 a day in the wage rate, despite the fact that the contract with the operators does not expire until April 30, 1943. Threats were expressed at the meeting that unless these demands could be met production would be stopped in all anthracite mines by January 15. That threat still exists.

On Monday, January 11, the committee sent the following telegram to Mr. John L. Lewis as president of the United Mine Workers and to the presidents of the various locals in the three anthracite districts which are on strike:

> The Senate Committee Investigating the National Defense Program is informed by United States Government officials that suspension of anthracite-mine operations has created a critical situation for homes and Army camps dependent on anthracite for heat. The committee urges all mine workers to return to work at once and arrange for conferences to settle differences within the union at the earliest possible date, at the same time patriotically supporting the war effort by seeing that the flow of anthracite coal is not stopped by internal differences within the union. Anthracite production must be maintained and increased. The Nation expects and demands that this coal be produced.

That telegram was signed by me as chairman of the Special Committee of the United States Senate Investigating the National Defense Program.

Mr. Lewis and Mr. Kennedy proceeded to New York on Monday, January 11, and attended a meeting of the so-called Committee of Twelve, which consists of six representatives of the anthracite operators and six representatives of the United Mine Workers. This committee's telegram was read by Mr. Lewis to the Committee of Twelve, which thereafter sent telegrams to the locals which were on strike, directing that work be resumed. On Monday, January 11, the Labor Department notified the War Labor Board of the seriousness of the situation, and the War Labor Board also sent telegrams to the locals urging the men to return to work.

On Tuesday, January 12, this committee was informed by representatives of the United Mine Workers that the number of men on strike had been reduced to 10,350, and that there were signs which indicated that the strike might end. Representatives of the Labor Department stated that they thought that the telegram sent by this committee had a salutary effect.

After reviewing these facts the committee met in executive session on Tuesday, January 12, reviewed the above facts, and adjourned 1 day in order to wait for action by the miners in view of the telegrams.

On Wednesday, January 13, this committee was further informed by representatives of the United Mine Workers that the number of men on strike had been further reduced to 9,350, that meetings of the locals would be held later that day to vote on a return to work, and that it was believed by these representatives that most of the locals whose men were on strike would vote to return to work.

However, at the special meetings of the locals 10 of the 16 locals involved voted to continue the strike, 2 voted to return to work, 2 had not held meetings, and reports of action were not received from the remaining 2. According to the latest report received by this committee this morning from representatives of the United Mine Workers, approximately 9,000 men still remain on strike.

I am now informed by 2 authorities that 40,000 men are engaged in mining anthracite coal, and I am informed by the United Mine Workers that 100,000 men are engaged in anthracite coal mining, and that 85,000 of the men are at work. I do not know which figures are correct. We are going to find out before we get through.

The amount of the dues to be collected is so slight that it is doubtful whether that was in fact the cause of the strike. That it was not is indicated by the demands that have been made for an increase of $2 a day in the wages to be paid. If the true cause of the strike should be the desire to obtain an increase in wages, it would involve an attempt to force by unauthorized strikes an amendment in the agreement between the anthracite operators and the United Mine Workers of America prior to its expiration on April 30, 1943. To grant such a request would destroy not only the validity of the agreement entered into voluntarily by the United Mine Workers but also would create a differential between the miners of anthracite and the miners of bituminous which might result in unauthorized but widespread strikes among miners of bituminous coal. Such a strike would be most serious, as the production of bituminous is roughly ten times that of anthracite, and both are required for heat during this unusually severe winter, in which we have had to restrict the use of fuel oil for heating.

The committee has called a special executive session for 4 o'clock this afternoon, at which are to be present representatives of the United Mine Workers, the War Labor Board, and the Fuel Administrator, and I hope that we can arrive at some conclusion that will obtain a result—which is coal. We are trying to get coal.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair). Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. TRUMAN. I am glad to yield.

Mr. BREWSTER. The suggestion which the Senator made, that the 50-cent assessment could not be solely responsible for the strike, seems to be indicated by the fact that every one of the men on strike during the past 10 days has already sacrificed approximately $75 to prevent what would appear to be an imposition by an assessment of 50 cents a month. Unless some profound issue of taxation without representation is involved, that would not seem to reconcile itself with common sense; but I gather that there is confusion of authority within the union, exactly as we have found confusion of authority within the agencies in Washington concerned with the Government as to the methods which should be pursued to end this difficulty.

Mr. TRUMAN. I thank the Senator; what he says is correct.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a remark?

Mr. TRUMAN. I yield.

Mr. BURTON. I should like to point out to the Senator, if the matter has not already been called to his attention, that 2 days ago the mayor of Boston, Mr. Tobin, was in Washington testifying before the Oil Shortage Committee, and he pointed out the relationship of the strike to the oil shortage situation, by saying that he already had under way the conversion of a number of public buildings to the use of anthracite coal, but because of the strike he had ordered those conversions to stop, and therefore he was left in the position of being unable to meet a situation which otherwise would have been met. Of course, that condition will spread rapidly from the city of Boston to other places if the strike continues longer.

Mr. TRUMAN. I thank the Senator.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, in connection with the discussion which has just taken place, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial entitled "Work or Fight," appearing today in the Philadelphia Record.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WORK OR FIGHT

The strike of 20,000 anthracite miners is going into its sixteenth day.

It is a strike in violation of the non-strike pledge given to President Roosevelt by John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers, and 11 other national representatives of labor in December 1941.

It is a strike in violation of a contract between the union and the mine operators.

It is a strike against the war, over the comparatively trivial issue of an increase of 50 cents a month union dues and a sudden demand for a $2-a-day pay increase while the contract has more than 3 months to run.

Yesterday, by a tremendous majority, 10 of the largest locals in the anthracite field rejected the ultimatum of the War Labor Board to return to work.

Unless the miners are back in the pits within 24 hours the United States Government should crack down and crack down hard. The War Labor Board must make good.

The Board has declared that stock piles of anthracite are "at a critically low level and endangering the health of our people and the prosecution of the war."

That statement alone should be enough to make any miner forget his hatred of John L. Lewis and his grudge against the operators and go back to work.

If they fail to return to work, they are hindering the war just as much as a draft dodger, or a mutineer in the Army.

They are stopping production just as completely as if the mines had been dynamited by saboteurs put ashore from a German submarine.

The United States dare not countenance sabotage either by German agents or irresponsible strikers.

The Federal Government should tell the able-bodied men who have been given occupational deferments from the draft:

"Dig coal or fight."

As for the others, the Government has several alternatives. It could, as the Record has suggested previously, form special labor battalions at Army pay for outlaw strikers, such as these, who obey neither their own union nor their own Government.

Or it could take the mines over with full protection for the owners (who have not broken contracts or defied the War Labor Board) and put the Army in charge.

Maybe, as Lewis said in 1941, at the time of the captive coal strike, "you can't dig coal with bayonets," but they can make the miners wish they were digging coal.

There is no doubt the miners have grievances. They are sore at Lewis, who, so far, has done nothing to end the strike except to write a letter to the strikers. Federal Conciliator Thomas Lambert has been trying to arrange a meeting with Lewis but hasn't even received a reply.

And they want more money because the owners have been given an increase by the Office of Price Administration.

But any grievances they have can be taken up with the War Labor Board, after they go back to digging coal.

Uncle Sam must get tough. Continuance of this strike will mean cheers in Berlin and Tokyo, and groans in North Africa.

Mr. MAYBANK. I concur in what the able Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN] has said. Not only are the miners doing themselves a great deal of harm; but in South Carolina and other sections of the South strikes in wartime are not the least bit appreciated but are bitterly resented.

NOMINATION OF EDWARD J. FLYNN TO BE MINISTER TO AUSTRALIA

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, it is my observation in looking about the Chamber today that the stench of the Flynn appointment has become so nauseating to the majority Members of the Senate that when it was known quite generally that the Senator from New Hampshire would make further remarks regarding Mr. Flynn a great majority of them "beat it" to the cloak rooms. Mr. President, I have on my desk a paving block, one of the stolen paving blocks from which "Paving Block" Flynn secured his name. It was brought to me by a group of civic-minded citizens of New York City. I hope it will represent Flynn's political tombstone, because in my judgment it will be a fitting tombstone, politically, for him. I am glad that at least some open-minded gentlemen on the majority side are present in the Chamber at this time. My compliments to them.

The purpose of my remarks is to focus the attention of the people of America and the Members of the Senate upon the most despicable appointment yet made by the President of the United States. In every city and town and at every crossroads in the country people are alarmed and concerned over the appointment and what it typifies. I know this because from practically every State of the Union I have received letters or communications opposing the Flynn appointment. The people are concerned because in every city and town and at ever crossroads in America are people who have sons, daughters, brothers, and husbands in the armed services, and tens of thousands of them are in Australia today.

I am glad that the chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee is now entering the Chamber. I hope he will come over to my desk and examine the paving block which I have before me, one of the stolen paving blocks from New York City, so that he can look it over and perhaps study it and give it some thought before his committee meets.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations is prepared, whenever the committee meets, to perform his duty, whatever he may feel that is.

Mr. BRIDGES. I am very glad to hear that.

Mr. CONNALLY. But at the moment I regret that I cannot follow the Senator from New Hampshire around through the newspapers. I cannot be with him constantly in advance of the committee hearings and in advance of the testimony.

Mr. BRIDGES. All I ask is that the Senator do his duty as chairman of the committee.

Mr. CONNALLY. I think the chairman of the committee certainly will wait until he hears some of the testimony, instead of reading speeches in the newspapers. A committee cannot very well be guided by newspaper enthusiasm or by oratorical breast-beating.

Mr. BRIDGES. If the Senator will first provide public hearings and then will be guided by the testimony offered, he will have no other course than to come before the Senate and advocate the rejection of the nomination of Edward Flynn.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRIDGES. Certainly.

Mr. CONNALLY. I had not wanted to interrupt the Senator. I merely came in to listen, not to take part in the controversy. I am glad to inform the Senator now that the Committee on Foreign Relations expects to meet tomorrow at 10:30 a. m. The Senator will be welcome, and I am sure the committee will receive whatever charges he cares to file. After we receive them we shall try to give them proper attention.

For 2 or 3 days I have been looking for the new front; we have heard much said about opening a new front. It is here; it is the Flynn front. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, following my remarks in the Senate in opposition to "Paving Block" Flynn, representative New York citizens came to my office with certain evidence regarding "Paving Block" Flynn's unfitness for any diplomatic post. After reviewing that evidence, I announced yesterday afternoon that today in the Senate I would present certain charges. These charges are sufficientiy serious and sufficiently supported by the testimony of representative citizens, documentary evidence, and affidavits to warrant a thorough investigation by the Foreign Relations Committee at a public hearing.

First. I charge that Edward J. Flynn, through the law firm of Goldwater & Flynn, represented a Mr. Serge Rubinstein, who at the time of his retainer with Flynn had large Japanese interests, and that this Mr. Rubinstein was closely associated with one Guiji Kassai, who was a registered agent of the Japanese Government and was in this country until 2 weeks before Pearl Harbor. Mr. Rubinstein also presented a gift of money to the Japanese Government at a time when our relations with Japan were clearly strained. The story of the Flynn-Rubinstein combination is one of international import that has a direct bearing on anyone who represents us in this international crisis in which we are involved in war with Japan.

Second. I charge that Edward J. Flynn, as chamberlain of the city of New York, invested public funds in the State Title & Mortgage Co., causing the city to lose over a million dollars. Flynn's law firm subsequently became general counsel to this company; and his law partner, Mr. Monroe Goldwater, served as a director. Adolph Berle, now Assistant Secretary of State, who succeeded Flynn as chamberlain, pointed out that the State Title & Mortgage Co. had received more business from the city than any other similar company during Flynn's incumbency, and denounced Flynn's administration as chamberlain. This is the same Berle who is potentially Mr. Flynn's superior officer in the Department of State, and who will be if his nomination is confirmed.

Third. I charge that Edward J. Flynn appointed Dutch Schultz, noted criminal and murderer, a deputy sheriff when Flynn was sheriff of Bronx County. Schultz was appointed by Flynn just a few months after Flynn took office, and Schultz served the full tenure of Flynn's incumbency as sheriff, even though he was a known criminal and a fugitive from justice from many States. It is evident to me that a person who selects as his deputy a man of Dutch Schultz's character is certainly unfit to hold a diplomatic post in our foreign service.

Fourth. I charge that the grand jury investigation of the paving-block scandal was conducted by a political stooge of Flynn's and was improperly handled, to the disgust of at least one member of the grand jury, who will appear before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, if given an opportunity, to tell why Flynn was exonerated; and I further charge that the foreman of the jury, Mr. Daniel Daly, received a Federal appointment about 2 months after the Flynn whitewash, and is now employed by a Federal department in New York City.

Reputable citizens are prepared to appear before the Foreign Relations Committee to present evidence and proof of each of these charges. It is neither my duty nor my intention to explore in detail these charges here today. That is the duty of the Foreign Relations Committee, headed by the distinguished Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY]. That committee can and should subpena witnesses; it can and should publicly and thoroughly explore for the Senate and the American people the fitness of "Paving Block" Flynn for the high diplomatic post to which he has been appointed. I cannot conceive of the Foreign Relations Committee of the United States Senate dodging that responsibility. Having seen much of the evidence American citizens have to offer, I fail to understand how any Member of the United States Senate can conscientiously vote for the confirmation of the nomination of "Paving Block" Flynn. I hope that in the Chamber today the Senator from Texas may not only assure us that the matter will be taken care of, as he has said, but that he will have full public hearings to which the public will be invited to come and at which those in opposition to the Flynn appointment may suggest to the committee the subpenaing of various citizens. I may say that among those who I hope will be summoned will be Sidney Baron, secretary of the committee to reopen the Flynn case; Mr. Paul Kern, former chairman of the civil service commission of New York City, who was thrown out of his position as the result of Flynn's activities; the chairman of the grand jury, who now has a lucrative Federal position in New York City; a member of the grand jury who made a statement after it was all over as to unethical practices; Mayor LaGuardia, who in times past has expressed himself relative to Mr. Flynn; Cordell Hull, the able Secretary of State; Sumner Welles, his able assistant; Adolf Berle, Jr., Assistant Secretary of State, who, in the past, has condemned Mr. Flynn. Then I want to see J. Edgar Hoover, or a representative of the F. B. I., invited to tell the committee what they know of Mr. Rubinstein. I think it will be found they know something of Mr. Rubinstein and some of his associates. I should like to have summoned a representative of the Naturalization Bureau, which, I understand, is investigating this man's entry into this country.

Now, I desire to speak of one other angle to this case and that is the obligation of the Senate and the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate to protect Australia in this matter.

Australia is in a difficult situation today. Australia as a nation is a partner of the United States in a great war; Australia is today receiving hundreds of millions of dollars of lend-lease military equipment, supplies, and food; there are tens of thousands of American boys over there offering up their lives for the protection of Australia. The people of Australia and the Government of Australia know that their future life depends upon the action of this Government and of this administration. So they are a little restrained perhaps about making a protest against Mr. Flynn's appointment. Therefore, we have the double duty of protecting from such a man a government and a people with whom we are associated in a great war.

I think Mr. Flynn's appointment is one of the most glaring examples of the necessity of confirmation by the Senate of Presidential appointments for diplomatic posts. I have already been told by members of the majority party on the other side of the aisle that if they vote for Mr. Flynn they will have "to hold their noses" to do it; that the stench has become so great that they are almost nauseated by it. I also realize that "Paving Block" Flynn is chairman of the Democratic National Committee, and that fact causes them some embarrassment; but I assure you, Mr. President, they will be doing a great service to the country and to their own party if they rid the country and their party of the incubus of Mr. Flynn.

Mr. President, I have before me various interesting articles and editorials which I desire to have printed in the RECORD. For instance, I have an editorial from the Chicago Sun. As is well known, the idea of that newspaper was hatched in the White House. It is published by Marshall Field and his associates, and is solidly behind the President and his general program. Yet the Chicago Sun, in an editorial entitled "Rebuild the Foreign Service," opposes the appointment of Mr. Flynn.

I have an editorial from the Chicago Daily News opposing the selection of Mr. Flynn. I have also an editorial from the Boston Herald entitled "A Smelly Choice." I also have an editorial from the Daily Mirror of New York.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. BRIDGES. Certainly.

Mr. BREWSTER. I shall not presume to prejudge this situation or to give counsel to the Committee on Foreign Relations as to their duty in the premises; but I assume that the Senator from New Hampshire, in his emphasis upon the disqualifications of Mr. Flynn for the post, does not mean to preclude the far broader field than the question of whether he has been guilty of any or all the charges which the Senator from New Hampshire and others have leveled against him. I refer to the far more serious question, even if he should be found not guilty of these charges beyond a reasonable doubt, of in what particular way he is affirmatively qualified for the enormously responsible and delicate position of Minister to Australia and roving ambassador in the southwest Pacific at this time when thousands of American boys are offering up their lives, when General MacArthur is carrying one of the greatest responsibilities that have rested upon a military authority in the history of our country, and when even the great Dominion of Australia is faced with an extremely delicate situation internally to which our Minister must necessarily address himself in serving the welfare of our country and our armed forces and serving also the great cause of humanity to which America has dedicated its resources. I hope that no emphasis upon Mr. Flynn's past difficulties will blind us to that far greater question which it seems to me the Senate must necessarily determine.

Mr. BRIDGES. I may answer the Senator by saying that it is most important to send a man of outstanding ability, with untarnished reputation, to represent us in Australia at this time.

Mr. BREWSTER. I do not mean to minimize in any way or disagree with the importance of what the Senator from New Hampshire is saying as to the necessity certainly of removing doubts along those lines, but I think that, having passed through that zone, if the Committee on Foreign Relations should simply determine that it has not been demonstrated beyond a reasonable doubt that Flynn was guilty of any or all the crimes or misdemeanors with which he has been charged that still would be a very long way from determining that he was, therefore, qualified for the tremendously responsible post for which he has been nominated.

Mr. BRIDGES. Let me say, in answer to the Senator, that when I mention the Japanese connection I am not questioning Mr. Flynn's patriotism. I am saying that any man who has had the connections that Flynn has had with Rubinstein, who, in turn, was associated with an agent of the Japanese Government, certainly will not have my confidence nor do I believe he will have the confidence of the American people in representing us in Australia and in the southwest Pacific; nor do I believe he will have the confidence of the Australian people or the Australian Government, no matter what they may say through expediency.

Mr. President, before the interruption, I was asking that certain editorials be printed in the RECORD. In addition to those already mentioned, I now ask to have inserted in the RECORD an editorial from the Daily Mirror of New York entitled "The Aussies Know All About Flynn"; an editorial from the Washington News entitled "Something Good For Ed"; an editorial from the New York Sun entitled "What a Price to Pay"; an article from the New York Herald Tribune entitled "Chicago Daily News Hits Flynn"; an editorial from the New York Herald Tribune entitled "Totally Unqualified"; from the Baltimore Sun an editorial under the title "Mr. Paving-Blocks Flynn as Diplomatic Material"; from the New York Times an editorial entitled "Mr. Flynn in the Wrong Place"; another editorial from the New York Herald Tribune under the headline "An Unmitigated Insult"; an editorial from the New York Sun under the title "Put an End to This Stench"; an editorial from the New York Daily Mirror under the head "More Than Just Paving Blocks"; an editorial from the Washington Post entitled "Dear Eddie." I present next an article by Frank Kent, one by David Lawrence, one by Mark Sullivan, one by Gould Lincoln, and one by Raymond Clapper.

All these go to the heart and root of the Flynn appointment, and are of interest and vital concern to every American. I ask that these be printed as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Chicago Sun of January 13, 1943]

REBUILD THE FOREIGN SERVICE

For reasons previously set forth, we hope the Senate will reject the President's nomination of Edward J. Flynn as minister to Australia. Today we submit a more fundamental proposal: The controversy over the nomination of this party boss should inspire a general overhauling and strengthening of our top diplomatic representation.

The principle behind the Flynn appointment is hoary. All too often, over the generations, our ambassadors and ministers have been appointed in payment of political debt. Since salaries fall far short of meeting expenses in many embassies and legations, it is a convenient old custom to appoint rich campaign contributors.

That, of course, is not the only system. The Presidents repeatedly have picked from private life men without riches or special political claims, on the basis of talents deemed especially useful. And career diplomats have become ministers and ambassadors. Some of these have been very able. Yet, unless endowed with exceptional backbones or private fortunes, the careerists are handicapped. When duty bids them to tell the State Department that its policies are wrong, duty is all too likely to run counter to self-interest in protecting a future career. Nor is service under the State Department the best of training in what most of us mean by American democracy.

The fact is that, with exceptions, our ministers and ambassadors are not up to their jobs. We cite, for example, the careerist, Clarence E. Gauss, Ambassador to China. It is an open secret that he is the man of whom Mr. Willkie spoke when he said that despite 20 years in the country of his assignment, a certain diplomat had not troubled to learn the language of the people to whom he was accredited. Mr. Gauss has ability. If China were a colony he doubtless would be a satisfactory high commissioner. As Ambassador to our most valued ally in Asia he should be replaced forthwith.

In Russia our Ambassador is Admiral Standley. His talents have been a great boon to the Navy. He has tackled his job in Moscow with characteristic devotion. But for that diplomatic mission of incalculable import for teamwork to produce victory and a lasting peace, a younger, more vigorous American, whom the Russians would recognize as one of our outstanding and independent leaders, ought to be selected.

How can we secure ambassadors and ministers able to do justice to their jobs? Two steps are needed; Congress should provide remuneration sufficient to permit men, irrespective of private fortune, to represent America in dignity. And the President should bury at once the time-honored practice of making diplomatic appointments political plums or rewards for careerists who fall short of the mark.

Time was when our foreign affairs demanded little more from top diplomats than protocol. Today the needs of teamwork in a coalition war, and peace through unprecedented cooperation after the war, make it imperative to rebuild the foreign service.

A SMELLY CHOICE

A man who has been closely identified with Tammany politics all his life and whose acts while holding political office were investigated by a grand jury is hardly the proper man to serve as our Minister to Australia. That will be a key post from now on. It calls for the selection of somebody who is eminently fitted for it by experience and otherwise, about whose qualifications there cannot be the slightest doubt.

Edward J. Flynn, who himself announced the appointment in advance of the formal nomination by the President yesterday, was unknown to most persons outside of New York until his appointment as Chairman of the Democratic National Committee first brought him to general attention. People heard little else about him until a grand jury investigated the alleged misuse by him of city-owned material. No true bill was returned, but the incident left a bad odor which still persists and will cling to him if the Senate should so insult the public as to confirm the nomination.

It doesn't make much difference whether the President named Mr. Flynn in order to make room for another, more acceptable chairman of the Democratic National Committee or to reward him for political services rendered to the party, or for both purposes. He is simply not the sort of man in whom the American people take pride. Surely this is no time for the playing or even the appearance of the playing of politics in the old, old way, for the discharging political debts at the expense of the Nation.

Wendell Willkie's comment yesterday that the selection is, "so crassly cynical that it must be revolting to all decent citizens" probably expressed the view of most persons. The Senate Committee on Foreign Relations owes it to the people to investigate Mr. Flynn's carreer thoroughly before voting on the subject. Acts which did not justify an indictment might very well be ample ground for rejecting a man who is to speak abroad for his country.

[From the New York Daily Mirror of January 11, 1943]

THE AUSSIES KNOW ALL ABOUT PAVING

It won't work, Mr. Flynn. You say the President says he's going to appoint you, and you expect the Senate to confirm the appointment, and you may indeed get the job. But it won't work. We'll tell you why.

Next door to the office in which this column is written, there is the small, neat office of the Sydney Daily Mirror and the Australasian Truth, over which presides a pert and pretty Australian, Miss Betty Riddell, who is that rare thing among women: she is a "newspaperman."

That is, she is a good reporter who knows a story when she smells one.

She knew it was a story "down her alley" Friday, when you announced that the President was making you his "Ambassador" (capital A) and personal representative to Australia, and would send your nomination to the Senate Monday as Minister Plenipotentiary.

IN SEARCH OF BIOGRAPHY

So she came into our office and asked us if we could help her get some background material on this Edward J. Flynn, chairman of the Democratic National Committee, chairman of the Executive Committee of the Bronx County (Democratic) Committee.

We are always anxious to cement inter-Allied solidarity, so we loaned her our copy of "Current Biography" for the year 1940, in which the story of your life appears.

"But," said Miss Riddell, "this is only up to 1940, and it will not include the story about the paving blocks."

So we gave this Australian correspondent access to our "morgue," the casual term for a newspaper's library and files, in which, as in St. Peter's book, the record of big and little people, the great, near-great, and merely notorious is kept.

Now, it is a long way from Lake Mahopac to Sydney, Australia, Mr. Flynn, but soon the story of your life was speeding there by cable—at 14 cents per word. The story was complete, accurate, and fair, for it included the fact that a Bronx grand jury cleared you of any wrongdoing in the use of city-owned paving blocks to cobble the Belgian courtyard of your country estate.

But, you see, the story of the paving blocks was read way down under, and people in Sydney, Canberra, Port Darwin, Brisbane, etc., are wondering about it.

You can't stop people from wondering, either there or here.

We can imagine that people in Australia are wondering why a Minister Plenipotentiary to that great, friendly, and strategically vital country should not be, like Caesar's wife, above suspicion.

Of course, when and if you step off a plane or destroyer in Australia, the people there will treat you with full hospitality, but you will know they are thinking:

"That's the paving-block chap. He was a big politician in the States. Had a lot of diplomatic experience in helping Roosevelt get elected to the third term."

And a lot of people will wonder in this country, too, particularly in view of the President's plea to Congress the other day for a moratorium on politics for the duration.

Your appointment, if it is an appointment, will seem to have a political color.

It will seem of the same stamp as the appointment of other repudiated or defeated New Deal Democrats to high official posts.

SOMETHING GOOD FOR ED

President Roosevelt serenely ignored the storm of public protest aroused by his shameless abuse of wartime diplomacy to provide a pay-off for his political henchman, Democratic National Chairman Edward J. Flynn. The President has not only sent the nomination to the Senate but also, in a personal letter to "Dear Eddie," he expatiated on the high honors in store for him, not alone as Minister to Australia but as Mr. Roosevelt's "personal representative with the rank of Ambassador" in a "very large area of the Southwest Pacific."

All this for a man whose diplomatic experience has never been broader than that of a party ward heeler and vote getter, who has earned his party's promotion only by his political activities as a party boss, and whose political reputation has been clouded by scandal.

We are reminded of the easygoing attitude of Bronx County Judge Lester Patterson, who presided at the proceedings of the grand jury that whitewashed Flynn in the affair of the city-owned paving blocks. After the whitewash Judge Patterson, informally discussing what he called the "Flynn gesture" of Robert L. Moran, then Bronx Works Commissioner, said:

"That's all Bob Moran was doing when he sent Flynn those paving blocks. He wanted Ed to have something good."

Now it's the President of the United States who wants Ed to have something good. And to see that Ed gets it the President is ready to flout diplomatic standards, affront Australia in a critical wartime situation, and send Ed roving over the Southwest Pacific on a high-titled difficult job that he has never done one thing to merit.

Playing politics with war diplomacy and war needs is both disgraceful and dangerous. The Senate should block the Flynn appointment. Our wartime diplomatic relations with Australia should not be degraded merely to produce something good for Ed.

[From the New York Sun of January 12, 1943]

WHAT A PRICE TO PAY!

A diplomatic envoy ought to enjoy the confidence of the people whom he represents and the respect of the government to which he is assigned. In peacetime he should know the history of the place to which he is sent. In wartime he ought to know the part which that place is taking in the conflict. It is plain that Edward J. Flynn, nominated by President Roosevelt to be American Minister to Australia and "my personal representative, with the rank of Ambassador," does not qualify on any of the points named.

This is not the first time that a President has paid a political debt with a diplomatic appointment. Usually, however, no actual harm has come of it, the appointee having capable subordinates to carry on for him. But we do not recall a political appointee who went abroad with such a load of discredit as the paving block scandal has attached to Mr. Flynn. It is useless for him to plead that the scandal was instigated by "a discredited public servant," meaning Mr. Kern. Commissioner Herlands, who is still in office, went over the same ground and with almost the same results.

No Democratic Senator can vote to ratify this nomination unless he accepts the idea that Mr. Flynn must be richly compensated for relinquishing the chairmanship of the Democratic National Committee. But what a price it is to pay!

[From the New York Herald Tribune of January 14, 1943]

CHICAGO DAILY NEWS HITS FLYNN

CHICAGO, January 13.—The Chicago Daily News, of which Frank Knox, Secretary of the Navy, is the owner, urged editorially today that the Senate refuse to ratify the appointment of Edward J. Flynn as special envoy to Australia.

The editorial, headed "A step backward," noted that it is vital to appoint as representatives abroad in wartime "the very best qualified men that can be found," and added: "In the career of Edward J. Flynn we can find nothing, absolutely nothing, to warrant the appointment."

"He is not a diplomat. He has had no foreign experience. He has had no military experience. He has no particular familiarity with Australia or with the problems of the Pacific," the editorial continued.

"For years our Consular and Diplomatic Service suffered under the practice of using it as a dumping ground for political "lame ducks" and job seekers. This practice is supposed to have been officially ended some 20 years ago. To revert to it at any time would be a step backward. To revert to it now is inexcusable."

Reviewing Mr. Flynn's activities as a "Tammany politician" in New York, the News said: "He has been involved in the usual number of public scandals that seem to go with Democratic pay-roll careers in the life of our great sister State in the East."

When he was appointed Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Knox placed control of the newspaper in the hands of a committee of editors.

[From the New York Herald Tribune of January 12, 1943]

TOTALLY UNQUALIFIED

It is true. In the silence that fell upon the White House on the heels of Edward J. Flynn's announcement of his own appointment as diplomatic Lord High Everything Else to the southwest Pacific, it was still possible to hold to some faint hope that Mr. Flynn had made an inexplicable error; that he was trying to force the President's hand or that the President would belatedly recognize the impossibility of giving Mr. Flynn a diplomatic post. It was particularly difficult to believe in the reality of the Flynn appointment in the atmosphere of high purpose created by the President's stirring report on the state of the Nation. But now the appointment is official; Mr. Roosevelt really has appointed the Democratic national chairman as Minister to Australia, naming him, in addition, "my personal representative with the rank of ambassador."

The United States has sent some odd figures to represent the Nation in foreign capitals. The use of diplomatic office to pay political debts has often placed square pegs in round holes—sent men of ability in their own lines to flounder helplessly in the intricacies of international affairs or to write their personal prejudices into the record of American diplomacy. The American foreign service, in the noncareer positions, at any rate, has been a sort of grab bag with numerous shining successes, many miserable failures, along with a fair proportion of comfortable mediocrities. But certain standards of achievement were required of candidates for diplomatic office. Mr. Flynn does not meet them. He represents nothing but politics in the narrowest sense—quite apart from the affair of the paving blocks, in which, as everyone knows, he was declared free from stain by grand-jury action.

It is now up to the Senate to reject Mr. Flynn. This is not a party matter, although some Democrats appear to view it in that light. It is a question of the dignity of the United States, at a time when that dignity must be upheld with especial care. It involves a diplomatic task of exceptional delicacy, intimately concerned with the winning of the war. Mr. Flynn is totally unqualified. The Senate must say so in unmistakable terms.

---

[From the Baltimore Sun of January 12, 1943]

MR. PAVING-BLOCKS FLYNN AS DIPLOMATIC MATERIAL

Good performance in office is a normal qualification for advancement to higher office. It is difficult to recall, in recent history, a case in which a President has, instead, named to high diplomatic office anyone who has been so notorious a misfit even in low office as to require his relinquishment of that low office.

This unhappy precedent President Roovevelt has now established in nominating Eddie Flynn, boss of the Bronx and, briefly, chairman of the Democratic National Committee, as United States Minister to Australia and "personal representative with the rank of Ambassador." Of all the personal favors at Government expense which the President has bestowed, this is probably the most completely cynical. Flynn is to succeed Mr. Nelson Johnson, one of the best of our career diplomats, who had 34 years of Foreign Service experience before going to Australia. It is difficult to recall in Mr. Flynn's experience any foreign relationship save that with Belgian paving blocks.

Such skillful and intelligent professionals as Mr. Johnson and Mr. Joseph C. Grew, admirably qualified by character, training, and experience in Far East affairs, have been of incalculable aid to Secretary Hull during this past critical year. To have such men succeeded by a politician whose presence as national committee chairman had embarrassed even the Democratic Party, and in a year which is more rather than less critical, is to unload on an overworked State Department an appalling burden.

The United States Senate's custom is to gag on inept appointments, but finally to swallow them, on the comfortable theory that it is better to embarrass the Nation than to irritate the President. In this instance it would be a silly custom. The Senate would help itself and the country—and, in final analysis, the President himself—by rejecting this clownish appointment and reminding the President that the needs of a nation are more important than personal friendships.

---

[From the New York Times of January 12, 1943]

MR. FLYNN IN THE WRONG PLACE

The relationships between a President and his Ambassadors and Ministers are necessarily and properly so personal and so confidential that the Senate is seldom justified in withholding its approval of any candidate for diplomatic office. We believe that the case is different when a candidate is as poorly fitted for a post as is Mr. Edward J. Flynn to be Minister to Australia, and when the results of confirmation of his appointment, both at home and abroad, would be uniformly bad.

Mr. Flynn is a county boss, elevated to the post of Democratic national chairman, who has become a political liability to his party because the public is angry about the celebrated case of the Belgian paving blocks. Mr. Flynn's field is the Bronx. There is no reason to believe that he has more than the most perfunctory knowledge of Australia. He has certainly not had the slightest experience as an international diplomat. The extent of his natural talent for "diplomacy" is accurately measured by his haste in beating the White House to the gun in announcing the news of his own appointment.

To send Mr. Flynn to Australia at this critical stage of the war, when we cannot send the supplies for which our friends are begging, would be equivalent to confirming the suspicions of the Chinese, as well as the Australians, that we do indeed regard the Pacific front as of second-rate importance. On our own home front the concurrence of the Senate in this action would strengthen the cynical belief that Mr. Flynn has been promoted to the high councils of the United Nations and the planning of the better postwar world in order to relieve the Democratic Party of the political embarrassment of having him continue as national chairman.

Any dispute between the President and the Senate is deeply unfortunate in wartime. But the President has made the issue here, and it would be better to risk a dispute than to suggest to our Pacific allies that there has been no public protest in this country against Mr. Flynn's appointment.

[From the New York Herald Tribune of January 9, 1943]

AN UNMITIGATED INSULT

The appointment of Mr. Edward J. Flynn as Minister Plenipotentiary to Australia (with some sort of unorthodox roving commission) is an insult to the people of the United States—whom he is supposed to represent—and to the people of Australia. There is a real need now for an American of high standing, able and sympathetic, to serve his country in Canberra. The Australians are alarmed about the military and naval effort which the United States is putting forth in the southwest Pacific; they are sensitive concerning what they feel is an insufficient appreciation of their plight. It has been suggested that Prime Minister Curtin make a personal trip to Washington to present the point of view of the commonwealth. All of this suggests poor liaison between this country and its Pacific partner.

To restore the situation the President proposes to send a very ordinary politician with extraordinary hard luck, to say the least, in the matter of certain paving stones. One can only assume, with charity, that the President postponed the nomination of Mr. Flynn until a new Congress took office, which, he has reason to expect, will be less amenable to Presidential suggestion. But, even if the Senate rejects Mr. Flynn, as it is that body's obvious duty to do, the President must still bear the onus of having made one of the worst appointments in a career which includes many bad appointments.

PUT AN END TO THIS STENCH

Most Americans acquainted with the paving-block scandal comforted themselves over the week end with the suspicion that Edward J. Flynn was suffering from a delusion when he announced that President Roosevelt would nominate him for Ambassador or Minister to Australia. Theirs, not Flynn's, was the delusion, for the President has done exactly what Mr. Flynn said he would do.

So the unbelievable thing becomes the fact. If the Senate gives its consent to this shocking appointment the great South Sea dominion of the British Empire will be asked to accept the New Deal boss of the Bronx as the representative of the United States.

The situation would be unpleasant enough in time of peace. It is created at a time when Australia looms as the center of our Pacific operations in the war on Japan. It is a shameless and shameful situation. The Senate should end it before the stench rises further.

MORE THAN JUST PAVING BLOCKS

The Flynn appointment goes deeper than the paving blocks. It goes deeper than the obvious inadequacy of Edward J. Flynn, the Bronx politico, to hold a diplomatic post that is currently one of the most important within the giving of this country.

The appointment, yet subject to Senate confirmation, seems to us to high light two grave weaknesses—the one a personal weakness of the President's, the other a weakness of his war administration.

The first, the President's personal shortcoming, is his proclivity for appointing weak persons to high posts for no other apparent reason than that they are his personal satraps.

This weakness has given us a Secretary of Labor who is not and never was a Secretary of Labor, but who has been maintained in Cabinet rank despite the fact that her duties and responsibilities have had to be taken from her and placed in the hands of a succession of boards and other agencies.

This weakness has supported a Secretary of the Treasury whose administration has been marked by the employment of taxation as a weapon of class warfare; a Secretary so distrusted at the Capitol that the Seventy-seventh Congress, by statute, gave itself the power to go over his head in the search for fiscal information.

This weakness has nurtured the Rex Tugwells and the Harry Hopkinses, the latter so well that the byword in Washington today is, "If you want to see Roosevelt, you've got to see Hopkins first."

This weakness has resulted in the rule that worshipful new dealers, though they may be defeated and repudiated at the polls, can't be swept out of the Government; they are appointed to something better than the offices for which the voters rejected them.

This weakness, finally, has given us the nomination of Flynn, not only as Minister to Australia but as the President's "personal representative with the rank of Ambassador."

It is not lese majeste for us to ask the question that is being asked in Australia and in the United States:

What reason, other than political, could have motivated the appointment of such a man to such a post?

The overtone of irony, of course, is that only last Thursday, in his masterful and conciliatory speech on the state of the Union, the President impressed Congress with a determination to forego politics for the duration.

OUR NO. 2 WAR

The second grave weakness silhouetted by the Flynn appointment is the apparent failure of the war administration to realize that we are fighting two great wars, not one big war and one little war.

Our relations with our allies, in what the administration seems to regard as the little war, are being strained.

Only a week ago, the Chinese Military Mission, headed by brilliant Gen. Hsiung Shih-fei, ignored and slighted for 9 months, never once invited to sit in the councils of the Allied high command, was recalled from Washington to Chungking by Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek.

Only 2 weeks ago, Prime Minister Curtin of Australia warned that Japan is consolidating her gains and voiced his fear that the policy of dealing first with Hitler and the European war was being overdone. He said:

"The United Nations in the Pacific are being denied resources for their total war effort which are invaluable to them, and resources are being reserved by Japan for building up her capacity not only to wage war, but to resist an offensive."

Now, into the clouded Pacific atmosphere, is injected the personable but preposterous Flynn. He is named to replace a distinguished career diplomat, Nelson T. Johnson.

It will be for the Senate to decide what effect upon our delicate Pacific relations the confirmation of the Flynn appointment would have.

We are realistic enough to know that, in a Senate where Democrats outnumber Republications 57 to 38, such confirmation is not only possible, but probable.

We are idealistic enough to hope, almost to trust, that straight partisan voting will not be the rule in this issue that is so much deeper than the small, smelly scandal of the paving blocks, although that is the incident which gives it its drama and symbol.

In any event, the Senate decision should be by roll call, and for the record.

The constituents of every Senator are entitled to know his decision in the "affaire Flynn."

"DEAR EDDIE"

The President's nomination of Edward J. Flynn, retiring chairman of the Democratic National Committee, as Minister to Australia is bound to come in for sharp challenge on the floor of the Senate. We hope it will be rejected. In this way two services will have been gained: The President will have discharged his political debt and the country's dignity will have been sustained. There is little to add about the Bronx boss to what we have already said. It was in keeping with Mr. Flynn's irregular conduct that he himself should have been the first to announce the nomination.

THE GREAT GAME OF POLITICS—IN WAR AS WELL AS PEACE, PUBLIC CAN REFUSE TO TOLERATE QUESTIONABLE POLITICAL APPOINTMENTS

(By Frank R. Kent)

It is the White House thesis, concurred in and supported by all the administration spokesmen, that it is extremely reprehensible to point out that so far from rising above partisanship and politics in the conduct of the war, the President is consistently mindful of politics and his New Deal aides are using the war as a screen behind which to play their New Deal political game.

It is a shocking thing that this should be so but the proof is overwhelming. Nor is the performance rendered more palatable by the effort to make it appear that all protests are partisan and unpatriotic. Apparently this administration wants support of its war policies to include freedom to do, without comment or criticism, exactly what it pleases in domestic affairs.

The effrontery of this attitude is supreme. It assumes that the people as a whole are boobs, who, because we are engaged in a great war, must abandon their own sense of right and wrong and accept the idea that Mr. Roosevelt's every act is commendable.

SILENCE OFFERS NO CURE

A more nationally stultifying notion could hardly be advanced; nor one better calculated to weaken our fiber as a people in this great struggle.

Instead of silent acquiescence to the acts of this administration—instead of accepting them as something that should not be mentioned because we are in a war and Mr. Roosevelt is Commander in Chief—instead of that, these things should be exposed and expounded, denounced, and condemned, until those responsible for them cease doing them and an end is made to this sordid political maneuvering in, perhaps, the most serious period of our history.

No other course can be justified. To permit these things to pass without protest is unintelligent, unwholesome, and against the national interests. Take, for example, the occurrences of the last few days. The country had hardly ceased applauding the President's really good speech an the progress of the war when he stepped down from the lofty plane upon which that was delivered to a level low enough to permit him to name Edward J. Flynn, the New York politician, Minister to Australia.

Mr. Flynn, whose paving-block experiences made unfeasible his retention as chairman of the Democratic National Committee, is thus—if the Senate confirms him—to succeed an outstanding career diplomat as the President's personal representative to a sensitive nation whose friendship is of very great importance to us.

OTHER POLITICAL DOINGS

The inexcusable nature of this appointment of a man without any known qualification for such a post, is further aggravated by the news that, through presidential influence, an important post in the War Department is to be conferred upon Charles Poletti, former lieutenant governor of New York and for some 20 days acting Governor in the gap between Gov. Herbert Lehman's resignation and Thomas E. Dewey's inaugural.

Mr. Poletti is another New York politician who distinguished himself in those 20 days by releasing from jail an unprecedented number of criminals, among them a labor thug, whom he pardoned without consultation with either presiding judge or prosecuting attorney.

In addition, Mr. Roosevelt, as other Presidents have done, recently has provided jobs for various "lame duck" Representatives and Senators defeated in the last election. These are not particularly creditable, though not bad enough to cause concern or call for criticism. But the Flynn appointment is without excuse or defense.

Here, this politician, replacing a man with a fine record and conceded ability, is given an important post in an Allied country where our interests are vital and our relationships delicate—a post for which he is totally unfitted and to which he has no claim. The Senate cannot do anything about the Poletti appointment, but it can about that of Mr. Flynn.

Support of the war and loyalty to the President's foreign policies ought not to include tolerance of such a selection as this. Rejection by the Senate would be beneficial to this country, an act of friendship for Australia and helpful to the President, in that it might convince him that he cannot, with impunity, follow the noble words of a fine speech with such ignoble acts.

TODAY IN WASHINGTON

(By David Lawrence)

FLYNN APPOINTMENT HELD CONTRARY TO WAR INTERESTS

WASHINGTON, January 12.—President Roosevelt has made one of those unfortunate mistakes in judgment which he probably didn't realize would not only do a distinct disservice to the war effort but would complicate the fulfillment of the lofty aims for a better world when peace comes.

Mr. Roosevelt has undertaken to pay off political obligations in the midst of the most critical period of history, when international relations are delicate and the Nation is asked to furnish to the war effort its best energies. The President has given away the post of Minister to Australia—a country in the active theater of war—to a politician.

If the appointment of Edward J. Flynn was approved by the Department of State, then the prestige of Secretary Hull and everybody connected with the Department must necessarily suffer. If it wasn't approved by the Department of State, then the President is disregarding the many years of painstaking work that has been done by men in the diplomatic service to keep politics out of our foreign embassies.

RELATIONS ARE DELICATE

It has happened in peacetime, of course, that Republican Presidents have paid off big campaign contributors with diplomatic appointments, but the new dealers have never been anxious to use precedents of the "wicked Republicans" to chart their own course here. And in the middle of war, it is to be presumed that political obligations are subordinated to the Nation's broader interests, such as, for instance, winning the war.

The matters at issue at this time between the Australian Government and the United States Government are of a delicate nature. There are many people here who feel that there should be a closer understanding between the two countries and that the task of bringing Australia and America into better relationship is of such delicacy that only the ablest diplomat in America should be chosen.

There are many diplomatic representatives who are on the Government pay roll already and are back here because the countries to which they were accredited, have been conquered by the enemy in this war. There is Ambassador Grew, for instance, who knows the Pacific situation intimately. It is puzzling that the President shouldn't have selected a man of Mr. Grew's intellectual stature and diplomatic experience to go to Australia.

The problems as between America and Australia have for reasons of forbearance been touched upon lightly by the press in the hope that behind the scenes such things might be worked out, but when Mr. Flynn is asked to go to Australia, the appointment is no compliment to the great nation in the South Pacific.

OBSTACLE TO NATIONAL UNITY

It is not so much the man chosen but the attitude of the President toward an important diplomatic appointment in the midst of war which shakes confidence. There are altogether too many people in America who belonged to the isolationist school of thought before Pearl Harbor and who think Mr. Roosevelt is more interested in third terms and fourth terms and in personal ambition than in keeping the war effort free from all political taint. These isolationists found their ranks swelled in the last congressional election by many who felt that the President was not administering the war restrictions on a fair basis and that there was too much special privilege and too much politics in his New Deal set-up.

These charges now will be given added weight as the antiadministration elements which do not believe in Mr. Roosevelt's postwar program point to his misuse of public power during the war as proof of what might be expected afterward.

The biggest obstacle to national unity has been the charge that the present administration will seek to use the war powers for political purposes. Appointment of the Democratic national chairman to be Ambassador to Australia with undefined jurisdiction, probably including other areas, is good news for the opponents of American participation in post-war arrangements and bad news for those who believe in an international organization to maintain peace. It is not the kind of news that the troops and sailors fighting for America will understand. "Politics as usual" is not a good slogan for wartime and Mr. Flynn would spare the President much embarrassment if he declined the appointment.

POLITICAL DEBT SEEN CATCHING UP WITH ROOSEVELT IN CASE OF FLYNN—MARK SULLIVAN SUSPECTS PRESIDENT MAY HAVE MADE APPOINTMENT WITH "SOUR FACE" AND ONLY BECAUSE "CREDITOR" PRESSED HIM HARD

(By Mark Sullivan)

WASHINGTON, January 12.—About the appointment of Mr. Edward J. Flynn to be Minister-Ambassador to Australia, the momentary question is, Will the Senate confirm him? The practically universal judgment of thoughtful persons is that refusal of the Senate to confirm would be a tonic to the national spirit, a relief to the State Department and the Diplomatic Service, and a help to the morale of Government servants generally. It is a fair guess that it might also be a relief to President Roosevelt. In making the appointment, Mr. Roosevelt is paying a political obligation—and there are signs that he pays with a sour face and only because the creditor pressed him hard. Last July there was a story that Mr. Flynn was to be made Ambassador to Mexico. Early publication of the story led to such protest, including from inside Mexico, that Mr. Roosevelt got a 6-month extension on his debt. Whether the Senate will confirm Mr. Flynn is the question that momentarily rages. But the more permanent aspect of the Flynn appointment is the light it throws on the political situation in which Mr. Roosevelt now finds himself in a long swing tide of American politics. This is important as respects the Presidential politics of 1944 and for some years after.

THE HAGUES AND THE NORRISES

Mr. Flynn is a type, a politician of the big cities, his practically lifelong career that of officeholder in New York. And Mr. Roosevelt is so involved with him and the background he reflects that it is necessary to give him a diplomatic post for which he is inappropriate. The appointment is made not only because Mr. Flynn wants it as reward. It is made also for the effect on leaders of other big-city machines—upon whom Mr. Roosevelt feels it necessary to make an impression of living up to his political obligations. The Flynn appointment is made in the same spirit in which last July Mr. Roosevelt appointed a Federal judge to please the leader of the Jersey City political machine, Mr. Frank Hague. About that appointment, New Deal Senator George W. Norris, of Nebraska, said the appointee "is a pawn of the greatest political machine in the United States. He is a Hague nominee."

Mr. Roosevelt's principal political support is now composed mainly of two groups not only diverse but fundamentally opposed—the hard-boiled Hagues and the star-eyed Norrises. Utterly opposed to each other, they unite in supporting Mr. Roosevelt. He holds the Hagues and Flynns by patronage, the Norrises by idealistic policies.

In the beginning and until recently Mr. Roosevelt had a third group, the Midwest farmers. But in the congressional elections last November he lost them disastrously. In 12 Midwestern States, out of a total of 128 Members of the House the Democrats elected only 25, the Republicans 103. In those Midwest States, in the country, and in Congress, Mr. Roosevelt has lost the farm and small-town rural vote. If a survey of last November's vote were made by counties it would probably be found the Republicans carried 80 to 90 percent of the counties (outside the solid South). The counties carried by the Democrats were mainly those containing big cities, such as the counties composing New York.

LABOR FOLLOWING MAY SHIFT

The groups remaining with Mr. Roosevelt—the big-city machines and the ardent New Dealers—overlap the labor vote. As long as Mr. Roosevelt had these and the farmers, too, he was triumphant and he was master. With the farmers gone it is doubtful—if, indeed, there is any doubt at all—whether he can continue triumphant in 1944. And when he is no longer triumphant it is doubtful if he is master of the groups who still give him support. Today it is a question whether he leads them or follows them, commands them or obeys them. He feels obliged to give to a city political leader a diplomatic appointment going counter to his sense of fitness.

The relation between Mr. Roosevelt and the labor leaders has become much the same. The labor leaders are supposed to be his following, and because of what he has done for them they ought to be. But as of today the labor leaders do not do what Mr. Roosevelt wishes. On the contrary, they embarrass him, go counter to his policies, resist the agencies he has set up to handle labor relations. As respects the labor leaders, Mr. Roosevelt is now in a position in which to hold them, he is called upon to yield more and more.

THE POLITICAL MILL—FLYNN'S APPOINTMENT TO AUSTRALIAN POST ATTACKED ALONG A WIDE FRONT

(By Gould Lincoln)

The appointment of Democratic National Chairman Edward J. Flynn to be United States Minister to Australia was the political sensation over the last weekend and it promises to remain in the limelight for another week or two. The Republicans began shooting at Mr. Flynn the moment he made known the coming appointment at his office in New York. They are demanding a thorough hearing before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee—which probably means delving again into the now cause célèbre of the Belgian blocks, formerly owned by the city of New York but which were used to improve Mr. Flynn's country home.

As a matter of fact, 2 grand juries in New York have gone into that matter and have exonerated Mr. Flynn, who was away from home at the time the blocks—some 8,000 of them—were placed in his garden by city labor. According to Mr. Flynn, when he got back and found out about the improvement he insisted upon paying for work which had been done.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee, its chairman, Senator CONNALLY of Texas, says, will meet Friday. It may decide what shall be done about the case of Mr. Flynn at that time. In view of the fact that Mr. Flynn has to be in Chicago the following Monday to attend a meeting of the Democratic National Committee, it is not likely, Senator CONNALLY said, that Mr. Flynn will be heard by the committee until some time next week, if the committee determines to hear him.

Under date of January 7, Mr. Flynn wrote Senator CONNALLY a letter in which he said he knew of the appointment which was to be made and declared himself in favor of a thorough investigation if anyone brought any charges against him. Mr. CONNALLY made the letter public late yesterday. Obviously, Mr. Flynn had some idea that Senators would go gunning for him as soon as the appointment became known. It was not until January 8, last Friday, that Mr. Flynn told the press that the President was sending his nomination to the Senate to be Minister to Australia.

WELCOMES INVESTIGATION

Mr. Flynn said in his letter to Senator CONNALLY that there was nothing in his past life to fear and that he would welcome a full hearing, if any charges or criticism were leveled at him.

Senator BRIDGES, Republican, of New Hampshire, lashed out at the Flynn appointment in the Senate yesterday, dubbing the newly appointed Minister "Paving Block Flynn." He suggested, during the course of his remarks, that Mr. Flynn was seeking to put a long distance between himself and the new Governor of New York, Thomas E. Dewey, with the idea of keeping out of range of any investigation Governor Dewey might undertake.

Mr. Dewey, during his campaign for election as Governor last fall, speaking in the Bronx, where Mr. Flynn has been Democratic leader since 1922, said there had been a time when any Republican visiting the Bronx was naturally expected to attack the Democratic boss. He added, "But it is no longer necessary. Everybody knows about him now."

At that time it was rumored that Mr. Flynn was to be sent as Ambassador to Mexico, and Mr. Dewey's comment was: "The people of Mexico have more to worry about him than have the people of New York. What a strain on the good-neighbor policy." Mr. Dewey, when questioned about the Flynn appointment to Australia, said he would stand on what he had said in his Bronx speech last October.

Mr. Flynn has been Democratic national chairman since "Jim" Farley stepped out of that office in the summer of 1940, after the latter had split with the President over the third term candidacy. Mr. Roosevelt was elected in the campaign of 1940, over which Mr. Flynn presided, although the margin of Mr. Roosevelt's victory was much less than it had been in 1932 and 1936.

The National Capital is agog over the President's reasons for sending Mr. Flynn to Australia. Australia is in the Pacific war theater in a big way. It is in Australia that Gen. Douglas MacArthur has been placed in command of the United Nations forces. And Gen. Douglas MacArthur—without any effort on his part—whose name has been repeatedly used as a possible, or even probable, Presidential nominee in 1944. To the politician it might occur that Mr. Flynn's trip to Australia was for the purpose of keeping an eye on General MacArthur. This may be unfair to the President, General MacArthur and Mr. Flynn—but is being said in some quarters.

CONFIRMATION SEEN

Despite the roars from the Republicans, it is likely that the Democratic majority in the Senate will finally confirm the nomination of Mr. Flynn—that is, unless a hearing should reveal anything damaging, which Mr. Flynn insists it will not.

It's a poor system which places men in high posts in the American diplomatic system who have had little or no experience in foreign affairs. Mr. Flynn, however, is just another of those cases. Diplomatic posts have been the reward of political service—or contributions of one kind or another—for years and years in this country. The number of career men among the United States ambassadors and ministers is on the increase, fortunately.

Mr. Flynn's successor as Democratic national chairman will be Postmaster General Frank C. Walker, who has a host of friends on Capitol Hill as well as throughout the country. Mr. Walker will be elected at the meeting of the national committee which has been called for Monday. He was at one time treasurer of the national committee.

There has been talk of employing an executive director of the national committee—but it does not seem likely now. The job of the new chairman will be to raise money to keep the national headquarters in operation during the next year and a half, and to help pay off any debts of the committee. If he has an efficient finance committee, the chairman can leave the job largely to it. Presumably, however, the chairman will seek a publicity director for the committee to take the place which was occupied so long by Charles Michelson, who resigned not long ago. It will be a tough job duplicating Mr. Michelson.

CASE OF ED FLYNN

(By Raymond Clapper)

In this Ed Flynn case, I find myself sputtering not so much at Flynn as at Roosevelt. He's the one who ought to know better, and who does know better.

I don't believe the gossip that the President wanted a trusted politician in Australia to keep an eye on General MacArthur and watch for anything that looked like 1944 Presidential politics. Ed Flynn wanted to be an ambassador and Mr. Roosevelt undertook to make him one.

It was not surprising that Ed Flynn wanted a diplomatic post. He was eager to take almost anyone that the President would offer. Mr. Flynn has been beaten around in the paving-block affair. His stretch as chairman of the Democratic National Committee was marred by the constant reiteration of the charges despite the fact that two grand juries considered them and returned no indictments.

Quite understandably, Mr. Flynn wanted the kind of vindication and prestige that come from a diplomatic appointment. It would mean a lot to his family. Diplomatic life carries a glamor of distinction, or so the movies would lead one to think. The New York politician wears a morning coat and a high hat on special occasions, and he looks with awe on a craft in which, the movies suggest, such are the working clothes. It was the most natural thing in the world that Ed Flynn should ask the President to fix him up with a diplomatic job.

But it is difficult to understand why Mr. Roosevelt should send Mr. Flynn to Australia. True, our Minister there is an old career man, Nelson Johnson, who has been in the foreign service 35 years and is ready to retire.

But Australia is a ticklish spot right now. The Government there hangs on by a majority of one. It is anti-Churchill. Australian politicians play a game of complaining frequently about inadequate aid from the United States. There have been strikes and other instances where the cooperation was not all that was wished.

General MacArthur has conducted himself with discretion in a most delicate situation, when it would have been so easy for such a spectacular figure to stick his neck out to the disadvantage of our mutual interests. Mr. Flynn himself broke the proprieties to announce his own prospective nomination. That is in itself a sufficient indication that he is likely to have trouble finding his way around in such a delicate and complicated situation as exists in Australia.

And it is unwise anyhow to be using the diplomatic field as a place for burying politicians, especially now when our relations with other governments are becoming more complex than they ever have been. We are entering a new period in our foreign relations and we shall need the very best technicians at all contact points.

I don't subscribe to the idea that no laymen should be appointed to our diplomatic posts and that everything should be left in the hands of career men. The professionals are needed in all missions to handle the technical work. But sometimes they are too restricted in their interests, and lacking in that political sense or feeling for the forces that may be surging around them.

Almost invariably they are tied in with the reactionary groups wherever they may be, because they play with rich people, and they are apt to be toadies. Yet a man like Joseph E. Davies, a filthy-rich capitalist, can go into Communist Russia as Ambassador and get on better than anyone else we ever had there. He had a shrewd judgment of what was going on. He sensed the things that career men sometimes muff.

So the argument against Mr. Flynn isn't that nobody but career Foreign Service men should be appointed to be head of missions. The point is that when you shove a layman into one of those spots he ought to be very, very good indeed, a man of distinct achievement and one commanding respect in his own field—a man like Governor Lehman, for instance, who is better equipped to do the relief and rehabilitation work better than any career Foreign Service officer.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the Senator from New Hampshire, in this calm and temperate exposition of his views, has made a very distinct contribution to the Committee on Foreign Relations. The committee will meet tomorrow, and we hope to perform our duty. We have been told by several Senators—notably the Senator from New Hampshire—what our duty is. The Senator from Maine is also willing to make his contribution.

I feel that I speak for the whole committee when I say that the Committee on Foreign Relations will try to do its duty as the facts will justify. The distinguished Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] are members of the committee, and the Senator from Maine is likewise a member. There are very distinguished and very useful minority members on the committee, and if any member of the committee should show any willful disposition to err, I am sure that some of those Senators would hold up the green light and warn us, and not let us commit grievous errors and legislative crimes. We shall try to handle this case in the best way we know of. We did not appoint Mr. Flynn, nor have we expressed the view that we would not let him be confirmed in advance of a hearing.

In the days when I was practicing law I was always suspicious of a juror who would send word that if we would get him on the jury, he already had his mind made up. I would never trust that kind of a juror, because I was afraid he had sent word to the other side to the same effect. I do not like to decide cases on the sidewalk, or in the cloakroom, or even in the newspapers. When great newspaper columns are glaring at you there is a temptation to try to swell up and fill out. I do not like to try cases in that way.

I may have the wrong idea. I used to be just an ordinary country lawyer, and I always felt that I had better luck when I tried cases in the courthouse. We had a record there, and could take an appeal if necessary. But I never did like to try cases at the blacksmith shop, or in the livery stable. The livery stable was a favorite place in the old days for trying a lawsuit. There one could "cuss" all he pleased, and spit tobacco juice on everything, and give everybody hell, without any proof except his own prejudice, his own predilections, or what Bill Jones said that Henry Johnson said that old man Jenkins said, to the effect that so and so was something.

I hope we can try this case in the regular way. I welcome the Senator from Maine. I have very great respect for the Senator from Maine, and a fondness for him. I assure him now that the members of the committee are going to try to do our duty, whatever it may be.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. Certainly; I never can resist the Senator from Maine.

Mr. BREWSTER. I appreciate the very generous comment of the Senator from Texas, and I am very sorry that, as I conceive, he misconstrued my very well-meant remarks, because I thought I made it very clear in the beginning that I was not presuming to either prejudge the case or to instruct the Committee on Foreign Relations as to its duty.

Mr. CONNALLY. We all appreciate instruction.

Mr. BREWSTER. I should never presume to instruct the Senator from Texas as to his duty in anything, because of his very much longer experience and his very acute intellect.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BREWSTER. My remarks were rather addressed to my good friend from our neighboring State, the Senator from New Hampshire. I was seeking to call attention to the fact that in his emphasis on Mr. Flynn's rather negative virtues it should not be presumed that affirmative qualifications are not required. I was not at all meaning to prejudge the case.

Mr. CONNALLY. I accept the statement of the Senator from Maine. I realize the close kinship between New Hampshire and Maine. Maine has sent many emigrants into New Hampshire, having controversies with them in past years over boundary lines, and questions of that kind. I can appreciate the warm sympathy that exists, and his anxiety not to see the Senator from New Hampshire get off on the wrong tack.

Mr. President, I am just as anxious as are these Senators that the Senate should perform its duty and that the committees should perform theirs; but under the Constitution the Senate consists of 96 Members, not merely one Senator, and no one Senator has ever yet been given the responsibility of taking care of the consciences and the responsibilities and the duties of the other 95. Occasionally a Senator tries to do that, but in my short and uneventful career as a Senator I have never seen it work.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I should be very glad to turn over to the distinguished Senator, the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, this stolen paving block if he would like to have it as an exhibit in the committee.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I am surprised that the Senator from New Hampshire would allow himself to be put into the position of being in possession of stolen property. [Laughter.] He should see the district attorney, not the Senator from Texas. I am not in criminal practice.

Mr. BRIDGES. I think the Senator may be in criminal practice before he gets through with the hearing.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me say a word further to the Senate. The Senator from New Hampshire is welcome to come before the Committee on Foreign Relations when it meets. I would rather he would not approach me in the corridor or in the hall and insist on my taking his stolen paving block; but if he desires to come before the Committee on Foreign Relations tomorrow, we will hear him, and we will look over anything he may bring with him.

THE CIVILIAN CONTRIBUTION TO THE WAR

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, in the stress and strain of an all-out struggle, of total war, we are constantly looking, and properly so, with great concern toward the fighting fronts, and to heap our rightful praise and recognition upon those who have distinguished themselves in the actual fire of combat. It is indeed fitting and necessary that we should do this, for the sacrifices which those gallant fighting men are making in this great struggle are far above our poor power to repay or to emulate.

But oftentimes in our great concern over the ebb and flow of the battle line, we are prone to forget our tireless and patriotic soldiers on the home front, the thousands of men and women who comprise the civilian effort behind the war, and who devote untold hours of conscientious effort to their jobs—jobs which are the backbone of our civilian and military machinery, jobs which are the fundamental essentials of a full and unimpeded national war effort. I speak of that vast army of civilian soldiers who comprise our selective service boards, our civilian defense organizations, and our war rationing committees.

There has been no greater example of unselfish service in our war effort than that which has been exhibited by our many draft boards, their appeal agencies, legal advisers, and employees. Overcoming almost insurmountable difficulties, they have performed well that Herculean task of registering and classifying millions of their fellow citizens, and they have effectively carried out all the numberless details which have resulted in the final induction of the millions of registrants who now comprise our powerful and ever-growing Army. That the functions of these boards are being carried out with but a minimum of public complaint is in itself evidence of the fine work being done by these very important agencies of the war effort.

The civilian defense organizations throughout the country are also performing an important and vital function in the war program, for it is this group of loyal, well-trained civilian soldiers which is standing by 24 hours out of every day, prepared for any emergency, alert and ready should the enemy strike, and guarding the Nation against the attempts of saboteurs who would spread demoralization either by rumor or by action.

The inspiring work which this organization very recently performed in combating the raging floodwaters of the Ohio River will never be forgotten by that vast multitude of citizens who were rendered homeless and shaken by that great tragedy. The work which these organizations performed under the most adverse conditions was truly magnificent and worthy of every praise.

Another important adjunct to the prosecution of the war lies in the war-rationing committees which can be found in every neighborhood of our vast country. These committees are charged with the very difficult and at times thankless task of seeing to it that the wartime commodities are fairly and efficiently rationed, and that the maximum constructive use is made of all commodities. The importance of their function becomes increasingly apparent with the steady inclusion of more and more articles on the list of rationed goods.

The cooperative and coordinated activities of these groups represent the very heart and fiber of America's civilian war program, and the importance of these activities must never be lost sight of. We must remember that the thousands of people who comprise these organizations serve largely without compensation, that they devote great portions of their time and talent to the common cause, and that they, like all true Americans, are performing their patriotic services in an efficient, if unappreciated and uncompensated manner.

Mr. President, these are no easy tasks, no honorary nor pleasurable callings. These are vital and sometimes disheartening chores. There is no great joy, no unbounded enthusiasm, in deciding whose mother's son or whose child's father shall be sent into this raging maelstrom of military combat. There is no great pleasure in trying to explain to the American people the need for wartime rationing, and the profound necessity for using all commodities sparingly and wisely. Neither is it a pleasant thing to have heaped upon one's head all the wrath and criticism of a disgruntled and caustic public whose nerves are frayed and whose tempers are inflamed because of the mass of bureaucratic red tape and hopeless inefficiency which emanate from Washington. Neither is it a particularly enticing prospect to undergo months of detailed and careful training in any number of vital subjects, and then to go out and try to encourage the active cooperation of an all too lethargic public where such matters as air-raid precautions, fire drills, mock invasions, and like activities are concerned.

Mr. President, these are vital activities, and they are being performed effectively and efficiently by the many thousands of our workers who comprise these organizations. We must bear in mind also that the vast majority of these people receive no compensation whatsoever. They give willingly and freely of their time; they devote untold effort to their labor; yet rarely do they receive even so much as a kind word. More often than not they are subjected to all manner of criticism and censure. But, despite all these things, despite the fact that they remain unrecognized, uncompensated, and uncited, they continue in their vital work.

We have made reasonable provision for the compensation and recognition of our soldiers on the fighting fronts; we have made similar provision for recognition and compensation for our soldiers on the production line; but the appalling fact remains that we have provided nothing even by way of recognition, much less compensation, for these civilian-soldiers who are contributing so much to the preservation of America.

Mr. President, it is my contention and firm belief that we should devise some means—some appropriate medal or certificate of honor—for the recognition of these people. This is the least—the very least—that we can do to convey our appreciation to them, and to make them aware that we do recognize and appreciate the outstanding and commendable efforts which they, as soldiers on the home front, have made and will continue to make in behalf of American security and final victory.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a brief résumé of certain correspondence and communications which have come to my office, and which deal with the important matter about which I have just spoken—the real democracy of this glorious Republic on the home front at work during war.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

OFFICE OF CIVILIAN DEFENSE

In Pennsylvania alone there is a total of 582,000 certified members in the defense corps, quietly performing their varied tasks day in and day out, with no thought of reward or compensation other than the satisfaction of knowing that they have kept the faith at home while their sons and brothers are laying down their lives on foreign soil.

France was without any protective service of this kind, and when the unprecedented type of warfare was visited upon her, we all know the quick result. England, organized 2 years before the start of actual hostilities, presented a far different picture. And so, here in the United States with the broad and firm foundation of civilian defense already established and serving us so well, we should encourage continued vigilance and the expansion of these services. Even though we know that victory is certain to be achieved, we cannot relax; we must redouble our efforts. Our enemies, too, will know that ruin and death are fast and inevitably closing in. Typical of snakes and rats when cornered, who can say in what ways they will attempt to strike us at home in their maniacal desperation and all-consuming hatred?

RATIONING

Three weeks after Pearl Harbor businessmen throughout the country were summoned to the offices of the mayors and burgesses of their home communities and asked to volunteer to serve on ration boards in the localities in which they lived. The ration board set-up roughly approximated that of the draft boards that were already functioning.

The work, they were told, would entail only a few hours a week. No appropriation had been made, so that office space, stenographic help telephones, stationery, etc., would have t be paid for by the members of the prospective rationing boards. Almost without exception these men consented to undertake the task set before them.

Since that time, you all know how the work of these boards, now designated as the War Price and Ration Board, has multiplied. The few hours per week has now increased to a minimum of 24 hours service at the board headquarters, with many additional hours of homework and study devoted to studying the multifarious regulations, changes of procedure, and instructions that emanate several times a week from Washington.

Members of the rationing boards are now required to check upon commodities that intimately affect the lives of their families and neighbors. If they do their jobs well, the best they can hope for is an absence of censure. They are harassed night and day, threatened, cajoled, and abused.

But I very strongly feel that our Federal Government, which has so much talent and time to devote to preparing complicated questionnaires and regulations for the rationing boards to administer, might take a little time off to give the members of these boards some concrete recognition of the patriotic service they are rendering. Some kind of commission should be conferred upon these men and women that they could treasure in later years as evidence that their Government recognizes and appreciates the sacrifice they have been making to insure our ultimate victory.

SELECTIVE SERVICE

The members of the draft board are citizens taken from every walk of life who have the rather unpleasant duty to perform of deciding which of their fellow citizens and neighbors shall be called to serve the country.

The employees of the board have been faithful from the time the Selective Service System was instituted. They do not know the meaning of holidays and very few Sundays are their own. In most localities, inductions are held early in the morning with the result that the employees arrive at their offices often at the hour of 6:30 and they then stay for meetings of the board which are held at least twice a week and often last until midnight.

Without this unselfish service which has been exhibited by the draft boards, Government appeal agents, legal advisers, and employees, it would have been impossible to carry out the functions of the Selective Service System and we would not now have in our armed forces the millions of our fellow citizens who are at present fighting for America on all parts of the globe.

PERSONAL STATEMENT

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, recent years have witnessed an abundance of charges leveled against men in public life. This is true concerning those who have entertained one view on international and domestic problems as well as those entertaining opposite views. One in public life learns to "take it" and to endure endless criticism; but there perhaps come times to all of us when we reach the saturation point. Through the years I have ignored many false accusations, being able to sense that to pause and give answer to obvious falsehoods would be only to waste much time and energy. In some instances I have been later made to wish that I had answered at the time the charges were made, finding here and there someone who has accepted the charge as fact simply because the charge was not answered.

Since that fateful day in December, in 1941, I have read endless charges, most unfair in their conception, most bitter and prejudiced in their presentation, starting with certain published accounts of an address I was delivering at the very hour when the Japanese were attacking Pearl Harbor. I have tolerated endless criticism and charges rather than in any degree to contribute to the disruption of the highest degree of unity attainable in this land in meeting the challenge which is ours by reason of the war. But I now come face to face with charges which reflect not only upon me but upon the people I am here to represent, upon my State—North Dakota—and I rise in my place here in the Senate to give answer to those who seemingly are not content with unity, those who will not have unity, if you please, unless unity carries with it the privilege, for them, to deride, berate, and falsely charge those who have not been in agreement with them respecting the conduct of foreign policy and the ways of accomplishing victory.

Before me is a news clipping from the front page of a Sioux Falls, S. Dak., newspaper, under the heading of "Finds Pro-Nazi Sentiment Is Heaviest in Dakotas; Seger, Former Member of Reichstag, Here for Talks." Under this heading I read a most amazing tale, the sponsorship of which could be attributed to no one less than a writer of fiction or a downright liar. The article is a report of an address delivered before a meeting of members of the B'nai B'rith Society at Sioux Falls, S. Dak., an address by one Dr. Gerhart Seger, represented to be a former member of the German Reichstag and a German World War pilot, who allegedly had escaped from a German concentration camp and is seemingly now here lecturing to the American people, and allegedly making a personal survey of all communities in the United States to determine what percentage of German-Americans are pro-Nazi, what percentage are anti-Nazi, and what percentage are "on the fence."

This report of Dr. Seger's address finds him declaring that only in New Jersey is the percentage of Nazi sympathizers greater than in North and South Dakota. He complained that in one South Dakota town the German proprietor of a flower shop refused to wait on him when he recognized the lecturer as an anti-Nazi. Then he went on to say—and I quote what he was quoted as saying in the newspaper report—

> There are 7,000,000 German-Americans in the United States today, and of that number 5 percent are Nazis and another 5 percent are anti-Nazis. That means that there are 350,000 Nazis in the United States and an equal number who are fighting the Nazis. The other 90 percent of the German-Americans are on the fence.

Mr. President, I insist that these charges by Dr. Seger, whoever he may be, respecting the people of the Dakotas, is as baseless, as foundationless, as any charge could possibly be. It sickens me to know that a foreigner, perhaps a refugee, should be left free to make such baseless charges which are not made, and could not be made, by responsible agencies of our own Government and country who have been ferreting out whatever Nazi sentiment there may be in our country.

I resent these charges to whatever degree they might reflect upon that part of the population of North Dakota which is in any degree of German descent. I know these people; I knew them before this Nazi war got under way; I have known them since our involvement in this war; and I know that those North Dakotans of German descent are just as largely loyal to the cause of the United States today, just as helpful in the winning of this war, as any other group of people within my State or any of the other 48 States of the Union. Nazi sympathy of which Dr. Seger speaks simply does not exist. I take great pride at this moment in calling attention to the fact that in the last 2 months my State of North Dakota has oversubscribed its Government bond obligations in greater percentage than is true of any other State of the Union. I am extremely proud of the people of my State, including those of German descent, who threw themselves into this year's agricultural effort in a way and to a degree which brought agricultural production in North Dakota this year to a total far in excess of production in the past, and this in spite of the handicaps and hardships which present-day policies were affording.

Senators are being given at frequent intervals reports by the War Department covering Army casualties by States. I hope I shall not appear out of place if I call attention to the release of January 2 by the War Department revealing casualties by areas and by States. I point out, Senators, that only one State in the Union suffered larger casualty lists than were suffered by my State of North Dakota as of that period. Thirty-six North Dakotans are listed. There were many times that number of heartaches and heartbreaks in my State of North Dakota. As I run through that casualty list I find that at least a third of the names are plainly of German origin—Geiger, Holzworth, Huffstutler, Kohnke, Pflugrath, Stimmel, Vettel, Weigel, and others which I might recite.

Mr. President, I find it in my heart to say, "Damned be any man who dares to rise and say that Americans of German origin in the State of North Dakota are not working, sacrificing, bleeding, and dying in the interests of American victory in this war, on a par with the sacrificing, laboring, bleeding, and dying of any other section of the people." There are moments when I would like to wring the very necks of the agitators and prejudice-builders, who would, if they only could, destroy the unity and the centralness of purpose which have so long possessed Americans and made them contributors to the creation of the greatest, most resourceful, and most enlightened Nation upon the face of the earth. I for one am quite done with standing idly by while some few go forth in the guise of "patriotism" with programs that are insulting and most destructive in their very nature, particularly when this kind reflect upon my State or its people, all of whom are doing just as great a job of helping to win this war as is being done by the people of any other State in the Union.

With that, and while I am on my feet, I shall devote myself to a more personal matter, yet a matter which is to some degree in keeping with the wanton effort I have just demonstrated as intended to destroy confidence in entire communities of people. I have written what I wish to say now, and I follow closely my manuscript, lest I let my feelings carry me away into words and charges that might not be in keeping with the dignity which ought to prevail in this Chamber.

I presume that Senators have all read yesterday's Merry-Go-Round column by Drew Pearson, appearing in the Washington Post. Some Senators may have missed it, since the Post is obviously relegating this Merry-Go-Round feature ever backward and backward in its pages until now it comes within one or two pages of the want-ad pages. But I should hardly be deserving of the respect of my colleagues if I did not rise here and now and give answer to Mr. Drew Pearson's allegation under the heading "Hitler's stooges." In particular, Pearson writes that Senator NYE—

> Has also been active behind the scenes in aiding the appeal of George Sylvester Viereck, convicted for failure to register as a foreign agent and now indicted for sedition.

Mr. President, I label this with a term the meaning of which need not be misunderstood in any mind. It is a deceitful falsehood, frequently referred to as a lie. It was obviously intended to deceive those who would read it. If it was not deliberately a lie on the part of its author, then it is based upon deceitful information, and I wish there might be a way to ascertain the identity of the informant.

Perhaps this is what should be expected of one who deals in lying for profit.

A fortune, I understand, has been accumulated through ability to produce sensation; and when lies are necessary to produce sensation, there seems to be no hesitancy in lying. As a newspaperman it was my training that a lying reporter was the worst challenge to the continued existence of a free and objective press. Honest reporters and honest newspapers must suffer by reflection the opprobrium which Pearson has created for himself, because, after all, he does call himself a newspaperman, which some will insist is the biggest lie he has yet told.

It is to the credit of most newspapers that they want nothing to do with Pearson's Merry-Go-Round. An editor of some importance, who had considered taking on the Pearson column but decided not to do so, once remarked to his staff:

> It is all right to read Pearson for entertainment, but keep in mind that every time he has written about anything we know about personally, he has always been wrong. If he is wrong on the things we have knowledge of, how the hell can we trust him on things we do not know about?

Pearson is a master of the half-truth. When a direct lie does not suit his purpose because it might be too dangerous, he can lie by inference by merely leaving out qualifying remarks and explanations. He is one who could quote from Mein Kampf and make Hitler seem a hero, or quote isolated verses from the Bible and make devils out of the Apostles.

With respect to his charge that I have aided in the appeal of Viereck, I say to my colleagues that there is not the faintest or slightest cause or ground. To one who hates the truth as much as Pearson seems to hate it, what I say here will be without force or effect, of course; but I want to have no seeming will on my part to let his quite direct falsehoods go unchallenged.

With all the force at my command, Mr. President, I insist that there is not the slightest basis for any such charge as Pearson has made and the Post has published. I have talked with Mr. Viereck only once or twice in my life. I have not seen or had any contact with Mr. Viereck in many, many months. On his last visit to my office he was abruptly rebuffed and made to understand that his calls were definitely not welcomed. This happened more than a year before Pearl Harbor. I have had no contact with Mr. Viereck or with anyone else who has even suggested my doing any act that would aid Mr. Viereck in his appeal. I do not know what more I could say to assert emphatically that I have not had the slightest interest in whatever might be the appeal of Mr. Viereck. I cannot conceive what purpose Drew Pearson or any publisher would have in drawing so completely upon falsehood as to warrant such a charge as Mr. Pearson has made.

There are other features about Mr. Pearson's comment in yesterday's newspapers to which I must devote myself for just a moment. Mr. Pearson said that the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] and myself are "working so feverishly for an investigation of the Justice Department and its prosecution of Hitler's stooges in the United States of America." Mr. Pearson goes on to say that the reason for our interest is allegedly that of preventing disclosures involving ourselves, disclosures that are rather certain, allegedly, to develop if ever these conspiracy cases are brought to trial.

Mr. President, I have not the slightest fear of any facts which the approaching trials might produce. Fortunately, even columnists and commentators must be direct and explicit when they are reporting as witnesses in our courts. Innuendo and deception are rather easily met in a court of justice, and facts are a burden only to those who find facts unprofitable.

Speaking of deceptive charges, let me point to the charge now repeated by Mr. Pearson, to the effect that I inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD Nazi propaganda which was printed and sent out under my frank, loaned to the Steuben Society of America. I should like to make the record clear on this matter, now that I am dealing with it.

The Winchells and the Pearsons have often thrown this charge, which is intended to convey the thought that I had inserted in the RECORD something of Nazi origin which had been sneaked into public circulation by alleged "agents" and "sympathizers" with the Nazi cause. Now, what are the facts? Let me state them so that the record may be clear.

One of the finest American citizens it has been my pleasure to know is Mr. Theodore Hoffman, president of the Steuben Society of America, which is made up of a group of Americans, so far as I have been privileged to know them—and my privilege has been large—whose spirit is completely American, and who, I have found, thoroughly detest nazi-ism. I find that it is a matter of record that early in the days of the American Bund, the American Steuben Society put its foot down on this undertaking without mercy, condemned it, and wrote itself off from any possible affiliation with this un-American group. I have great admiration for the Steuben Society of America because I know its purpose has been so emphatically American all the way. The society has been a distinct credit to that great German whom the society honors by naming itself after him, a German who contributed much to the creation of our country.

On April 30, 1941, Theodore Hoffman, the president of this society, delivered an address at Madison, Wis., which I inserted, under unanimous consent, in the Appendix of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, on May 20, 1941. The address was on the subject of Americans of Germanic extraction. I challenge any Senator to read that speech in its entirety and to come to any other conclusion than that which is mine, namely, that this address was worthy of a place in the RECORD, was a credit to the American who delivered it, and that it was anything but an address in sympathy with the cause of nazi-ism. I find Mr. Hoffman saying in that address, among other things, this:

> Ours is a Nation composed of citizens of all countries and no one has a place in our ranks whose allegiance is not wholly to the United States of America.
> We deprecate and disapprove of any exhibition of foreign politics on our shores which can have no other result than to create a feeling of hostility against those who exhibit it and the country which they claim to represent. We resent it as in conflict with the principles upon which our country is founded.

Again, as I scan that address by Mr. Hoffman, which I inserted in the RECORD, I find him saying:

> Americans of Germanic extraction do not want communism, fascism, or nazi-ism, and they do not want British imperialism. They want Americanism.

I suppose this is sordid Nazi propaganda, possibly written by Goebbels or even by Hitler himself.

Mr. Hoffman went on ir his address to recite the aims and purposes of the Steuben Society as being "loyally to support the Constitution of the United States of America by advocating the proper application of its provisions and inculcating the principles underlying true democratic government; to quicken the spirit of sound Americanism; fostering a basic American spirit among all citizens; to aid in maintaining the independence and sovereignty of the United States of America and its freedom from all foreign influence; to establish cooperation among its members in the exercise of their civic duties, and to encourage among them an active participation in every phase of our national life; to promote the welfare and enhance the happiness of its members and their fellow men; to perpetuate itself as a patriotic and fraternal voluntary membership organization and to provide for its government; to guard our political liberty by maintaining an honest equality of citizenship regardless of the birth, origin, or religion of any citizen; to maintain the traditions of our country."

Senators, I submit that this address by Theodore Hoffman of the Steuben Society of America was deserving of a place in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and not only do I have nothing to apologize for in having inserted it in the RECORD, but I say now that I am happy to have been privileged to offer it.

This is the speech which Mr. Pearson and Mr. Winchell would have their audiences believe was Nazi inspired, this speech which was so completely anti-Nazi even to the point of saying so.

Then come Pearson and Winchell with a broader insinuation concerning the manner in which this speech was circulated.

After its printing in the RECORD Mr. Hoffman desired copies of it printed. He paid the very nominal sum that was necessary for printing three or five thousand copies of his speech. These copies were given to him in my frank for the purpose of mailing to such as he chose. Instead of mailing them separately to individual addressees, he distributed some of this print to the officers of local Steuben societies in the country for distribution among their membership. This practice I dare say is one which has prevailed in Congress for many, many more years than I have been a Member of it. But someone—I think I know who—ran with complaint to the Post Office Department, and the Post Office Department made demand upon Mr. Hoffman and the Steuben Society for the payment of postage on whatever part of these three or five thousand copies of his speech had been sent out under my frank. Mr. Hoffman advised me that he did not know exactly how many had been thus mailed, but that in order to be perfectly fair he paid to the Government a postage fee on more items than he knew had been mailed.

Mr. President, I shall not argue here the merit of the demand by the Post Office Department upon Mr. Hoffman for the payment of this postage. It certainly would be subject to debate, but I confine myself at this moment to the assertion that these facts hardly warrant the assertion by Mr. Pearson of yesterday that "Senator NYE has lent his frank to the Steuben Society for which the Steuben Society was fined by the Post Office Department."

Mr. Pearson knows how eagerly some forces tried to "get something" on Mr. Hoffman and the Steuben Society during those days when "smearing" was rampant to a degree that made the program hysterical. He knows that Hoffman and members of his staff were summoned before a grand jury here in Washington and that they submitted themselves and their books and records to closest study, yet no indictment resulted. Mr. Pearson's will to keep up the smear has led him, apparently, to anger not unlike that entertained when Hoffman went to West Point last summer and made the annual award by the Steuben Society. Some folks will not tolerate such a course of action by anyone who has been the subject of their smearing. Once smeared by them one is naturally expected to stay smeared.

I would not deny for one moment that I entertain grave doubts concerning the merit of the charges which have resulted in the indictment of some 30 Americans by a District of Columbia grand jury. To me, as to others in the Senate, there has been representation of alleged practices before the grand jury which left one wondering concerning the issue of personal liberty. I would hold no brief in any quarter for anyone guilty of contributing to the undermining of our defense, or undermining the morale of our armed forces, but I submit that with respect to the indictments returned against most of those involved in this alleged conspiracy they are no more guilty of conspiracy than I am, and have seemingly done nothing more than I and others of us here have done time and time again. Thus I am brought to the conclusion that possibly many of those who are facing trial under these indictments are no more guilty than are millions of other Americans who, prior to Pearl Harbor, were giving voice to their feelings respecting possible involvement in this war. I am driven at moments to feel that the indictment about which we have been reading through these many months is not an indictment of 20 or 30 individuals but is an indictment of 75, 80, or 90 percent of the people of the United States.

I would not want my remarks here to prejudice in any degree the trials which allegedly are about to ensue; but since the question has been raised, as it has been raised by Mr. Pearson, I would not want to seem to be denying that I have considered, and that I have heard others considering, the possible justification for an investigation of the whole proceeding which has brought about the indictments. I would deny, however, that I or anyone of my acquaintance has been "working feverishly for an investigation of the Justice Department and its prosecution of Hitler stooges in the U. S. A."

I have nothing more to say, Mr. President. I appreciate the privilege which has permitted me to rise in my place and defend myself against the outrageous innuendoes and lies which have been so prominent during many months of seeming effort to smear, smear, smear one and all who dared, prior to Pearl Harbor, to differ with policies which some of us felt were policies which could not lead anywhere other than into war.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I am sure that the Senator from North Dakota needs no defense from me or from anyone else. I do not subscribe to the Washington Post. My attention was called to the article written by Drew Pearson only yesterday. My attention also was called to an article in the Washington Post by Dillard Stokes.

First of all, let me say that when I first came to the Senate a newspaper in my State wrote an editorial derogatory to me. I thought about rising in the Senate and answering it. At that time, I was just a young man. I went to the office of the then Senator La Follette, and I showed him the editorial. He said to me, "I would not pay any attention to it. Remember that this man can afford to attack you every day, but you cannot afford to rise in the Senate and attack him every day." Then he said to me, "Remember that, as a Member of the Senate, you cannot afford to get into a contest with the little black animal which has a white stripe up its back." [Laughter.]

I have always remembered that. I have no desire to get into a contest with that kind of an animal today; and that is the kind of an animal, in my judgment, Drew Pearson is. He has not only lied about the Senator from North Dakota, but he has lied about the Secretary of State; he has lied about Jesse Jones; he has lied about the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], and other Senators. If my understanding is correct, the Senator from Maryland wrote a letter to the newspapers of the country in which he called Pearson a liar, and even the Washington Post finally published a retraction of the Pearson story about the Senator from Maryland. Yet this man Pearson goes on the radio once a week, not representing some legitimate business enterprise, but representing some patent medicine—I think it is a cathartic. It is perfectly proper that he should represent that kind of a patent medicine. That is the only kind of an enterprise that would pay him to speak.

But he goes on week after week and week after week spewing forth his venom and lies about anyone and everyone who happens to disagree with him; and we have to permit it in the name of free speech. I am in favor of free speech, and the only reason I ever wrote the letter to the Attorney General was because of the fact that I believed in free speech in America, and I did not want to see it prevented even during the war.

During the last war, when I happened to be a United States district attorney, and hysteria was sweeping over the country and there were demands for the prosecution of everybody who had a German name and everybody who had a Jewish name, and for the prosecution of some Irish societies, I refused to prosecute unless I was furnished with the evidence. Because of that fact I was attacked by the press. Yet, as I look back upon my career in public and private life, there is nothing that I cherish so much as the fact that I was not carried away by the hysteria of those times to use the force of my position to prosecute everybody who did not agree with the views I held.

I read the other day an article in a magazine stating that trials should be conducted in the United States such as were held in Russia when they purged many leaders. That was printed in a magazine called The Jewish Survey. I thought that of all the people in the United States who should be advocating anything of that kind this magazine was the last.

When I wrote a letter to the Attorney General of the United States, I said that, in my judgment, he owed it to himself to investigate the situation that had existed and the rumors which were going around in reference to the handling of the grand jury. When I did that, the Washington Post devoted to me two pages and a half, as I recall, in a Sunday edition. I felt highly honored that they would give me so much space. They intimated that they thought I was honest but I had been misled by a lot of Nazi stooges.

Now this fellow Pearson says that the reason I was interested was because of the fact that I was afraid something might come out about me. Let me say that there is nothing more that can be said about me than has been said. As a matter of fact, there is hardly any name that I could be called that was not applied to me before I came to the Senate of the United States. I came up the ladder of politics the hard way. Anyone who does not know about politics in Montana in the early days does not know what politics is. So it does not bother me, except that I dislike to have it intimated that I entertain any religious or racial prejudice. It so happens that my father was a Quaker, and he taught me never to let racial and religious prejudices enter my mind. I have prided myself that I have never done it, and yet I find some newspapers that know better charging me with having such prejudices. They ought not to make these charges for their own sake, for they are not doing me any harm; the only ones to whom they are doing harm are their own class and their own race.

Yesterday morning a newspaper was handed to me by a young man who formerly worked in my office who called my attention to an article which stated:

Hudson ran an isolationist, anti-British, anti-war propaganda bulletin in Omaha,

Nebr., plying his mailing list with vast flocks of propaganda under the franks of Senator BURTON K. WHEELER (Democrat) and others.

That is just a plain unadulterated lie; there is no other way to express it. Let me show why it is a lie. I have never met Hudson and did not recall any correspondence with him. However, when this statement was called to my attention, I had my files checked and I found therein a letter which I had written to Hudson on July 31, 1941, some 5 months before this Nation was in the war. When I wrote the letter a bulletin which Hudson apparently publishes at frequent intervals was called to my attention. In that bulletin Hudson had informed his readers that apparently I was not his kind of an isolationist, and he suggested in his bulletin that I might have been responsible for making known to the military authorities that speeches of various Senators and Members of the House of Representatives were reaching members of the armed forces.

Apart from that allegation, which concerned me but little, I was disgusted with Hudson's bulletin, which seemed to me to be a vile, un-American propaganda sheet, apparently designed to incite racial and religious hatred. Thereupon I wrote Hudson a letter. I do not expect the Washington Post or Stokes or Drew Pearson will have the honesty of purpose and decency to quote this letter, but I am sure the Members of the Senate will be interested in hearing what I wrote to Hudson on July 31, 1941:

JULY 31, 1941.

Mr. CHARLES B. HUDSON,
Omaha, Nebr.

DEAR SIR: There has just come to my attention your bulletin No. 274, dated July 21, 1941.

I note your reference in the third paragraph on the first page of that bulletin to "spy activities of the two Jews on Senator WHEELER'S staff." Your reference is completely and unequivocally false. If you had followed the facts in connection with the letters from selectees to Senators, you would have known that the facts were not as you portrayed them. Both the Army and the public learned of the origin of some of the telegrams and letters from selectees because copies of the messages sent me and other Senators were also sent to newspapers by the selectees themselves.

I tried to locate a copy of the bulletin to which I have called attention, but I could not find it. Then in my letter I said:

It is true that I have in my employ two Jewish people. I do not employ people because of their race, religion, or creed; I employ people who are capable, honest, and loyal. I do not approve of your attitude, because I deplore anti-Semitism, anti-Catholicism, or any ism which has as its basis the persecution of minorities, whether they be religious, racial, social, or economic minorities. I regard such activities as dangerous to democracies because they strike at the very heart of free democratic government.

Very truly yours,

B. K. WHEELER.

Does anyone think that, after that letter to Mr. Hudson, I sent to him any speeches or other matter to be circulated by him or any mailing list to whom they might be sent?

A newspaper in New York, one of the largest newspapers in that city, called me up and said that the Fight for Freedom Committee had said that I was sending out speeches or circulars and giving them to anti-Semitic organizations. I inquired if the words "anti-Semitic organizations" were used, and was told "Yes." I said, "I can hardly believe that, because it so happens that the young man in my office who distributes and handles all that mail happens to be Jewish himself, and I do not think he is anti-Semitic." The one who called me up said that ought to answer it. Notwithstanding that fact, there is a little group in Washington that seeks to smear every Senator and every Member of the House who does not agree 100 percent with the administration. If they could not smear a man on one charge, they would try to smear him on some other.

If there is any member of the Senate who desires to debate with me my attitude before we entered this war, I am perfectly willing to debate it. I have not any apologies to make for anything I said or anything I did before we entered the war. I want that to go down in the RECORD, and I want it known that that is my position. I was opposed to our getting into this war. I thought we could keep out of it, and I was honest in my conviction. Not only did I myself believe that, but one of the men closest to the President spent some hours with me as late as October 1941, before Pearl Harbor, and said that the President was going to keep out of the war.

Mr. President, we hear much said about unity. Who is it that wants unity? So far as the Senate is concerned, there has not been a man here, Republican or Democrat, who has not said that we want unity and that we want to do everything we possibly can to win the war. I think that every Member of the Senate, Republican or Democrat, regardless of what his views were before the war, has done everything he possibly could to bring about unity in this country. But on the outside, in some of the executive departments, there have been many people, such as Archibald MacLeish, who have gone out and attempted to stir up disunity.

There was a time when the Communists in this country were all for keeping out of war. There was a time when the President denounced Stalin and there was a time when many people were denouncing Communists and saying that the Communists were sabotaging and destroying our industries, and wanted to take over the Government. During that period of excitement, when people were afraid that the Communists were going to ruin the Army of the United States, we passed the 1940 Sedition Act. I did not think it was a good law. I thought it would be misused; but it was enacted. And who opposed it in the House of Representatives? Who do Senators suppose filed the minority report? It was Maury Maverick, and Kvale, of Minnesota.

Maury Maverick is now one of the executives in the departments and he filed a report, which I have here. But since Russia was attacked by Germany, of course, these people have said, "We have to have unity with the Communists." Stalin was not then a dictator, but was a great democrat, and Russia became overnight a democracy, and was no longer a Communist state. I believe we should help Russia—she has done a great job of fighting Hitler.

I always said that, so far as I was concerned, I was in favor of permitting Russia to have the kind of government she wanted, that it was not any of our business if they wanted the sort of government they had set up.

Some distinguished persons talk about isolationists, and denounce them. The first time I ever heard the word "isolationists" was when I read a speech by the President of the United States in which he said, "I am an isolationist." He said, "I am an isolationist to the extent that I want to keep out of war." That is the kind of an isolationist I have been. I wanted to keep out of war.

Let me serve notice on some persons in Washington that if they want to get into a controversy and debate some of these issues I am perfectly willing to debate them; but I am becoming sick and tired of trying to go along and to do everything I possibly can to win the war and then have a lot of snipers peddling out information to some of these columnists. Where do Stokes and the Washington Post get the information which they have been spreading about the evidence in the case, and about what is going to be said about Senators and Representatives? Where did they get the information on which was based the statement published in the Washington Post as to what was taking place in the grand-jury room? How did they get it? If it had been before almost any other district court in the United States they would have been haled before the court and charged with contempt for publishing what was going on and what was said before the grand jury. But here in Washington, nothing was said about it and no action was taken.

As I have said, I do not know any of these defendants. If they are guilty, I hope they will be convicted. I do not agree with one single thing they are charged in the indictment with having said. But whether I agree with them or whether I do not, they are entitled to have a fair trial, by a fair judge, before a fair jury, and by a decent and respectable prosecuting attorney in whom the people of the United States have some confidence, and in whom the Congress of the United States has some confidence.

I did not rise with the intention of speaking so long as I have spoken. I rose merely to brand the statement which appeared in the Post, written by Mr. Stokes, as a deliberate falsehood, and as libelous. I likewise brand what Mr. Pearson said as a deliberate falsehood, when he stated that the reason why I am trying to prevent an investigation or do something else—I do not remember the exact language—is that I am afraid of what is going to come out about me. If the Department of Justice, or if Mr. Meyer, or Mr. Pearson, or anyone else, has anything to bring out about me, I challenge him to produce it, for it cannot be produced.

When a former Governor of New York was told that some politician was against him, he said, "I cannot understand why that man is against me, because I never did anything for him that I can recall." I can understand why Mr. Meyer is against me. Probably it is because of the fact that every time his name came up in the Senate for confirmation, I voted against him.

I could not understand why Drew Pearson was against me, because I did not remember anything I had done for Drew Pearson. Then I happened to recall that when there was an attempt to put him off the air at one time, when I was in the Orient with a group of Senators and Representatives, I was cabled and asked if I would not intercede for him; and I did, and helped to have him kept on the radio at that time.

On another occasion, when he and his partner were about to be thrown off one of the newspaper chains, he and his partner talked to me and I again tried to do something for them. When Pearson's father was appointed to office and was being attacked, again he came to see me, and I went to the support of his father. So I presume that is the reason why this man seeks to do everything he can to try to intimate to the people of the country that I am disloyal, and to try to smear those of us who were opposed to our country getting into the war.

I know some of my colleagues will say, "Why pay any attention to it? Nobody believes him, nobody trusts him, nobody has any confidence in him." I agree that no one in the Senate of whom I know has the slightest confidence in him, no one in the Senate of whom I know has the slightest respect for him, for his truthfulness, his honesty, or his integrity. But one gets weary of a man of that kind, who has access to the radio, speaking over the radio and attacking members of the Government. As I said, he has lied about Jesse Jones, he has lied about the Secretary of State, he has lied about Members of the House of Representatives, and he has lied about Members of the Senate.

Mr. President, the question may well be asked, "Does not such conduct tend to break down the morale of the people of the country? What effect will the dissemination of lies about members of the Cabinet have upon the armed forces?"

Mr. President, while the voice is the voice of Pearson, or the voice is the voice of Stokes, I sometimes wonder whether the hand is not the hand of Esau.

I apologize to the Senate for having taken up so much of its time in saying anything about these two disreputable persons.

ADDITIONAL BILL INTRODUCED

Mr. TYDINGS introduced a bill (S. 416) for the relief of the city of Baltimore, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

CONTINUATION OF AUTHORITY TO INVESTIGATE AIRPLANE ACCIDENTS

Mr. CLARK of Missouri submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 60), which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Resolved, That the authority conferred by Senate Resolution 307, Seventy-sixth Congress, agreed to October 9, 1940, and Senate Resolution 119, Seventy-seventh Congress, agreed to June 28, 1941 (providing for an investigation of airplane crashes), is hereby continued until the end of the Seventy-eighth Congress.

CONTINUATION OF AUTHORITY TO MAKE INVESTIGATION WITH RESPECT TO FUEL IN CERTAIN AREAS WEST OF THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER

Mr. CLARK of Missouri submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 61), which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce:

Resolved, That the authority conferred by Senate Resolution 319, Seventy-seventh Congress, agreed to December 15, 1942 (providing for an investigation with respect to fuel in certain areas west of the Mississippi River), is hereby continued until the end of the Seventy-eighth Congress.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I think there is nothing else to come before the Senate at this time, so I move that the Senate adjourn until Monday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, January 18, 1943, at 12 o'clock noon.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, JANUARY 14, 1943

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God, judge of all men, unto whom all hearts are open and all desires known, be pleased to make Thy presence known throughout the hours of this day. We thank Thee that ours may be the hope which is wrought by the Comforter, the joy of the forgiveness of sin and the grace of faith, full of cheer and gladness. Enable us to throw off all doubt that we may perceive truths of Thy word and all that it signifies. Grant that all goodness may abound, all graciousness, all trust, all zeal, and knowledge.

Blessed Lord, God, do Thou safeguard those influences which are striving in the union of nations for the advancement of civilization, for the enslaved and dying peoples who are begging to exist. May the crimes and the cruelties, the oppression and the suffering of this tragically inhuman war be remembered as the darkest sin of the night. Oh, quicken the pulse of a new day that the world may know that the rise and progress of our Republic is the grandest educational and religious epic that ever came out of the arteries of the historic past. We pray Thee to make us worthy; free us from all vanity, all corroding materialism; all divisive forces, and from every ambition to live unto ourselves; then shall we walk in the light, sharing its radiance with man everywhere. In our dear Redeemer's name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Tuesday, January 12, was read and approved.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

THE WILDCAT COAL STRIKE

Mr. SATTERFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SATTERFIELD. Mr. Speaker, the unauthorized wildcat strike of the hard coal miners in Pennsylvania is an unspeakable affront to the people of this country. While the East is suffering from an acute shortage of anthracite the miners in that State, in defiance of their own leaders' agreement for a week's truce, go on strike primarily because Mr. John L. Lewis' united mine workers convention last October boosted their monthly dues from $1 to $1.50. There is no justification for such walk-out. In the lands of the Axis powers there are no strikes, but here at home, while Uncle Sam is fighting a war for the freedom of Americans, including the coal miners, they let the country down.

The President came before the Congress last week, not as the head of the Democratic Party, but as our Commander in Chief. In that role he warmed the hearts of Americans everywhere. His message was excellent, informative, and helpful. It stressed the importance of continuing the United Nations' wartime cooperation to maintain the peace.

We are now faced with a great fuel shortage and the situation in Pennsylvania is a grave one. It does not affect only that State, it has within it the seeds of our destruction. As a result of this sort of thing we can very well miss altogether the attainment of peace. Down this road lies the distinct possibility of our losing this war. The Commander in Chief has ready at hand a solution employed in World War No. 1 for such an unauthorized strike. In June of 1941, I wrote a letter to the President, calling attention to the manner in which President Wilson successfully dealt with a like situation. Answering a letter which I received from the President with reference to this problem, I wrote again on February 27, 1942, as follows:

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: On June 3 last year I wrote a letter to you in which I called your attention to the method in which President Wilson dealt with the labor problems which beset him in 1917.

In reply to that letter you wrote me that the decision as to whether the drastic powers exercised by President Wilson should be used depended on the particular circumstances of each case and the choice of an appropriate time.

I do not believe that anything has given me greater concern in all my life than the labor situation with which you as the Chief Executive and the Congress have been wrestling for many months. On yesterday the debate in the House was very bitter on the Smith amendment to the war-powers bill. I do not believe I have even seen the membership of the House so worked up. It is my judgment that their reactions truly reflect the intense feelings on the subject by their respective constituencies. All seem to agree that production must not be interrupted and yet, my dear Mr. President, there are interruptions.

Only three agencies can correct this situation, the Chief Executive, the Congress, and the unions themselves. Bossism is firmly entrenched in some of the unions in certain parts of the country, and there is little hope that a remedy will be forthcoming from this group. Those of us who serve in the House and who sincerely desire to correct this situation have time and again been beaten by the majority of our colleagues who are not only adamant against any antistrike legislation for the duration of the war, but strenuously object to any move which would have the effect of disturbing the present status of laws relating to labor.

History will record that upon your shoulders circumstance has placed the heaviest burden ever to be borne by any leader since the beginning of time.

I count myself as one of that number in the House who sincerely desire to assist you and to help you in any way possible. In view of the impasse in the House; and the inability of labor unions to cope with the situation, may I respectfully suggest in reply to your letter of June 11, 1941, that now is the appropriate time to apply the work-or-fight doctrine of Woodrow Wilson.

* * * * *

As I see it, we cannot afford to lose a moment or a single pair of hands. The blood of our boys now slowly dripping soon will be a crimson cascade. Certain it is that those who have reached high upon the shelves of their hearts and cheerfully given their sons will wholeheartedly subscribe to the course—work or fight.

Very respectfully,

DAVE E. SATTERFIELD, Jr.

There are emergencies on the home front which require speedy action. A problem of fuel shortage in the middle of the winter for a people already rationed is one that cannot be solved by legislative enactment. Time is of the essence. The Chief Executive has issued many helpful directives lately. Now is the time, it seems to me, for our Commander in Chief to say to these people:

"So long as you regarded yourselves as indispensable to our war effort and so long as your services in the coal mines of this country were consistent with such an appraisal, well and good; but your conduct in selfishly leaving your countrymen to face the winter without adequate fuel puts you beyond the pale. Unless you continue in the mines pending the settlement of your complaints, your names will be certified to the selection boards in your respective localities and you will be inducted immediately into the armed service of your country."

I have an idea that such action on the part of the President will discourage strikes of this type for the duration.

In a recent issue of one of the newspapers in my home city—Richmond—a leading article announced the growing shortage of fuel oil and urged upon the citizens of Richmond cooperation with local officials of the O. P. A. It occurs to me, Mr. Speaker, that failure on the part of the Government to deal immediately and sternly with the situation in Pennsylvania will beget an understandable indifference on the part of Americans everywhere, for if 20,000 miners are permitted to leave the coal mines on caprice, what earthly hope has the average citizen of securing coal even if his oil burner is converted?

There is a critical shortage in fuel oil. Are we to endure a deliberate creation of a shortage in coal as well? The President, in his letter to me of June 1941, stated that the work or fight order of President Wilson should be used only when careful reference had been made to the particular circumstances of each case and the choice of an appropriate time. I cannot conceive of a situation which provides a more appropriate time, in view of the gravity of our present position and circumstances.

SWEARING IN OF MEMBER

Mr. RICHARD P. GALE appeared before the bar of the House and took the prescribed oath of office.

HELP FOR THE O. P. A.

Mr. OUTLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. OUTLAND. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me there has been a great deal of criticism of some of our bureaus, especially of the O. P. A. All of us have at times joined in that criticism. I should like to suggest however that in addition to criticism we also offer constructive suggestions.

The Director of the O. P. A. in our county, Santa Barbara, in my district has sent me a very constructive list of suggestions. He suggests in the first place a greater amount of funds so that better personnel and more adequate space can be provided. In the second place he asks for a greater degree of decentralization and local authority.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to include this report in an extension of my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

CONGRESS SHOULD USE THE PROCESS OF IMPEACHMENT

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for one-half minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, the time has come for this House to protect itself and the country against the scorn and the abuse of bureaucratic dictatorship by resorting to the process of impeachment.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, I have two unanimous-consent requests to submit: First, to extend my own remarks and include a couple of letters; second, to extend my own remarks and include an editorial from Collier's. This document, Mr. Speaker, is a speech, or an article, written by a Member of this House, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GORE], and I want to place it in the RECORD. It will slightly exceed the limit, but inasmuch as the House does not meet again until Monday, I ask permission to extend my own remarks and include the article notwithstanding.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

THE COAL STRIKE

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SATTERFIELD] a few moments ago outlined very clearly the situation of the country as a result of the coal strike. I live in western New York and want to point out how serious this situation is to the defense industries in the general Buffalo area. Within the past few days I have received protests from war industries, from war workers, from citizens at large, and from members of draft boards. It is my understanding that the mayor of the city of Buffalo has forcibly brought the matter to the attention of the Senators from New York State, and, of course, we all know what the situation of today is.

Draft boards say that they do not feel free to draw men and send them into the service to fight the Huns and the Japs. They want to know whether these miners are Americans. They want us to do something. The demand is made everywhere to do something. If this were a streamlined Congress—and I am sorry it is not—we would do something to pass a simple resolution, and it should be passed nearly unanimously, directing that immediate action be taken.

The President has the power, and the Labor Board has the power. We have an Army of three or four million men. We have plenty of troops in the vicinity of Pennsylvania. The time has come when the President or his Labor Board should take action and, if necessary, send the troops in there the way Grover Cleveland did in 1893.

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include an excellent article on the Speaker of the Seventy-eighth Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MILLS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include an editorial from the Reno Evening Gazette of January 8, 1943.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. SULLIVAN]?

There was no objection.

JAMES AND FRANKLIN ROOSEVELT, JR.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and also to revise and extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LAMBERTSON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I read with interest the announcement this morning of the citation of James Roosevelt, but I have information which came to my attention that he was jerked, without his consent, from Guadalcanal by the Commander in Chief immediately after the marines entered that place, and flown to Los Angeles.

Early in December another son, Franklin, left the battle front of north Africa and, according to an AP story, spent 4 days in a Philadelphia hospital with a slight cold before returning home. Both of these boys were apparently jerked, one from each front.

I challenge anybody to answer me to the contrary—this voice that from back of me here accused us isolationists prior to Pearl Harbor of being ostriches, burying our heads in the sand, afraid to fight—I am asking, Is it true that two sons of the President have been jerked from the battle fronts by the Commander in Chief? Somebody answer me to the contrary, if they know better than I do. There are a million homes in America interested.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 30 seconds.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK]?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, in answer to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LAMBERTSON], may I say that he makes no charges, but he tries to throw out to the country a suspicion. Any such thought is without foundation, and if the gentleman had the courage to make the direct accusation within the rules, I would say that he is making a complete misstatement of the facts. Outside of the House anyone making any such statement I would say tells a deliberate lie.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ROLPH. Mr. Speaker, I have two unanimous-consent requests; first, to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a letter addressed to Senator MURRAY by the California Retail Grocers & Merchants Association, Ltd., and the other request is that when the business of the House and the other special orders have been concluded, I may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the requests of the gentleman from California [Mr. ROLPH]?

There was no objection.

THE ELECTION OF MR. MARION BENNETT, OF MISSOURI

Mr. PLOESER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. PLOESER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. PLOESER. Mr. Speaker, I am sure that both sides of the aisle will take a significant glance at the special election results in the Sixth District of the State of Missouri. This district is normally Democratic by from six to ten thousand votes. The Honorable Phil Bennett was elected during the last term and was reelected for another term shortly before he died. However, his son, formerly his secretary, 28 years of age, was elected by over a 14,000 majority in a total vote of some 54,000 votes last Tuesday, a very definite indication that the people of America are on the march for the return of free government.

The St. Louis Post-Dispatch said editorially on Tuesday of this week:

A MISSOURI DISTRICT IN THE SPOTLIGHT

Has the Roosevelt administration improved itself with public opinion over the low point struck November 3 when a majority of the voters in the country voted for Republican candidates for the House of Representatives? Would an earlier beginning of the African expedition and earlier appointpointment of Food and Manpower Administrators have materially altered the results at the polls?

A partial answer will be provided today in the special election in the Sixth Missouri Congressional District for the seat of the late Republican Congressman, Philip A. Bennett. The candidates are Sam Wear, of Springfield, unsuccessful Democratic nominee last fall, and MARION T. BENNETT, also of Springfield, 28-year-old son of the last occupant of the seat, who was with his father in Washington during the recent session.

Since the total vote will be lower than in November, the main point to watch is whether the Democratic or Republican vote suffers the greatest relative decline. Obviously, the results will report the preferences of only those who go to the polls, but, after all, it is the votes of only those citizens who do go to the polls that count in American elections.

Mr. Speaker, the vote I have just reported to the House is the answer.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH]?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. PLOESER] has just told the House that in a by-election held in his State a few days ago the Republican candidate, Mr. MARION BENNETT, won by 14,000 votes in a district which until 1940 had been consistently Democratic. However, that news and that information was not carried in the interventionist and international press of the East, except for a few lines in the Washington Evening Star. If there had been a by-election in England, where the districts have one quarter the population, the election results would have been carried in every British and most American newspapers. However, when a noninterventionist, following the footsteps of his father, wins by 14,000 in a former Democratic stronghold, it is not mentioned in the papers of the East. If a New Dealer had been elected, Mr. Elmer Davis, or one of the White House secretaries, would have had it announced on the radio here and abroad as a great New Deal victory for Roosevelt's foreign policies prior to Pearl Harbor, and carried in the eastern press. The time has come for the internationalist newspapers to stop trying to fool 100,000,000 Americans who were not interventionists before Pearl Harbor, but who are now doing their part to win the war.

The election of Mr. BENNETT in Missouri last Tuesday, by 15,000 votes, to replace his father in Congress, is an indication of the temper of the American people and that they are not being deceived by New Deal and foreign propaganda of any kind.

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a short editorial on post-war planning.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I have two unanimous-consent requests. One, that on Thursday next I may be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes on the subject of War Guilt Punishment, after disposition of matters on the Speaker's desk and at the conclusion of any special orders heretofore entered. And at this time I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER]?

There was no objection.

THE ARREST OF EDWARD PAGE GASTON

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I read from an article appearing in the Times-Herald of this morning as follows:

Edward Page Gaston, self-styled founder and American director of the World Prohibition Federation, has been arrested on charges of illegally wearing the uniform of a captain of the United States Army, the Department of Justice announced last night.

Advocating the return of prohibition, he has appeared in public in an Army uniform in connection with publicity for his various dry activities.

He has button-holed Members of Congress constantly. He installed himself in the House Office Building, maintained by the taxpayers of the United States, where he set up prohibition propaganda machinery and where he mimeographed and sent forth for several months his prohibition articles, letters, and pamphlets.

It is pertinent to ask who gave this man authority to install himself in the House Office Building and to use Government machines to pound out his prohibition propaganda. It is also pertinent to state that water will always find its own level and the law has finally caught up with this self-styled prohibitionist, Edward Page Gaston.

Perhaps the Anti-Saloon League, the National Prohibition Party, and the International Reform Federation may come forward with some statement concerning Gaston. He was their baby.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I have two unanimous-consent requests; first, to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and to include an editorial; and, second, that I may proceed at this time for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the requests of the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS]?

There was no objection.

THE RATIONING PROGRAM

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I believe sufficient experience has now been derived from the operation of the various rationing programs so that the experience of the local rationing boards should be taken advantage of by the officials in Washington and elsewhere. I should like to suggest two things: First, that in the consideration by Congress of the problems of this whole great and difficult program, new to Americans, particular attention should be paid to strengthening the work of the rationing boards, giving them sufficient staff, equipment, and necessary forms, and insisting that they be given sufficient discretionary authority to deal with their local problems; second, that the officials of the O. P. A. should from time to time, and beginning soon, call to Washington experienced people who have been executive secretaries or chairmen of the local rationing boards, to consult with them about the problems that only members of and workers on the local boards know at first hand.

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an article by James Morgan appearing in the Boston Globe, Sunday, January 10.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts

There was no objection.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an address delivered by our colleague of the Seventy-seventh Congress, William G. Stratton, on the occasion of his inauguration as treasurer of the State of Illinois. I further ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an article appearing in the seventh annual voice of business edition of the New York Sun, by Fred I. Kent, director of the Foreign Exchange Division of the Federal Reserve Board during the last war, entitled "The Alternative to a Post-War W. P. A."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

(Mr. HERTER, Mr. GWYNNE, and Mr. VAN ZANDT asked and were given permission to extend their own remarks in the RECORD.)

Mr. BLACKNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an editorial.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. CANFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an editorial, and I further ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a letter written me by the New Jersey Taxpayers Association.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an address by Gen. C. W. Wickersham last night.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

[Mr. WICKERSHAM addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MANSFIELD of Montana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an editorial from the Helena (Mont.) Independent.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

Mr. PRIEST. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a brief resolution adopted by the General Assembly of the State of Tennessee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. CAPOZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an address delivered by me in cooperation with the Office of War Information, broadcast short wave to the people of Italy.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks and include therein a letter from the Comptroller General and some tables from the General Accounting Office.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

[Mr. LUDLOW addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include a bill which was endorsed by the Order of the Purple Heart of the regular Association of Disabled American Veterans. Also I would like very much to have included in my remarks a bill which I introduced, which is for the rehabilitation of veterans.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CONFUSION FROM WASHINGTON

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Speaker, I bring to the attention of this House at this time a paradox in headlines. I quote from two newspaper articles which appeared in the leading newspapers throughout the country on the same day. One article was captioned "Coffee supply grows, according to Office of Price Administration." The other article was captioned "Not enough coffee for United States, even on cup-a-day basis."

Mr. Speaker, I think it is high time that we do something about ending the clouds of confusion that are blowing out of Washington to the Nation through such conflicting statements that I have just referred to. I think it is high time that the Congress took some action about the maze of unsteady, unreliable, and confusing ideas being projected upon the national scene in such a critical period. In this connection I shall take the liberty of reading a few sentences of a letter which I received from one of the leading manufacturers of my district:

MY DEAR ED: No doubt you will wonder why the people of the United States don't have confidence in any of the orders issued from Washington. First, one fellow comes out with the information that the reason for the rationing of gasoline is not to save gasoline but to save rubber, then they turn around and make the 17 Eastern States save all the rubber for the entire country. Then another fellow comes out and says the rubber situation isn't as bad as it sounds, especially since they are making such a success of synthetic rubber, and then all of a sudden you don't hear anything about it any more.

Now we come to the coffee situation. Out of the Binghamton Press on January 9 I extracted a clipping where it is noted that there isn't enough coffee in the United States even for a cup-a-day basis. Then on Sunday out of the Philadelphia Inquirer I extracted a clipping issued January 9 from Washington to the effect that the Office of Price Administration advised that the coffee supply grows.

How in the devil is anyone in this country going to have any confidence in anything that is said about these restrictions? This would be a good item for you to bring up on the floor sometime when you have your fighting gloves on.

Yours,

C. A. MURRAY,
Endicott Forging & Mfg. Co.,
Endicott, N. Y.

It is high time, Mr. Speaker, that some sort of reaction grew up in the House to take proper steps so that such confusion will not go forth in the future from this great Capital.

THE 49-CENT WHEAT PENALTY

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I am directing your special attention to a bill I have introduced to repeal the law that imposes a 49-cents-per-bushel penalty against farmers on wheat grown in excess of quotas allotted under the triple A program. This 49-cent penalty is in addition to forfeiture of rights to soil conservation and parity payments, as well as the right to have 85 percent of parity loans.

I am also reintroducing my bill to knock out the restriction that requires a farmer to pay 49 cents per bushel on his excess wheat before he can feed it to his own livestock and poultry. Of course, if we pass the first-named bill the latter will not be needed. I tried to get the Committee on Agriculture last year to at least lift the ban on penalties on feed wheat, but the triple A in Washington was against it. So the committee did not recommend it.

Mr. Speaker, there is no justification for making a farmer pay penalty on wheat he feeds to his own livestock and poultry. That just cannot be right.

Let me give you some rather interesting figures. In my State of Kansas in 1941 producers were penalized for raising excess wheat in the sum of $5,194,822. About $2,000,000 has been refunded to farmers who were still in the business, who put up bonds, and cut their production the next year to make up for the excess over the allotment. Last year, 1942, the Government collected and placed in escrow penalties on Kansas wheat the sum of $763,000. About $38,000 of this amount has since been refunded. I do not have the figures for the entire country, but it is estimated it amounts to about five times the above figures.

Mr. Speaker, there is no justification or excuse for continuing this sort of thing now.

Here is a rather odd situation. A farmer who feeds excess wheat he has on hand right now is required to pay 49 cents per bushel for every bushel he feeds to his own livestock and poultry. His neighbor, who does not raise wheat of his own, can buy a carload of wheat from the Commodity Credit Corporation, not at the market price of about $1.24 per bushel in my part of the country, but for 86 cents per bushel, provided he feeds it to his livestock. Both are the same kind of wheat and grown on the same kind of land. One farmer pays a penalty to one agency and another buys from another agency of the Government for 35 or 40 cents under the market price and the wheat is used for the same purpose and fed to the same kind of livestock. That just does not make sense and we ought to know it.

Now, the situation is still more complicated when we find that still another agency of the Government is fixing the price ceiling on flour in order to keep the price of wheat and wheat products from going too high.

Mr. Speaker, here we are facing the greatest food shortage experienced in this country in 80 years. People in other lands are starving and crying for food. The demand for increased production of food of all kinds is tremendous. The shortage of meat and many other foods is already becoming acute. It is going to become worse. To continue the practice and policy of imposing penalties and restricting the production of grain or any other food products is all wrong. It ought to be corrected right now.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BRYSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include a poem.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I have two or three requests. First, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include an article by Mary Carter Roberts.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, also I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include an article by Mark Sullivan.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Next, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after the other special orders today, I be permitted to address the House for 8 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MUCH BITTER FACTIONALISM

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, those who would permanently take this country into the ever-recurring wars and revolutions of the nations of Europe should read the article by Ernest K. Lindley entitled "Much Bitter Factionalism" in the Washington Post of December 20. The writer deals with conditions in Yugoslavia. When racial hatreds in one nation can assume the proportions now displayed in that war-stricken country, when two factions of their unfortunate people, both fighting the Axis Powers, can carry on another war between themselves, it is not difficult to fully understand what conditions will be when the Axis Powers are defeated and the two factions are able to turn upon each other the full fury of their hatreds.

Mr. Speaker, there are few nations in Europe where internal hatreds do not exist. In a number of these countries, including Spain, France, and others, this feeling is suppressed at the moment, but in Yugoslavia and in the others the ending of the present war will mark the opening of outbreaks of civil war that for viciousness will parallel anything the world has heretofore known.

Those who close their eyes to the teachings of history are willfully blind. Those who believe human nature has changed during the thousands of years of recorded history are stupidly blind. Wars since the beginning of the human race have stemmed from human selfishness. Desire for food, lust for power, lust for wealth in one form or another has provided the urge. This will continue until human selfishness is washed from the human heart. All the wars, all the negotiations, all the treaties between nations will not change this fact.

We are now engaged in the greatest war, the most horrible war, in all history. Every American desires to win this war in the shortest possible time and with the least loss of human life. That is one thing upon which the American people are agreed. On this there is no division of opinion. There is, however, Mr. Speaker, a very definite and widespread division of opinion as to what the national policy shall be when this war is finished.

In evaluating the proposals already set forth in the Atlantic Charter and elsewhere, having as the objective the sudden transformation of this wicked and selfish world into Utopia, it is well to bear in mind that when peace has come, and as time softens the memory of the horrors of the present conflict, the world still will be governed by selfish and powerful individuals such as have been responsible for all previous wars. The great war of a quarter century ago, with its millions of dead, injured, and maimed, with all its agony of human hearts, taught the world nothing. The war in which we are now engaged will teach the world nothing. I have no doubt that strong men, greedy men now in high places, and others of like character seeking high places are already intriguing, scheming to secure for themselves and the nations to which they belong those things which will give them an unfair advantage over others. This has been human experience since time began, and to me it seems both wishful thinking and folly to believe there can overnight be a complete transformation of individuals, singly and collectively, growing out of our present struggle.

Mr. Speaker, I am one of those who believe that when this war is over and we have gained our security, we should look to that security in the future, and look long and well before we allow ourselves to be again projected into the quarrels and wars of other nations.

I present for the RECORD the article by Mr. Lindley entitled "Much Bitter Factionalism":

MUCH BITTER FACTIONALISM

(By Ernest K. Lindley)

Secretary Hull's appeal to all factions opposing the Axis to get together was not intended for French ears alone. Yugoslavia is another case in which bitter factionalism is hindering the most effective opposition to the Axis. Since the quarrels among the Yugoslavs were discussed in this column 5 weeks ago, they have gone from bad to worse.

The trouble is rooted partly in the old conflicts between the Serbs, on one side, and partly in political ideology; and partly in the Croats and Slovenes, on the other; opposing concepts of military strategy. The Serb Patriots, led by General Mihailovitch, favor straight guerilla warfare—maximum damage to German supplies and communications, with minimum losses. Mihailovitch opposes risking masses of troops in pitched battle with a better armed foe. He maintains perhaps 20,000 men in the field.

The Communist-led Partisans, operating mostly in Croatia and Slovenia, are now more numerous. They profess to have between 200,000 and 300,000 men in the field. They have recently wrested considerable areas from the Germans but in so doing have courted grave danger. It is always possible for the Reichswehr to throw in sufficient reinforcements to wipe them out.

The Partisan diversions serve Soviet strategy. Each German division tied down in Yugoslavia subtracts one division from the Russian front. Moscow has provided the Partisans with some supplies as well as leadership. And the Comintern has waged propaganda warfare against Mihailovitch, describing him variously as an Axis stooge and a tool of the ultranationalist Greater Serbia movement.

There seems to be little doubt that Mihailovitch has given the Italian overlords of Croatia at least temporary respite from attack in return for munitions and gasoline. And the communiqués indicate that his operations against the Germans have been crimped by clashes between his forces and the Partisans.

Responsibility for these clashes is difficult to fix. The Partisans apparently have pillaged Serbian farmers who supported Mihailovitch with taxes; he may have attacked the Partisans in reprisal. On the other hand, the virulent Communist propaganda against him may have inspired the Partisans to initiate the attacks.

As Office of War Information Director Elmer Davis has stated, our Government trusts Mihailovitch and considers his strategy sound. Diplomats who know him intimately say he had said and done nothing to indicate he favors the Greater Serb movement which, in the minds of the Croats and Slovenes, may mean post-war vassalage to the Serbs. Our experts justify this traffic with the Italians as a sound guerillist expedient which may also be useful in making friction between them and the Germans.

Various proposals have been advanced to close the breach. Mihailovitch, himself, suggested a Moscow directive requiring the partisan commanders to accept his leadership. The Yugoslav exiled government in London made representations to that end, but without result.

The Yugoslav government in exile is shot through with feuds. Our Government's decision to raise Yugoslav Minister Fotitch to ambassador's rank is an example. The idea was first broached during the Washington visit of King Peter. Croat leaders, who accuse Fotitch of secretly favoring the Greater Serbia movement, were incensed at this "endorsement."

The higher rank was nevertheless given Fotitch, in fulfillment of a promise to the King, and with the explanation to the Croats that the purpose was to honor Yugoslavia, not any faction or individual. The explanation did not suffice. Ivan Subacic, Governor of Croatia before the German occupation and deputy prime minister in the exiled government, resigned that post in a huff and went on an American speaking tour.

Last week, in a radio talk, Subacic's secretary, Ante Pavelich, said Mihailovitch was "in eclipse." Ambassador Fotitch, in a press release, repudiated him as a renegade, who had abandoned his post in the Yugoslav diplomatic service a few days after the German attack and was formally dismissed from the Government service by royal decree last May.

Fotitch is understood to have expressed indignation at the failure of our censors to suppress the broadcast. Croats in the embassy have also incurred his disfavor. His military attaché, Col. Mirko Burya, a Croat, regarded by our officials as a capable officer and loyal Yugoslav, has been dismissed for a Serb. Burya has volunteered his services to our Army but has thus far been unable to obtain the formal Yugoslav release our policy requires.

Although the Yugoslav cabinet has proportionate representation for Serbs, Croats, and Slovenes, the Serb group seemingly is dominant. The exiled government's propaganda exaggerated Mihailovitch's exploits and did little or nothing to correct the impression that the Croats were supine. Battles fought by the partisans were credited to Mihailovitch, leading the outside world to expect new exploits which neither his strategy nor his resources allowed.

Young King Peter has promised the restoration of the Yugoslav state as a whole, with full rights for the Croat and Slovene minorities. Mere pronouncements do not heal old sores or allay the present civil strife. But observance of the principles stated by the King by the members of the exiled government would moderate the hatreds now consuming the Yugoslavs. Beyond that lies a test of the ability of Moscow, London, and Washington to reach an agreement on questions of high military and naval strategy.

LET'S LOOK AT THE RECORD

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, in these days of pyramiding propaganda units in practically all executive departments of government, America might well turn to the advice of Alfred E. Smith and adopt "Let's look at the record" as its guide book for determining where the praise or blame for governmental action should be placed. For that reason, I have today introduced a bill to substantially increase the number of copies of the daily CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to be distributed without charge by our Government, specifically designating in part that all reading rooms of military establishments be provided with regular copies of the RECORD.

Mr. Speaker, such action as I propose would be a valuable contribution to America's current victory book campaign. The country has recently been treated to a misguided tirade against Congress by radio commentators, newspaper columnists, magazine sophisticators, organized purge committees, and others. The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD tells the true story of Congress and reports the processes of freedom in action. Let us let the RECORD speak for itself. Surely the soldiers, sailors, marines, and airmen of the country have a right to know what is going on in Congress from an unexpurgated source. The same is true of the students who are training to become the citizens of tomorrow. The cost of supplying these RECORDS will be but a tiny fraction of the money now being spent by the almost endless number of publicity bureaus and propaganda units maintained by the executive departments, some of which, themselves, have contributed to the program of misrepresentation directed against the legislative branch of government.

The Seventy-eighth Congress is destined to recapture for the legislative branch its rightful position as a coordinate unit in this Government. In the long run it will prove wise economy and prudent Americanism to make copies of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD available to as many as possible of the citizens to whom this Government actually belongs.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an editorial from the Washington Evening Star of Wednesday, January 13, 1943, on the passing of Gen. Agustin P. Justo. General Justo, who had served as President of Argentina, was a great soldier as well as a great statesman. He was a leader of foresight and vision, who had registered consistent dissent against the isolationist foreign policy of the present Argentine administration. Especially since the entry of the United States into the war, General Justo had been an ardent supporter of pan-American solidarity and the cause of the United Nations. His passing, particularly at this time, is a great loss to the cause of hemisphere solidarity and it is to be hoped that his farsighted and patriotic aims will be carried on to the successful conclusion for which he had labored.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include an article by Edwin A. O'Neal, president of the American Farm Bureau Federation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE FAMILY-SIZED FARM

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I think we should learn something from the miners' strike now going on in Pennsylvania while the whole country is shivering from the cold. We might well visualize what would be going on all over the country now if the farmers of this country had taken the advice of the Administration and John L. Lewis for the last 6 years and organized with the C. I. O. The country then would not only have been suffering from the cold weather and the coal shortage, but it would be starving also if the advice of John L. Lewis had been followed.

After we have inaugurated our Governor in Pennsylvania next week, I propose to ask for 1 hour's time in which to discuss the matter of the farmer with the family-sized farm and his problems. The problems that we of the family-sized farm have to deal with are not understood in Washington.

UNAUTHORIZED STRIKES

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I feel I should be derelict in my duty to my constituents, and to my country, if I did not now before this House take a stand with regard not only to the coal strike, but to all work stoppages that interfere with war production. In my campaign I openly stated my opposition to all those stoppages and I want to say now that in my opinion the first duty of this Congress is to promptly take definite steps to put an end to all stoppages that curtail or interfere with war production.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. COX. It certainly ought to be possible to find enough people with membership in this body who love their country well enough to support such an effort.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I believe so.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, like all Members here I am receiving innumerable letters wanting to know what legislative program the majority intends to submit. We have been in session 2 weeks now and nothing has been said with regard to an agricultural program or any other kind of program, and we do not know how to proceed.

I yield to the distinguished majority leader to answer this question.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman knows, of course, that it takes some days to organize the House, to make committee assignments, and that this is now being done by the committee on committees of both parties. As the gentleman knows, there is no program for the rest of this week, for we have already agreed to adjourn until Monday when we adjourn today, and I see nothing so far as next week is concerned.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I do hope the majority leader will bring in some kind of program soon in order that we may be in position to tell our own people at least what to expect.

Mr. McCORMACK. I know of nobody whose experience and knowledge of legislative procedure is greater than that of my distinguished and dear friend from Illinois.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I thank the gentleman.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I have three consent requests to submit: First, that I may extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on today at the conclusion of other special orders I may be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

THE COAL STRIKE

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my own remarks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I would say to the majority leader that while it may take him some time to get a program together that it does not take very long for the people in Michigan and other Northern States to get very cold these days when there is no coal.

Now, some of us here would be pleased to have the gentleman to ask his leader, the President, on one of his visits to the White House why he does not get after, not the miners in the coal mines but these union fellows who are assessing this additional 50 cents a month to the dollar a month the miners are now forced to pay the union. The miners are striking because the Administration is back of the union which now seeks to compel them to pay additional dues to the organizations, the unions, which contributed money for the New Deal political campaigns. Now, if that is not a rotten situation, you tell me one. Instead of continuously kicking the miner—the workingman—around, why not get after the union racketeer. "Render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's," apply the boot where it is needed, not, in this instance, to the miners, working in the hard-coal mines, who protest this additional levy, but to those who are exacting it, the union. I have today introduced a bill to correct the evil.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, as a Representative from the State of Pennsylvania I want to go on record as saying that I feel very sorry and regret very much that the good name of the great State of Pennsylvania should be splashed in all the headlines of the country as a result of this very disgraceful strike in the anthracite mines. I have no sympathy whatsoever with this strike, yet everybody knows that my position has always been in favor of organized labor. It is just such actions as this that do a great deal of harm to organized labor, local unions, and the great body of organized labor.

I also want to say, Mr. Speaker, that I believe there are today on the statute books sufficient laws to deal adequately with this situation in the anthracite mines. I hope in all sincerity that those who have the power under these laws will act immediately so that the morale of the country will not be broken down. These men should be compelled to go to work immediately or be compelled to get into the armed services.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my own remarks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, first, permit me to extend my sympathy to the gentlemen whose constituents are now shivering up and down the Atlantic seaboard, in western New York, in Pennsylvania, in New England, and along the Great Lakes to Michigan, Wisconsin, and Minnesota, and to say to them that they are largely to blame.

The people of Ontario, Canada, are not freezing, because they took time by the forelock and developed their water power, chased the Power Trust out of Ontario, and for years have been heating their homes with electricity.

To the people of New York, I say again that it is time you woke up to the fact that you are paying more than $200,000,000 a year overcharges for your electricity, compared with the rates they are paying in Ontario just across the line. Your rates are so high you cannot afford to heat your houses with it; while the people of Ontario have been heating their homes with electricity for more than 30 years. Many houses have no chimneys or flues, but depend exclusively on electric heat—the finest, purest, and cheapest heat in the world, when supplied at rates based upon the cost of generation, transmission, and distribution.

In Pennsylvania they are paying more than $75,000,000 a year in overcharges. They could heat the entire State of Pennsylvania and the surrounding country with electricity generated with their own coal, gas, oil, or water power. But you are dominated by the Power Trust, which will not let you do that.

Michigan can look across into the promised land and get a glimpse of the electric age in Windsor, Canada. If the people of Michigan got their electricity at the same rate the people of Windsor are getting theirs, they would save more than $45,000,000 a year on their light and power bills alone.

We can take the fuel that is now imbedded in our soil, such as coal, gas, and oil, and the waterpower that is going to waste in this country, develop it, as Ontario has done and heat every home in America more satisfactorily, if not more cheaply, than they are being heated today. Then we could let this oil and gasoline go to our boys who are fighting the battles of the world, and to our allies across the sea.

This is the program for which I have pleaded for years. If it had been carried out, as it was in the T. V. A. area, and as it was in Ontario, your people would not be suffering for want of fuel today; and the oil you are now using could be sent to our fighting forces on the various fronts.

For your information, I am inserting five typical bills from my home town of Tupelo, Miss., for the year from and including July 1940 to and including June 1941.

These homes never have a fire in them, but are electrified throughout. I will have some more recent statistics to submit later.

Mr. Speaker, what is being done here can be done anywhere in America—and it will be done when the representatives of the people demand it. If you do not demand it, your successors will. It is just as sure to come as the night follows the day. We are moving into the electric age.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the special order of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] today, I may be allowed 10 minutes to discuss the fighting Roosevelts and the "lie" of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LAMBERTSON]?

The was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

(Mr. SHAFER asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.)

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE] is recognized for 50 minutes.

THE WISCONSIN CHEESE SITUATION

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, aside from the subject that I want to discuss this afternoon, I cannot refrain from commenting on something that has just occurred. When the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi was talking about the utilization of coal for the manufacture of power and for the heating of the homes of New York and Pennsylvania, as well as the other States where coal is available, I wondered under present conditions how he is going to get that coal out of the mines so long as the miners refuse to work and refuse to bring that coal to the surface so that it can be used to manufacture power?

But I do not want to go into a discussion of that subject today. I want to call your attention to some things that I believe are of interest, not only to the people of my State, but, in view of the situation that is confronting the people of the Nation who may go hungry, to the people of the entire Nation.

Mr. Speaker, Tuesday last leaders of the Allied Nations in a Nation-wide broadcast called for an unprecedented production of farm products for 1943 from the farm families of America. Throughout the entire country farmers were urged to assemble in observance of Farm Mobilization Day. A message from the President to the farm families of America was part of this program. Every speaker stressed the importance of food and the vital place that American farmers occupy in the war program. Among other things, the President said, and I quote:

> Food is a weapon in total war—fully as important in its way as guns or planes or tanks. So are other products of the farm.

Thus the high place of farm production in the war program was graphically portrayed by every speaker on this great radio broadcast. The President paid a long delayed tribute to the farm families of America when he said:

> In spite of the handicaps under which the American farmers worked last year, the production victory they won was among the major victories of the United Nations in 1942.

The President closed his address with these words:

> Our fighting men and allies and our families here at home can rely on farmers for the food and other farm products that will help to bring victory.

I believe that I am speaking the attitude of the farm families of America when I say that these people welcome the opportunity to meet any kind of a challenge for the production of farm products if such production will assure the preservation of our institutions of government and hasten the day of ultimate peace, provided they have some tangible assurance from their Government that they will be afforded equality in the distribution of the Nation's income. The farm people of this country are fully aware as to the legislative and governmental security that has been given to labor and industry in the war effort and in good conscience and justice they have a right to demand the same assurances of family security. They well know that when labor participates in a war-production program it knows in advance that it will be well paid.

The law protects the hours of labor and provides for overtime payments on the basis of a 40-hour week with time and a half for overtime and double time for certain days. Labor knows that it is protected in the enjoyment of its right to strike for better wages or on account of jurisdiction or other disputes. When industry was asked to convert its operations from normal business to war business, they were assured that the Government would absorb any loss sustained. They are given contracts for the production of war materials on a unit-cost basis and are protected in the enjoyment of assured profit. If they exceed the production requirements under the terms of their contract they have no worry about the disposition of the surplus. The Government encourages increased production and purchases any surplus and pays cash for it at unit-cost prices. The Government recognizes such efforts by special awards of E flags and through a system of priorities and allocations of materials assures to both labor and management continuous factory operation. This type of security the Government has extended to labor and to management and in speaking in behalf of the farm families of America, I am not critical of the security which has been attained either by labor or management. Common justice, however, demands that the attitude of the administration and many reflecting that attitude in editorial and radio comment, should now revise their critical attitude toward the farmers of America and once and for all begin to realize that if we and our allies are to eat, some form of adequate security must be given to the farm population of this country. They do not want any right to strike and they do not ask for time-and-a-half or double-time pay. They will continue to work the hours from sunup to long after sunset in order to help carry on this fight, and they not only will devote their own time but will utilize the services of their wives and children.

They only ask in exchange for this effort that they be permitted to enjoy the right to live in free America as decent human beings, and they have a right to know that when this war is over and the excessive demands of lease-lend and other governmental activities have ceased, that they will not again be thrown into the calloused hands of the bankruptcy court. If the farm people of this country are given the incentive of a decent wage during this period of increased production and assurance that greatly increased production will not ultimately destroy them when the war is over, they will produce the food and the fiber necessary to win this war.

At this time, however, they do not intend to be guided in their thinking by mere soft words of praise. They recall that sometime over a year ago the Federal Government pleaded for an increase in the production of milk. They accepted the Government's promise that the milk thus produced would find a market at a reasonable and fair price. In the months of October, November, and December of 1941, the farmers began to increase the production of milk, and they were paid during the 3 months indicated at the rate of about $2.25 per hundred for milk testing 3.5 percent butterfat, less hauling costs. This period was the low production period of the year. In January 1942, in response to the Government's constant urging for more and more milk production, the farmers met the challenge and production began to climb. Instead, however, of meeting the Government's obligation under its promise, the price of milk began to decline. I might say in fairness that this price decline at that season of the year is of normal conditions. The farmers were assured, however, that conditions were not normal. They had prepared for abnormal conditions. They were stepping up their production to meet abnormal conditions, and in the face of this response by the farmers of America the price of milk began to drop, and after long hours of labor they received compensation at $1.95 per hundred with a continued drop in price until milk reached $1.80 in July. Thus, all of the high-sounding praise of the farmers was not reflected in the wage which the farmers received for his greatly increased labor.

The farmers felt, and had a right to feel, that they were being misled by their Government, and thus began a breakdown in the morale of the farm population of this country.

I know of no more patriotic loyal American group than are to be found in the farm families of America. This letdown, however, was not only unexpected by them, but constituted what they rightfully conceived to be a breach of faith.

Today, in line with the appeal of the President on Farm Mobilization Day, soft words are again being poured into the ears of the American farmer. While he appreciated the expressions uttered on that day, he has a right to demand now an assurance that it will be no repetition of the situation that confronted him in the first half of 1942. The farmers of this country want to know the facts. He wants these facts stated by somebody in authority to speak for the Government. He wants to know and is entitled to know that if he steps up his production that he will be afforded a market for his products that will guarantee him a decent place in our economic system. He needs to know these facts so he can plan for the future.

The farmer of America cannot plan his work from day to day. He not only must plan for the planting and rotation of crops, but he must plan his other production programs. All of these plans are dependent upon anticipated income, and even then his over-all planning may be destroyed overnight by insects or the elements. He must be able to plan his help and plan for farm machinery, for feed, and a multitude of things incident to the conduct of the farm.

In the over-all picture the price of farm products is all important. In this connection the recent attitude of the Government in the matter of fixing price ceilings on dairy products clearly demonstrates to me another evidence of breach of faith.

May I say to you men and women of this country and to my colleagues in this Congress, those of you who saw that cartoon in yesterday's Star must be impressed with the fact that the people of America are facing today a deadly threatening food shortage and those of you who can only get a quarter of a pound of butter and who in a short time will not be able to buy a pound of natural American cheese better sit here and listen for a moment and not kid yourselves that we are just talking shop because the dairy industry happens to be a dominant industry in the State from which I come.

Let me be specific.

The State of Wisconsin, one of whose congressional districts I have the honor to represent, today produces between 50 and 60 percent of all the cheese produced in the United States. That cheese production consists of many types of cheese that have been developed over long years of effort. We produce a large volume of so-called foreign types of cheese. The Swiss, Brick, Limburger, and other foreign types of cheese have for many years absorbed a large volume of the fluid milk produced in Wisconsin.

Millions of dollars are invested in this enterprise and the products of these Wisconsin factories find a ready sale in the markets throughout the country.

In addition to these foreign types of cheese, Wisconsin produces today approximately 60 percent of all the American cheese that is produced in this country.

Overnight and almost without warning, a price subsidy was announced by the Department of Agriculture and the O. P. A. providing for the payment out of the Treasury of the United States of a subsidy of 3¾ cents per pound to be paid to the farmer whose milk went into the production of American cheese. No subsidy was provided for the manufacturers and producers of foreign types of cheese. What will be the result of this subsidy order in its effect on the manufacturers and producers of foreign types of cheese? It is perfectly obvious that this industry, which has taken many years to develop, will be forced out of business. The manufacturers and producers of these foreign types of cheese will not be able to pay to the farmers who produce the milk a sufficient amount to permit the continued flow of milk into the factories producing foreign types of cheese. The explanation given is that our lease-lend requirements do not include foreign types of cheese and that therefore the subsidy must be paid to encourage the production of American cheese. It is the latter type of cheese which is wanted for shipment to our allies. Unless this subsidy program is abandoned or unless it is applied equally to the producers of foreign types of cheese, the latter group will be completely put out of business. Perhaps such a result may be thought to be necessary as one of the incidents of war. I want to assure you, however, that it is difficult for those who have devoted their lives to the upbuilding of this business to see it wiped out overnight by Government regulation and bureaucratic order.

Let us look one step further into this picture. The Secretary of Agriculture, who is now Food Administrator, has demanded a tremendously stepped up and increased production of American cheese to meet our lease-lend commitments. As previously indicated, Wisconsin today is producing over 60 percent of all the American cheese produced in this country. We have the facilities to produce American cheese, which is the type wanted by the Government. We have the experienced cheese makers, who have spent years in making and upgrading their cheese. It would seem only common sense, therefore, to believe that the increased production of American cheese should be stimulated in the area that has the milk and is equipped to produce the cheese.

Let us see what the bureaucrats have done. There has been created what is known as a dairy industry advisory committee. These are the men who offer suggestions and advice to the W. P. B. and the O. P. A. in connection with the dairy industry. The cheese section of the advisory committee is composed of four men as I am advised: First, Mr. Charles Eckburg, president of the Borden Cheese Co., of New York; second, Mr. Fred Kraft, of the National Dairy & Kraft Cheese Co., of New York; third, Mr. Roy D. Smith, of Jerome, Idaho, and fourth, Mr. Ernest Henegar, Lewisburg, Tenn. The gentleman from Idaho I understand is a small cheesemaker and the gentleman from Tennessee falls in the same category. Thus it will be seen that this committee is dominated by the representatives of the two great cheese processing organizations of this country; namely, Borden and National Dairy with the Kraft Cheese Co. as a subsidiary. It will be noted that the State which produces 60 to 70 percent of the American cheese of the Nation is not represented on this advisory committee. It is to be assumed that the orders of the O. P. A. and the W. P. B. must to some degree at least reflect the attitude of this advisory committee which is clearly dominated by the big cheese processors of this country. I make no charge that they have dominated either the W. P. B. or the O. P. A. in the matter of orders affecting the cheese industry. The Nation may judge from the facts. The proof of the pudding is in the eating.

It is well known that the production of American cheese in Wisconsin is largely in the hands of small factories scattered throughout the State, which operate as farmer-controlled plants or farm cooperatives. The big interests are located in areas principally outside the State of Wisconsin in their direct manufacture of American cheese. In order to understand this picture thoroughly it must be borne in mind that American cheese for years has been made in certain styles. Generally speaking, these styles may be designated as large and small. The large styles are known as Cheddar and twins. The twins and Cheddars weigh approximately 70 pounds each. The small styles are known as flats, double daisies, triple daisies, single daisies, longhorns, young Americas, square prints, natural loaf, and picnics and midgets, ranging in weights from the smallest style, natural loaf, 5 pounds, to triple daisies, weighing a total of 66 pounds.

In an order made by the O. P. A. on December 24, 1942, the Administrator set the maximum price for American cheese. These maximum prices ranged from 23¼ cents per pound for the large styles, Cheddars and twins, up to 24¼ cents a pound for square prints, natural loaf, picnics, and midgets. The price for double daisies and triple daisies was fixed for 23¾ cents per pound, and for single daisies, longhorns, and young Americas 24 cents per pound. It will be observed at the outset that under this maximum price order the differential between the price of the small styles of cheese and the large styles is not sufficient to take care of the necessary increased costs necessary to manufacture and package the small styles of cheese.

The price of these two large styles of cheese is fixed at 23¼ cents. They have fixed a little higher price for the small type of cheese. I am told by the cheese makers' organizations of my State that the differential between the two is not sufficient to absorb the extra labor necessary to make the small types weighing from 5 to 33 pounds and to pay the extra cost necessary for the additional packaging of that cheese. I want you to bear that in mind because it is very important in what I am going to say to you in just a moment in tracing these orders through for you.

I am advised by those in the cheese industry who should know that the effect of this order will be to stop the production of the small styles of cheese and force the producers of American cheese to manufacture only the large styles—namely, cheddars and twins. I want you to bear this fact in mind at this point as it will assume a commanding importance later on in this discussion.

The prices which I have hereinbefore enumerated are the maximum prices for American cheese, delivered at all places in the State of Wisconsin regardless of the point of origin. What about the manufacturers of American cheese outside of Wisconsin? Here is where the inequity and discrimination begins to manifest itself clearly. The order provides that the maximum prices for American cheese delivered at all places outside the State of Wisconsin shall be the Wisconsin prices which I have heretofore listed, plus transportation charges. The order provides that the transportation charges shall be the lowest published railroad carlot, freight rate per pound, gross weight from Plymouth, Wis., to that place, times 1.15. It further provides that the calculation on the per pound basis shall be carried to the second decimal point.

Now let us see how this order works and how it encourages the Wisconsin farmers to produce more American cheese. In simple terms the order means this: A factory producing cheddar or twin styles of American cheese at any point in Wisconsin is under a maximum price ceiling of 23¼ cents. The same type of cheese manufactured any place outside of Wisconsin can be sold for 23¼ cents per pound plus 115 percent of the lowest published railroad carlot freight rate per pound, gross weight, from Plymouth, Wis., to the place of manufacture. For example, cheese manufactured within the areas of the following points will receive the following price advantages:

| City and State | 115 percent of freight rate from Plymouth, Wis. | Maximum price freight plus 23¼ cents |
|---|---|---|
| Freeport, Ill. | $0.22×1.15=$0.25 | $23.50 |
| Dixon, Ill. | .25×1.15= .28 | 23.53 |
| Escanaba, Mich. | .51×1.15= .58 | 23.83 |
| Kansas City, Mo. | .58×1.15= .66 | 23.91 |
| Pine Island, Minn. | .68×1.15= .78 | 24.03 |
| Memphis, Tenn. | .84×1.15= .96 | 24.21 |
| Springfield, Mo. | 1.07×1.15= 1.23 | 24.48 |
| Birmingham, Ala. | 1.11×1.15= 1.27 | 24.52 |
| Dallas, Tex. | 1.17×1.15= 1.34 | 24.59 |
| Any place in Wisconsin | | 23.25 |

What will this mean to Wisconsin that now produces from 60 to 70 percent of the American cheese requirements of the Nation? It means that a factory located at Escanaba, Mich., will receive 23.83 cents per pound as against 23¼ cents per pound paid the Wisconsin factory just across the State line. The factory at Freeport, Ill., will receive 23½ cents a pound; the factory at Dixon, Ill., 23.53 cents per pound; a factory in Dallas, Tex., will receive 24.59 cents per pound. Is it not clear, therefore, that the farmer who produces the milk and upon whom the factory is dependent for its successful operation will deliver his milk to the factory that will afford him the best price advantage? We are, therefore, threatened with this situation: The milk which now goes into Wisconsin factories that are equipped and set up to make American cheese will flow across State lines into the factories in other States that enjoy the price advantage heretofore indicated. Is it not clear also that the milk which used to flow into the factories making foreign types of cheese will be attracted from southwestern Wisconsin into Illinois, Iowa, and Minnesota where advantage can be taken of the increased price afforded the producers in those States under this Plymouth-plus order?

I have talked with many men connected with the cheese industry, and no one has been able to indicate any reason for this destructive blow to the American cheese industry of Wisconsin. I point out these facts as evidence of what is transpiring in government that is causing the revolt among the farm people of this country. Why should a government that seeks increased production of American cheese break up an industry in the State that produces 60 to 70 percent of that cheese and destroy the incentive to the trained cheesemakers and operators to produce more American cheese? I am wondering if you can see in this picture the skillful hand of the big operators who have plants located outside the State of Wisconsin who will reap a rich harvest by reason of this price differential. I am advised that these same big operators are constructing milk-drying plants in the State of Wisconsin to produce powdered milk at a price ceiling fixed by O. P. A. which will enable them to drive more cheese factories to the wall. The whole picture should be the subject of a congressional investigation, and I propose at the proper time to introduce a resolution to that effect. As a Representative from a great dairy State, I cannot sit idly by and see a whole industry ruined by reason of the orders of a small bureaucratic group who have failed to even ask the advice and opinion of those who today are making 60 to 70 percent of the production which the Government so badly needs.

A moment ago I indicated to you that the manufacture of small styles of cheese would no doubt cease due to the inadequate price differentials between the large and small styles. Let us examine this order further. It provides that whenever twin and Cheddar styles of cheese are sold for processing to the United States Government or any agency thereof and the moisture content of such cheese is 37½ percent or less, the maximum price shall be as set forth in table B contained in said order. An examination of this table indicates that the maximum price for twins and Cheddars when sold to the United States Government or to a processor shall be a price ranging of from 23.82 cents per pound for cheese with a moisture content not over 37½ percent to 25.54 cents per pound for cheese where the moisture content is 33 percent or less. Thus it will be seen that when sold to the United States Government or to a processor, the price ceilings on twins or Cheddars is very much above the general price ceilings on the same styles of cheese. The result of this price advantage again is that the producer of twins and Cheddar styles of American cheese in order to obtain the maximum price must sell the same either to the United States Government or to a processor. Thus we find that in accordance with the price ceiling fixed for all styles of American cheese the cheese maker will be forced to discontinue the make of small types of cheese because he can make more money by making the large styles; namely, twins and Cheddars. Having converted to the manufacture of twins and Cheddars, he must either sell to the Government or to a processor in order to get the maximum price provided for in this order. This means, in simple language, then that so far as the American public are concerned, they will be required to eat processed cheese. They will not be able to buy that which is purchased by the Government because that will be shipped under lease-lend to our allies abroad. They will not be able to buy the small styles of American natural cheese because the cheese makers will discontinue the making of those styles as hereinbefore indicated. I do not know whether the processors had this in mind or not, but I am stating the facts as they are, and I am reliably informed that natural cheese will soon be entirely off the domestic market as a result of these orders.

Another indication is to be found in the general order providing for maximum mark-up for retailers who sell all types of cheese. I am advised that the mark-up that a retailer doing an annual business of $250,000 or more dollars per year on natural cheese is 22 percent. I am further advised that this mark-up is all out of proportion to the mark-up permitted on packaged processed cheese, thus forcing the large retailer to sell only processed cheese. One of the large retail distributors in my district recently wired me in part as follows:

> Office of Price Administration is restricting the mark-up to 22 percent on Wisconsin cheese, an item that we have promoted and developed for years in every State in the Union. This mark-up might be satisfactory for a store handling a few varieties of prepackaged processed cheese. We handle every conceivable kind of cheese and must absorb the cutting, shrinking, and packaging cost. This order puts us out of the natural cheese business and takes away all incentive of future promoting Wisconsin cheese.

Again this order appears on its face to discriminate against natural cheese in favor of the processed variety. Wisconsin has spent millions of dollars in this country to cultivate a taste for natural cheese. These successive orders with one sweep of the Henderson pen threaten to destroy these efforts.

They have worded this order so that it even has the effect that a retailer who used to take a twin and cut it up and sell a pound or a pound and a half or two pounds, and wrap it up, cannot do so at a price high enough so that he is able to pay for the cutting and the shrinkage and packaging. They have imposed on him a mark-up that will not permit him to absorb those items any longer in the retail store. By a further differential in favor of processed cheese, he will be confined in his sales of cheese to the cheese made by the processor. The processor is the one we will have to sell twins and cheddars to, in order to get the price advantage to the farmer stipulated in this order.

Is not the picture suddenly beginning to clear up a little?

My friends who are on this Dairy Advisory Committee, in charge of cheese, will very vigorously deny that they had anything to do with the writing of these orders. Then who did write these orders? I should like to have somebody who is always apologetic for the actions of the bureaucrats in this administration make some study and be prepared to answer that question.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEEFE. Is it any wonder, therefore, that the farmer, who will ultimately be most affected by these orders, views the situation with alarm? He may be getting a fair price for his milk today, but when he sees this natural cheese industry destroyed, which he himself has spent millions of dollars to build up throughout this Nation, cultivating a taste in the people of American for natural cheese, he is ultimately going to be the sufferer.

Is it any wonder therefore that the farmer who will ultimately be most affected by these orders views the stranglehold that great dairy monopolies are acquiring on his business with alarm? I say to you, my colleagues in this Congress, that honeyed words and soft praise is not what the American farmer wants today. He demands security. He demands protection. He demands his right to be heard before these far-reaching orders that so vitally affect him are entered. He has no desire to accept charity at the hands of his Government. He wants no dole. He wants no subsidy. He wants to be assured of a fair wage for himself and his wife and his children.

In short, he wants and demands the same security that is afforded to other segments of our society, and this Congress owes him the responsibility and the duty of investigating this bureaucratic action to the end that he may receive simple justice.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. I yield.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. What the gentleman has stated about the cheese industry of Wisconsin is similar to the experience we have had in Minnesota with reference to butter. Wisconsin is conceded to be the largest cheese-producing State in the Union, and Minnesota is conceded to be the largest butter-producing State. They started out with a program in Minnesota where they diverted the milk from butter into evaporated milk and paid a higher price for evaporated milk, but scores of small creameries closed down all over the State, dislocating the butter-production program. Then they went into powdered milk from evaporated milk. The result has been that we are having a famine in butter. The creameries producing butter have gone out of business just the same as the cheese factories in Wisconsin will go out of business under the program.

Mr. KEEFE. May I thank the gentleman and say that due to the limitation of time I have attempted to confine myself to the over-all picture today and the situation as it affects cheese. I hope I shall be able to discuss the general situation as it affects butter and powdered skim milk and powdered whole milk and the evaporated-milk problem that is facing the farmers of the gentleman's State and mine. It will not be possible to do it within the limitations of one address in one afternoon.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may be permitted to proceed for 3 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman pointed out in the beginning that labor knows what it is going to get for its hire.

Mr. KEEFE. That is right.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The industrialist knows what he is going to get, whether his contract is on the cost-plus basis or any other basis. The President has asked $100,000,000,000 for the coming fiscal year to meet war and other expenses. Nowhere along the line, however, does the farmer know what he is actually going to receive as his price for his products. It seems to me the solution to give him security for the things he is going to produce which are a vital war element, namely, foods, and to encourage him to increase production, would be to fix a floor under those prices as well as fixing a maximum beyond which the prices cannot go. Nowhere is the farmer guaranteed even the cost of production for his products.

Industrial plants costing millions of dollars have been built with the taxpayers' money for the purpose of producing war materials. No adequate attempt has been made to financially assist agriculture, one of the largest industries to meet the requirements of war needs. Our small farmers are going out of business every day and selling their few remaining units of livestock and so forth because of the drain on their help and because of lack of financial ability to keep upon their farms their dairy and livestock herds. Some provision should be made to assist the remaining small farmers in purchasing some of the dairy herds and so forth that are being sold because of the draft law and the way it has been administered. That is one of the reasons for our shortage and it is going to increase in intensity as we go along. We are going to have to face and meet the issue.

Mr. KEEFE. May I say to the gentleman that I think he is quite familiar with the attitude on this general question of the gentleman from Wisconsin who is speaking. The responsibility of legislating on this subject, however, rests with the gentleman's party. You still have control. You still have not met this issue. You prattle about the increased prices the farmers have received from the time they received nothing until today, but you have not fundamentally solved this problem. I congratulate the gentleman upon the diligent fight he has made, as I well know, to encourage his party in this Congress to deal adequately with this problem. After all, we of the minority can make suggestions, but we cannot legislate until the majority is willing that legislation come before this House. I hope the gentleman will have some influence upon the leadership to begin to legislate to stop the sort of thing I have described this afternoon.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I appreciate what the gentleman has said regarding myself. I have done my best to make my party see this very situation, but I may say the responsibility rests upon the shoulders of every Member of this Congress, whether he be Republican, Democratic, or Progressive. The responsibility rests upon the gentleman just the same as it does upon me, to introduce legislation which will bring about security for the American farmer as well as insure an adequate supply of food to meet war needs. Maybe our shortage is due to some extent to our commitments under lend-lease.

Mr. KEEFE. If it does rest upon me and upon the minority, I would like to know why some of the measures that we have advocated are not enacted into law. You cannot get them out of the committee, you cannot get them on the floor of the House until the administration permits it. Your party is charged with the primary duty in matters of legislation and it is because you have failed to properly meet the issue that the whole country is aroused——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has again expired. Under previous order of the House, the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD] for 10 minutes.

MANPOWER

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I quote now a phrase from the President's Budget message delivered on Monday last:

> Private thought and public discussion of this subject are very necessary.

The President said that when he delivered his Budget message to Congress here the other day. He was referring to the procurement of munitions and used this particular language:

> Total mobilization of all our men and women, of all equipment, and all our materials in a balanced proportion program will enable us to accomplish the production goals underlying this war Budget.

Following that general statement was his subhead of manpower, and I wish to touch on that for a few moments, for the purpose of public discussion. In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, we are making rather poor progress in the mobilization and use of the man and woman power in this country, and if you will permit me to read a few lines from a book just published by the Brookings Institution, prepared by Harold W. Metz, I call the following excerpt to your attention:

> Much public confusion has resulted from conflicting statements issued by Government officials, both with respect to the ultimate size of the armed forces and the possibility of a labor shortage. Brigadier General Hershey, Director of the Selective Service System, stated in September 1942, that we can look forward ultimately to a total of 13,000,000 men in the armed forces, and that he contemplated 10,000,000 men at the end of 1943. Secretary of War Stimson testified before the Senate Military Affairs Committee on October 15 that the number in the Army at the end of 1943 would be 7.5 million; and according to Navy officials, the naval force will be approaching 2,000,000 by the end of 1943.
> With reference to the available manpower, Secretary of Labor Perkins stated in September that she did not believe there would be any real labor shortage making it necessary for Congress to enact legislation regulating the use of manpower. At practically the same time, Chairman McNutt of the War Manpower Commission asserted that a manpower shortage is imminent, and that legislation to control the allocation of the labor supply is imperative.

Some of those statements you will notice go back to last fall, and yet in the President's Budget message he in my mind still raises the question, to the effect that these munitions can be obtained only provided we properly balance the manpower and the womanpower forces of this country. The Industrial Conference Board, together with other studies which have been submitted, indicate that we have a total labor force in this country of approximately sixty-two to sixty-five million people, but in order to obtain that high figure, you have to take in many of the able-bodied youngsters between the ages of 14 and 19, who are now in school, and you have to take in a great army of the women in this country under 45 years of age, who have reached maturity, married or single, and with children over 16 years of age. Studies have been made in connection with maintaining a 9,500,000-man army, and a 12,000,000-man army. If you will permit a personal reference, based upon these studies, I wrote my own family this very week and told my wife to prepare herself mentally to be brought into this question of securing munitions, and by munitions I mean total war supplies, on a basis of a ten to twelve million man army. With the food supplies that we have, and which have been so very well referred to by our friend, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE] this afternoon, I think we will have to scrape the bottom of the meal barrel in order to get out this production of war material and I think these men and women, boys and girls, will have to move into the production lines at just as rapid a rate as possible, and with all the work of these people, unless we get ships far beyond anything in sight at the present time, I do not think you will have the bottoms in which to move the men and goods, after you prepare for a ten to twelve million man army.

Mr. Metz in his study gives us these interesting figures. On the basis of a nine and one-half million man army, in 1944, you will need a total labor force of 65,000,000 people, consisting of an agricultural force of nine and one-half million, an unemployed force of 1,000,000, agricultural workers nine and six-tenths million, and nonagricultural, 45,000,000, and he points out that—

> The magnitude of the draft upon the youth and the aged is indicated by the fact that we would be recruiing for full-time employment over 15 percent of the 11,000,000 persons in the over 65 and between 14- and 19-year groups, both boys and girls who are not now employed, and that in the case of homemakers we should have to take at least 60 percent of the nonfarm women who are under 45 and who have no young dependent children. It is obvious that such a program would involve enormous social as well as economic consequences.

I think these are some of the things that the President was referring to when he said that this subject needs to be discussed and thought out by our people.

Going on in connection with this study, and dealing with an army of 12,000,000 men, if the armed force could be increased to 12,000,000 by the end of 1944, with no increase thereafter, then in 1945 you will need 69,000,000 people in the labor forces. This would require an increase in the labor force of ten and four-tenths million people from 1942 to 1945. This means the using of 250,000 Mexican workers and two and four-tenths million retired workers, five and six-tenths million homemakers, and 2,000,000 as a result of the natural increase in the population. At least 20 percent of those between 14 and 19 years of age normally in school and of the workers who would normally retire would have to be brought into the labor force, and at the same time all nonfarm homemakers under 45 without small children would also be required.

I think it is well for the country, for the women of this country, particularly the homemakers, our wives, to consider these studies which are now before those who are dealing with this manpower problem. Now, going on to one or two other points.

FINANCING THE EXPENDITURES

In his Budget message the President pointed out that before Pearl Harbor our monthly expenditures for war were running around two billions, that now they have reached six billions, and that during this current fiscal year we shall top seventy-seven billions, and in the following fiscal year we are to disburse $100,000,000,000 for war purposes. He gives some figures which I have projected along with the chart made by the Industrial Conference Board. Taking the appropriations as of July 31, 1942, at two hundred and fourteen billions and adding to that the one hundred billions called for by the message the other day, makes a total of three hundred and fourteen and two-tenths billions; and when you take the amount spent against this before Pearl Harbor of thirteen and one-tenth billions, the amount spent up to June 30, 1942, of thirty-two and four-tenths billions, and the amount to be spent during the current fiscal year, we have a total of one hundred and nine billions, and deduct that from the three-hundred and fourteen and two-tenths billions it leaves two hundred and four and eight-tenths billions of dollars to be spent on war subsequent to July 1, 1943, having in mind only the appropriations and authorizations heretofore made plus those called for in this Budget. We can well raise this question: To whom are the securities to finance these activities to be sold? Let us look at that for just a moment. Taking into consideration the $12,000,000,000 of securities placed by the Treasury last month, the month of December, we find that nonbanking sources purchased $7,230,000,000, and the banking sources purchased $5,070,000,000; in other words, about 41 percent of this last issue was placed in the commercial banks of this country and thereby became highly inflationary material. Now, let us consider this thought for a moment: I believe it is reasonable to assume that the business institutions and insurance companies and corporations other than commercial banks skimmed the cream from their cash positions this last month in their purchase of the large volume of securities which they purchased. They undoubtedly exerted themselves in their response to the Treasury to make the selling campaign a success. But let me ask this question: Will those corporations, estates, and trusts repeat with such a liberal response say in the month of April 1943, when another great issue must be sold? And again every 3 months or more often, will they so respond? It is reasonable, I submit, they will not be able to do so. In that event the Treasury will then have to resort more specifically to two other sources: First, the savings and income of individual citizens; and, second, the commercial banks. Let us examine into this question further: During the 13 months December 1, 1941, to December 31, 1942, Savings bonds amounting to about $10,000,000,000 were sold to our people; just a fraction of their income during that period and only a small percent of the total disbursements for war purposes during those months. Monthly redemptions of Savings bonds have jumped from about $16,000,000 in December 1941, to around $50,000,000 in December 1942. That is a rather small item at present as related to the total amount of Savings bonds outstanding. Taking the amount of disbursements given by the President for the remainder of the current fiscal year plus the more than $100,000,000,000 to be spent during the coming fiscal year makes it very clear to everyone who listens that the individual citizen must probably double or treble his purchases unless we are to resort to the wildest inflationary process and place these Treasury issues in the commercial banks, taking whatever economic consequences that may follow.

It should be clear to all that if we are to avoid inflation the deficit after such increase in taxation as Congress sees fit to provide must be financed out of the savings of individuals and the savings and uninvested accumulations of corporations. And I submit this question: If the Congress adopts the Carlson-Ruml plan as advocated by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CARLSON] this week, will that assist in preventing inflation or in promoting inflation? More about this later.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WHITTINGTON). Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I am indebted for this time to the gentleman from Michigan who preceded me. He told me that he was to talk about the Budget message and wished I would add a little to his remarks. I have usually studied recent budgets, listened to the reading of the present one, then taken the floor at once, commented and made comparisons. This message you heard on Monday was so general in character that there was little to comment on, since there was no chance to compare, there being not many detailed figures or statements in it. Message that the nonmilitary appropriations amounted to little because they more or less tied into the war effort, and might be generally included as military expenses. Like the first message, we were given a generalization and patriotic talk. The President paid tribute to all of our citizens who were doing most yeoman service in the war effort. The real trouble that I have had for years, or had years ago, was a fear that the Budget would raise the debt to the point of real danger. I have had to change my mind however. When asked if our debt would be paid, I have always said that that depended upon the willingness of Congress to tax our people sufficiently to pay it. We were then talking about some four to ten billions! Now, of course, we are talking about a debt of $210,000,000,000. I have had to change my views and fix my eyes upon the stars and infinity.

The President has asked us for some $35,000,000,000 to be taken out of the people's pockets in 1 year. We never dreamed that the time would, or could ever come when our people would pay willingly, even in war time, $35,000,000,000 almost all of which would be in direct taxes; and now it is suggested that we ought to have a $16,000,000,000 tax in addition to the $35,000,000,000.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. The $35,000,000,000 the gentleman mentions does not take into consideration the twenty or more billions that the people of this country pay to the States and the subdivisions of the States.

Mr. GIFFORD. Oh, no.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Our States and State subdivisions have been very careful about paying their debts.

Mr. GIFFORD. The gentleman is correct. I have found, as I have observed, read, and listened to discussions on taxation by those in power within the Administration, that they have not too carefully refrained from giving the probable reason for desiring that our people become used to paying very heavy taxes to the Federal Government each year. If we are to be taxed 50 percent of our war effort each year, we can pay our debt in a few short years.

What is their real object? It apparently is that they want about the same amount of money each year after the war. Some now in authority are telling you that it is probably going to cost as much or more to keep the peace after the war is over. They apparently hope to extract from our people forty to fifty billions of dollars in taxes each year for some time to come, so that they can proceed to make the world over by acting as Santa Claus for all backward nations.

Little did I dream, a few short years ago, that a Congress would ever dare to impose such huge amounts of taxes on our citizens. What marvelous things we will do when patriotism is the issue. However, when the war is over, will our patriotism extend to such enormous exactions to keep the nations at peace through largesses? The idea to continue lend-lease methods is the vehicle for continuance of the huge spendings contemplated.

Do you not think that I have reason for these assumptions?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Jesse Jones tells us that we can expect on the basis of today's price level a national income of $135,000,000,000 for the calendar year 1943. I think this is the problem that the Congress faces and I feel it very deeply. We have had a 35-percent increase in the price level since the outbreak of the war. Assuming that is correct, I want to ask the gentleman, what in your opinion would have been the increase in the price level had our people not tended to practically hoard many of their liquid savings after income instead of letting them flow into the competitive retail market bidding against each other? Where does the gentleman think the price level would have gone to?

Mr. GIFFORD. I do not know. I know what the gentleman thinks. He probably thinks that the price level in 2 years from now will be 75 percent higher than it is at the present time.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is correct.

Mr. GIFFORD. I will let the gentleman answer his own question. I cannot challenge that statement. I have said I did not think it was possible that our people would give up $40,000,000,000 for any purpose during one particular year. Are we not afraid of what our credit may be after the war? Certainly, such a huge amount of taxes each year ought to preserve our credit if applied to the debt. But will it?

The new scheme is to take the money from any source they can get it. They desire to seize your savings, or much of your salary, that it may be returned to you after the war. They suggest that you buy listed articles on installments, but such articles could only be delivered after the war is over. That argument must be challenged at once. The Secretary of the Treasury is right. He says that this can better be accomplished by buying savings bonds. What about this great demand debt of ours? We are selling bonds and stamps in great quantities, making a highly dangerous debt on demand. This must now amount to some thirty billions.

But this administration has been shrewdly planning after all. It has learned a lot about currency. I will place an interesting reassurance in the RECORD. Do not worry about not getting back dollars that you paid for your bonds. But you may still worry about what those dollars will buy. I will read this into the RECORD:

> Dollars are not a problem. Cash for bonds turned in can come from other bonds sold to other investors or to banks. After the war all the holders will not sell their War bonds at once. Furthermore, the Government can create more deposits as fast as bonds are offered for sale, and, if buyers for new bonds can't possibly be found, the Federal Reserve System can step in and buy. The Government has guaranteed to supply dollars in exchange for its bonds, and there is nothing that can interfere with that guarantee.

You will get your dollars. The new Members have not yet heard me bewail our financial conditions. I must confess that the public have proven themselves apparently willing to be taxed some $40,000,000,000, therefore I must withdraw some former lamentations. I will close with a quotation I have often used, but now repeat for the possible enjoyment of the new Members:

> Hush, little deficit;
> Don't you cry,
> You'll be a crisis
> By and by.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a letter addressed by the gentleman from Texas, Mr. JOE MANSFIELD, to Mr. Roy Miller with reference to a matter involving considerable foresight on the part of the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, which, had it been acted upon would have largely reduced the present shortage of fuel in the Eastern States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KLEBERG]?

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and of course I shall not object, the gentleman refers to that barge canal across the Florida Peninsula?

Mr. KLEBERG. I do refer to that. It is a rather full set-up for any reference of the House to the facts in connection with that matter.

Mr. RANKIN. In other words, if that had been developed, the people on the Atlantic seaboard would have plenty of oil today. They would not be freezing and shivering?

Mr. KLEBERG. That is right.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what has been done regarding the Florida ship canal thus far?

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Donald Nelson recently made some recommendations which are set out in this letter. It will take less time if the gentleman will read this than for me to explain it.

Mr. RANKIN. This is the barge canal, not the ship canal.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KLEBERG]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. GORE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of all special orders on the calendar for today I may be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GORE]?

There was no objection.

PROBLEMS OF THE SMALL BUSINESSMAN

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, the small businessman today is suffering very much, especially in the city of New York, and probably in all other communities, because of the red tape in the regulations heaped upon him by the various Government agencies. The act which Congress passed to relieve the burdens of the small businessman has not done very much for him.

We talk about the little fellow who is the backbone of the country, the small retailer, the butcher, the grocer, and the others who are the backbone of our way of life, yet although I have heard much said on the floor of this House and of the other body and seen much in the newspapers about it, I have not as yet seen one constructive measure that would in some form or another bail out the small businessman who is in trouble because of the sudden changes in our economic life.

I refer as an illustration to my own city, a city of close to 7,000,000 people, the greatest center in the world for industry, science, culture, and almost everything you can name. As the war progresses and as the problems of our industrial development become more acute, it is of tremendous importance that Congress lend its effort to find a solution to these problems in the best interest of industry and labor. In New York City, for instance, the garment industry, which used to employ say half a million people and indirectly affected the welfare of an additional three-quarters of a million of the population, has been hit very hard by war conditions, and the complicated and arbitrary orders and regulations heaped upon it by the O. P. A. and the Labor Department do not help industry in its desperate struggle to adjust itself to a war economy.

I am not blaming the administration; I am not blaming the leadership of this present Government, but something is radically wrong. Either Congress pays no attention when it is passing laws, or it throws the whole burden of issuing rules and regulations and orders on the departments or commissions or other agencies, and as a result a lot of dollar-a-year men who, in my opinion, ought to be removed from all Government agencies, get a great deal of power they should not have. If we need experienced men in certain industries, we ought to employ experts, pay them a regular wage, and make sure they work for the interest of the whole country and not for the exclusive interest of their respective companies.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Does not the gentleman believe those businessmen are experts?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. They are experts when it comes to their own business, but I believe some of them are more interested in their former business associations than in the job they hold. I say some of them. I believe the dollar-a-year men are all right in their own factories, but not working for the Government. I think we ought to employ capable men at a definite wage and know that they are administering for the benefit of all the people the laws that Congress passes, and not administering them for a special group or a special individual.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The gentleman is making a very constructive statement.

Would he go further and suggest the class from which these experts should be drawn? Will the gentleman make a constructive suggestion as to where they could be gotten?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I think they can get plenty of capable men if they pay them.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Where?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. There are plenty of them in this country today, big men.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I know the gentleman is trying to help, but will he name some of them or tell us the societies or the class from which they can be drawn?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I could go into that very thoroughly and most likely completely, and I am going to make every effort I can to see what I can do to satisfy the gentleman.

It is true that Congress has approved the laws under which the Labor Department and the O. P. A. are functioning, but I feel sure that we never intended to set up agencies which would complicate matters by bureaucratic methods and a lot of red tape. It is true that consumers must be protected against speculative prices. It is true that it is necessary to ration certain materials to insure equal distribution. It is true that steps must be taken to guard against inflation.

Mr. Speaker, I am not attacking the basic law enacted by Congress to take care of certain emergencies, but I certainly disagree with the way these laws are being administered. Judging by the various orders and regulations with which the country has been swamped in the last few months, it would seem that a lot of people who know nothing about the various industries are allowed to draw the orders in which the prices are fixed. The harassed small businessman cannot possibly understand the complicated legal terms. He has to employ attorneys and additional clerks to comply with all the new rules and regulations. He has to fill out so many forms that his own business almost becomes a side line.

Take for example M. P. R. 287, which is supposed to regulate the manufacturing of women's, girls', and children's outerwear garments.

This, by the way, is only 1 part of several other circulars dealing with other branches of the garment industry. In order to establish a maximum price, the order goes along for 20 columns, closely printed regulations, and winds up with a table which divides the articles in question into 31 different groups, each of which is subdivided into 16 more groups. There are, therefore, 496 distinct items which must be borne in mind by the manufacturer of such garments in that industry; otherwise he simply could not manufacture. Now, Mr. Speaker, 496 items are a large number to consider if a person wishes to engage in this type of business. Out of the 496 types, there must be at least 75 percent which necessarily affect the wages to be paid by the employer in such establishments. We, therefore, come to the question as to how it would be possible for a businessman to continue his activity and pay a reasonable wage to employees, with such a tremendous amount of detailed regulations which he must follow; otherwise the regulations provide for detailed penalties and all kind of unpleasant reprisals. When I say 496 I am really somewhat inaccurate. We have to multiply this by 496 more, since in addition to the regulations established in 1 part of the order there are different figures established in another portion of the same regulations covering 496 other items. So that the total number is really twice 496, or almost a thousand detailed figures which have to be borne in mind if the manufacturer is not to become enmeshed in these regulations to the extent which will mean his complete extinction or bankruptcy. I did not say a word as yet about the 20 columns of the text which tell the manufacturer what to do and what not to do, and which prescribe for him and all kind of methods of determining the wages and determining the styles, and all of the other manifold regulations, with which he is pressed under this circular known as M. P. R. 287. I am afraid that most of the regulators, who so plentifully supply the Government Printing Office with printing matter for the regulation of industry, do not in most cases know the first thing about the problems of the industry, or the necessities of either the manufacturer or the worker. The administration in my opinion is opposed to all this, but we have some people in these various branches of Government, who apparently sit up night and day thinking up new orders to keep busy without realizing what these complicated orders will do to business.

Mr. CALVIN D. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes.

Mr. CALVIN D. JOHNSON. As a new Member seeking information, it is quite surprising to me the number of men making these regulations. Can the gentleman tell me who voted these agencies into being?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Oh, Congress does not adopt the regulations.

Mr. CALVIN D. JOHNSON. Did you vote for the bill originally?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Certainly.

Mr. CALVIN D. JOHNSON. Then, may I ask this: Do you feel that we should make some changes?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I shall come to that in a moment. I want to answer the gentleman's question. The gentleman is a new Member. We pass a law, and then we say that the administrator, or the person who is to carry out the intent of the law, shall make such rules and regulations. Congress cannot do that. All we can do is to tell the administrator to make regulations and put them into effect.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes.

Mr. COX. Does not the gentleman agree with me that if we have the remotest hope of preserving government by the people that the time has arrived for us to cease talking and begin acting?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I agree with the gentleman. I think that is a fair statement. We should act.

Mr. COX. Does not the gentleman agree with me that we are living under a government of dictatorship by bureaucrats?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I would not put it that way. That is a rather strong statement to make. We are just living under a government, a pretty good government, that is trying its best to protect the interests of all the people. There are some people in some of the Government agencies, however, that are misfits. We ought to study these problems carefully, remove the incompetents, and put better men in office.

Mr. COX. I wonder if the gentleman will agree with me in the further statement that the way to stop these bureaucrats is to starve them out by not giving them money to carry on that practice.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Oh, that is rather a large order.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I understand the gentleman to say that the administration is opposed to this, and that the gentleman is condemning these unnecessary regulations?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I think so. I do not think, for example, that the administration is in favor of all the time-consuming orders and regulations which are practically ruining a whole industry in my city. It is simply a matter of having too many people trying to show their authority in drawing up orders on subjects they know very little about.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Will the gentleman point out just one instance where the administration has indicated that it is against this regimentation and this bureaucratic interference?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I have not gone into that particular phase except that I have talked to a few people. Some of them did not themselves know what the regulations were, because some of their understudies drafted them. If the situation is the same in other industries, as it seems to be in the shoe industry and the clothing industry, the gentleman will find that before long nobody will know where we are or where we are going. We ought to turn around and clean house.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. The gentleman, then, cannot point out any single instance where the administration has indicated that it is against this regimentation and this bureaucracy. The statement which the gentleman made that the administration is opposed to these things is not therefore backed up by any proof.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I think it is the great responsibility of the Congress in passing laws fixing prices, or laws for the general welfare and the benefit of the people, to make doubly sure who is going to administer the law and what kind of regulations are going to be made to take care of the administration of the law rather than to pass a law so general in term that it in effect says: "Mr. Administrator, you can issue any regulations you want," and then pay no more attention to it until our constituents commence to squawk.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield, but my time is going fast, and I have many more things to call to the attention of the House.

Mr. BROOKS. I have been furnished figures to the effect that during the year 1942 some 33,000 small food stores in the United States had to close their doors, and I have been told that to a general extent this was due to the multitudinous regulations that are smothering them out of business. Has the gentleman got those figures too?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I think the gentleman made a fair statement.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me? I will give the gentleman 2 minutes of my time.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I do not want to take the gentleman's time; I want to use my own.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Two minutes of mine for half a minute of the gentleman's?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I cannot yield.

At the present time we have over 400,000 people unemployed in the needle industry of New York. We have no defense work, we have no other method of taking care of these families, and this means 100,000 families.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. COX. The gentleman should call that to the attention of the people who are saddling inefficients on the Government, because today we find washerwomen and bricklayers holding jobs as stenographers in every department of the Government here in Washington.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. There is another serious problem the manufacturers in the garment industry have to face and that is the interpretation of certain phases of the Walsh-Healey Act. The Secretary of Labor, as well as her inspectors, have shown very bad judgment in the intepretation and enforcement of this act and have created a great deal of unnecessary confusion and uncalled for hardships. In order to remedy this situation, I saw fit to introduce the other day a bill—H. R. 690—which deals with a certain phase of the so-called Walsh-Healey Act, affecting public contracts. It provides that the determination of the Secretary of Labor shall be subject to review by the circuit court of the United States and confers jurisdiction on the circuit court to hear an appeal taken from the decision of the Secretary of Labor.

Due to the administration of prices and the various regulations dealing with the production of New York City's needle industry as well as the curtailment of civilian needs, a good many business concerns could keep their heads above water only by securing Government contracts from the Army and the Navy Departments. The Walsh-Healey Act gives the Secretary of Labor certain rights in approving or disapproving concerns bidding for Government contracts and the Secretary of Labor has not been very wise in using this authority. The rules and regulations set up by her Department are very complicated and as has been proven in a number of cases were even too complicated for her own investigators to interpret. How, then, can one expect the average businessman to be able to obey all these rules and regulations? It is almost impossible to escape technical infractions of these regulations, and the average small businessman harassed by regulations coming from the various Government agencies, must, whether he wants to or not technically violate some of them at some time or another. When that happens, there is another section of the Public Contracts Act which says that when a businessman violates any of the rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Labor, the Secretary can bar him from bidding on any public contract for 3 years. Invariably where such an event has happened, the Secretary of Labor, in spite of the fact that the power to bar a businessman from future contracts is discretionary, has exercised her right to the *n*th degree, and has always barred a business manufacturer from future contracts, so that in addition to paying a fine and being beset with all these rules and regulations the slightest infraction of any of them means being put out of business. In this way, more thousands of employees lose their jobs and again the roll of unemployed increases.

To bring partial relief in this situation, the bill I introduced, H. R. 690, will vest in the circuit court of appeals the right to overrule the Secretary of Labor whenever the facts in a case may warrant such action. At least some way will be provided for, by which the courts will be able to determine whether or not the infraction of some minor rule by a manufacturer shall bar him from future contracts and throw his employees out of work.

This becomes so much more necessary, since the Supreme Court, on January 11, 1943, sustained the scope of the Walsh-Healey Act, and strengthened the powers of the Secretary of Labor, making her a virtual czar in the enforcement of this act. There should be some check on the powers of this executive official and the place for such a check should lie in the courts.

I hope and expect that Congress will enact this proposed legislation without delay so as to give much needed relief to a great number of people who through no fault of their own are losing the means to make a livelihood for themselves and their families.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair calls attention to the fact there are several other special orders pending.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I withdraw the request.

SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. ROLPH] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. ROLPH. Mr. Speaker, all Members of Congress will receive within the next few days a personal message from the Apartment House Association of San Francisco. I have a copy of it here. It is a letter dated December 31, 1942, signed by Douglas Dorn as president. I urge my colleagues to read not only Mr. Dorn's letter, but also the interesting data and information contained in the brochure attached. The title of the brochure is "Rent Control—as Congress Intended it—as O. P. A. Runs it."

Many citizens of San Francisco feel they have been unfairly treated. On October 14, 1942, Justice James F. Byrnes appeared before the House Committee on Banking and Currency seeking an amendment to the Price Control Act to cover Nation-wide rent control. I quote a portion of the colloquy between Justice Byrnes and myself appearing on page 18 of the committee hearings:

Mr. ROLPH. Mr. Justice, I come from San Francisco and I was out there recently and a number of these people who have modern apartment houses have asked me if some machinery could not be set up whereby they could make applications to have their rents increased. For instance, during the depression they reduced their rents very drastically and now they are unable to get any increases because of the Rent Control Act and a good many tenants have had their incomes very greatly increased through the war situation. I was wondering if you could not arrange to have some simple machinery set up so these people could be heard without great delay.

Justice BYRNES. There is no reason why it should not be done. I will be glad if you will get in touch with me to ask those in charge to provide machinery to give them a hearing on it. I will be delighted to assist you in that.

I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that I did not have any opportunity of going over these remarks before they were printed. The words "modern apartment" as printed in the hearings is a mistake, for I am sure I said "moderate apartment."

About 10 days after the October meeting of the committee I went home to San Francisco for the November election, returning to Washington some time about the middle of December. While home, many people broached their rent troubles to me. On January 2, 1943, I wrote Justice Brynes a letter under the caption "Rent Control":

WASHINGTON, January 2, 1943.

Hon. JAMES F. BYRNES,
National Economic Stabilizer,
Board of Economic Stabilization,
Washington, D. C.

RENT CONTROL

DEAR JUSTICE BYRNES: You remember when you appeared before the House Banking and Currency Committee in connection with rent control I asked if it were not possible for some simple machinery to be set up in order that cases in which the landlords felt they were being unjustly treated, could be heard.

You were very kind and expressed your sympathy in connection with this problem.

I am enclosing herewith letter addressed to me as well as to Senator HIRAM JOHNSON, Senator SHERIDAN DOWNEY, and Hon. RICHARD J. WELCH, written by Joseph A. Brown, attorney for Apartment House Industry of San Francisco, under date of December 28.

I would greatly appreciate your earnest consideration to this matter.

With every good wish for the new year, I am,

Cordially,

THOMAS ROLPH.

Mr. Speaker, I received the following reply, dated January 4:

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 4, 1943.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I have your letter of January 2 with reference to the rent-control program.

Of course, you know I have nothing to do with determining the manner in which this office should be administered, but I am forwarding your letter to Mr. Paul Porter with the request that he give consideration to the letter from Mr. Joseph A. Brown.

Sincerely yours,

JAMES F. BYRNES.

To date I have had no word from Mr. Paul Porter.

Mr. Speaker, I also submit a letter dated San Francisco, January 6, 1943, from Mr. and Mrs. Pessarra, of 811 Forty-second Avenue, reading as follows:

SAN FRANCISCO, January 6, 1943.

To Congressman T. ROLPH,
Fourth District.

HONORABLE CONGRESSMAN: We never did ask any favors. But now we feel we are, with many others, being treated very unjust. We have been decent citizens. Could we please get some kind of closer information about that Office of Price Administration renting business—as it is, it is a most unfair-one-sided proposition only for the tenants. Our case is miserable, not only unjust. In 1941 we rented to one particular tenant very reasonable as he kept chewing down on Mr. Pessara until he finally gave in to said tenant's terms; said tenant faithfully promised they both where never home thereby using very little or barely any gas and elect. Same tenant is using both by far too much, thereby breaking his word. Agreements have just been mutual, not in writing, as no one would ever come, thought then that such laws could ever come, where the property owner had absolutely nothing to say any more except take all mischief whatever a tenant might do. The Office of Price Administration tells us there is nothing we can do, no matter how much said tenants are using or wasting it is up to the landlord to write to his Congressman so the present laws may be changed. In our other apart. is the same thing improved conditions under 1940 unimproved conditions (rentals). The tenant can do as he pleases, waste hot water and break all his other agreement to any extent even using terrible language if you ask them in a nice way to be a little more careful. Why does that Office of Price Administration renting law just condemn the landlords and step all over them? While wages and food prices have gone sky high are we not even to exist any more? This is one of the most unfair and class discriminating laws ever been put in effect yet. Please try your utmost to do something for us and help better just a little on that law as now it's very unfair. We both have been loyal voters with friends in your both terms and want to be in the future. Sorry to bother you with our trouble in this times as you must be a very busy man but the Office of Price Administration says to write your Congressman to change the laws; as it is now they can't do nothing. I will not go into details about my other problems in my aparts, as it would be too much for you to read.

Thanking you sincerely.

Yours truly,

Mr. and Mrs. PESSARRA.

Mr. ROWE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROLPH. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. ROWE. What is the date fixed for the fixing of rents?

Mr. ROLPH. San Francisco was one of the first areas declared a defense area. I cannot remember the date. It was away back in the early part of 1942.

Mr. ROWE. April 1, 1941.

Mr. ROLPH. Whatever date it was. I cannot remember the exact date, but I know that San Francisco was among the first areas.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROLPH. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Does the gentleman agree with me that 90 percent of the difficulties that are emanating out of the rent-control situation is due to the regulatory concept of the law instead of the law itself?

Mr. ROLPH. Exactly.

Mr. SHEPPARD. May I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that I have filed a bill today to correct the situation, and I hope the gentleman will support it.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROLPH. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. It is a most encouraging thing to note that our friend from California is trying to correct some of these errors. Is it not a fact that the minority side protested against this broad grant of power when those bills were put through, but in spite of that they were jammed down our throats?

Mr. ROLPH. I voted for the price-control bill.

Mr. HOFFMAN. And now what have you got?

Mr. ROLPH. Well, I am trying to correct certain objectionable inequities.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The trouble with that bill, as well as others, is that it delegated the power down at the other end. They could not do a thing except through what we have given them the power to do. The minority side objected to those broad grants of power to those individuals, and I am glad the gentleman is trying to correct them.

Mr. KNUTSON. Is the gentleman doing penance today?

Mr. ROLPH. No. I am trying to correct a wrong.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROLPH. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. I wonder if the gentleman can agree with me in the statement that the practice of the Congress in the adoption of legislation carrying broad grants of power permitting an almost unfettered use of discretion is the thing that has made the Congress ridiculous throughout the country and put it in a bad situation?

Mr. ROLPH. I agree with the gentleman; we should correct it.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROLPH. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Would the gentleman agree with me that one of the greatest errors that has been made by O. P. A., the Rent Control Division thereof in particular, is that they have set up rules and regulations which take them into the most intimate activities of the homes of our people and the owners of those homes and apartment buildings and business institutions, to a point where there is such great interference that the people themselves resent the activity by reason of the fact that they personalize these interferences. In other words, our people are not objecting to rationing as such, they are not objecting to the scarcity of materials due to the war needs, they are not objecting to the personal sacrifices they make on that basis, but they are objecting to the type of administration by which the O. P. A. sticks its nose into everything that we try to do in order to promote our welfare and carry on the war.

Mr. ROLPH. May I say that it has been my experience in my trips home that it is perfectly amazing and perfectly wonderful the way the people have accepted every request and every regulation that has come out of Washington? This method of trying to have these things changed is an orderly and proper way for them to do it. I think the people should have credit for doing it the way they do. I think it is a wonderful demonstration of the loyalty and patriotism of the American people the way they have cooperated with this Government 100 percent. I thank the gentleman very much for his observation.

Mr. ROWE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROLPH. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. ROWE. Does the gentleman know that in Summit County, Ohio, the rent control board is now employing snoopers to go out and inquire of renters whether or not they are satisfied with their agreements with the rentees, and where there are perfectly amicable arrangements in existence they foment trouble in order that they may have control?

Mr. ROLPH. I think that is very unfortunate.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If the gentleman will yield further, may I call his attention to the enormous form, tabulation after tabulation, that has just come out. I have a copy on my desk. The owner of a house or an apartment must fill out this form. Then, as I understand, the O. P. A. takes that form and hands it to the tenant, thus stimulating a dog fight between the tenant and the owner of the place.

Mr. ROLPH. I am not familiar with that condition, but it should be corrected at once.

Mr. Speaker, if municipalities and other political subdivisions are to be saved from long lists of delinquent taxpayers, it is necessary that relief be granted at once to those who are suffering gross inequities. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I am introducing a resolution setting forth that to successfully further the war effort the House Committee on Banking and Currency should make a complete national survey of rent control.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROLPH. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. Does not the gentleman find in the administration of the price-control regulations strong evidence of a violent and hostile attitude toward private ownership?

Mr. ROLPH. That is what my people at home tell me

Mr. COX. In other words, an intent to outlaw the institution of private property in this country?

Mr. ROLPH. I would not say that, but I think they are overzealous, and I believe the conditions should be corrected.

Mr. ROWE. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield further, may I say not only to the gentleman who has the floor but to the other Members of the House that the present speaker has in his hands a letter addressed to him from the brother of a boy who is on Guadalcanal doing that job for $55 a month. He has a 6-room modern home in the city of Akron, Ohio, in which seven people are living. Their total income from work in war industries exceeds $700 a month. The Rent Control Board compels that man to rent that property for $22 a month.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF] is recognized for 7 minutes.

BUREAUCRACY RUNS WILD

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, again a committee controlled by the party of the administration has had to conclude from the evidence before it that faulty management of the armament procurement program, the manpower program, and a general condition of confusion in the bureaucracy at Washington are interfering with the highest efficiency in our war effort.

This report is not made by "obstructionists," "isolationists," or "partisan Republicans." It is made by a special committee of the House of Representatives headed by a Congressman noted for his astuteness and fairness, and who last November was highly praised by the Democratic floor leader of the House as a man who had always supported the administration as far as possible. Under these circumstances, the report of the Tolan committee is very disquieting and merits the grave consideration of the American people. The people must not be discouraged by such reports as these. On the contrary, they should be encouraged that faults can be discovered and corrected. The most dangerous situation which could arise would be one in which a congressional committee could not find out and make public such facts as those secured by the Tolan committee.

There will be those, it is to be presumed, who will assert that the report of the Tolan committee may give aid and comfort to the enemy. Such a view is foolish and unwarranted. The very fact that the Tolan committee has uncovered the practices and derelictions which it describes in its report is the guaranty that the Congress will see to it that these weaknesses in the war effort are remedied. That will give no aid and comfort to the enemy.

The committee, in its report, is sharply critical of the way the armed services are handling armament procurement. The report expresses general concern over the manner in which Manpower Commissioner Paul V. McNutt is shaping up that program. The committee declares that we cannot win the war merely with our surplus energies, and makes a recommendation for the establishment of an over-all civilian war mobilization agency. This proposal should be scrutinized very carefully, because piling agency on agency has not heretofore achieved efficiency. On the contrary, the practice has resulted in conflicting authority, contradictions of policy, seething internal jealousies and general confusion. It is not too much to say that our greatest danger in this war comes from an enemy led by General Confusion.

The criticisms of the larger business corporations voiced by the committee arise largely because those larger corporations have been pulled and hauled, have operated under conflicting instructions, and cross lines of jurisdiction which have made it very difficult for business to operate efficiently at all. In spite of these obstacles, American free enterprise has already accomplished a marvelous job and will continue to do so. The committee took special pains to deplore the custom among Washington bureaucrats of substituting words for deeds. The committee said, in part:

> There has been a widespread attempt to persuade the American public that many of the steps previously urged by this and other congressional committees have been carried out when even a brief investigation by well-informed persons will reveal the contrary.

This is a very disquieting condition of affairs—this empty pretention of following congressional directions and advice—especially when considered in connection with a most recent defiance of a direct congressional expression of will. There was an open and flagrant breaking of a specific promise made by administration spokesmen in both Houses of the Congress.

The essential point is that these dangers and derelictions pointed out in the Tolan Committee report must be remedied. Since it is apparent the executive department seems not intent to remedy its own mistake, the Congress, on behalf of the American people, will have to take a firm stand. These criticisms must be given serious attention, because they are of grave import and merit serious consideration.

We must immediately move to eliminate as far as possible all the objectionable features which now characterize the war effort, both in the civilian and military divisions as pointed out in the Tolan report. This special committee has done the Nation a great service and there is no question but that the Congress will give careful attention to the committee's report.

The SPEAKER. Under a special order heretofore made, the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] for 10 minutes.

BUREAUCRACY

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I do not see our friend from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] around. He is the gentleman who spoke to us earlier today and complained so bitterly about the bureaucrats, who are raising hob with his people up in New York. It was certainly refreshing, but it was at the same time somewhat ridiculous, if one can experience all three in so short a period, to hear the gentleman complain about those bureaucrats, because I recall very distinctly, that when those acts which gave those bureaucrats authority were under consideration here in the House, every time a Republican got up and called attention, as we did many, many times, to what would happen, to the misuse that would be made of the power granted—every single time someone on the majority side, usually the majority leader—and I am sorry that he is not present at the moment—would get up and, figuratively speaking, just damn the Republicans from hell to breakfast for playing politics, when they pointed out the absurdity of making those grants of arbitrary power and the abuse of power which would be made if we gave it to them. Now, when they cannot deny the misuse and abuse of that power, they come in as has my friend, who has now, I see, come into the Chamber, and themselves complain about these very bureaucrats. I say to my friend from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] that he was one of the principal advocates of that legislation. I am glad that he has repented. I hope his repentance is deep-seated, and sincere. I hope it will stick. I hope he will not backslide.

The gentleman said that we have not offered one constructive suggestion. If he will go through the list of bills he will find that Republicans every time they criticized have offered a bill which, if adopted and adequately enforced, would have remedied the situation. Let the gentleman offer a constructive suggestion, and he will find every Republican here doing all he can to get the thing through.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The trouble is that some of the Republicans, instead of trying to honestly criticize and suggest a remedy, have criticised to such a degree that they have made it appear that there is somebody in the administration who is trying to bring about this complicated O. P. A. complication. I was not talking about the bureaucrats. I was talking about the bureaucracy in the regulation that was made in the particular needle industry, which requires almost 1,000 forms to fill out for that business. I was addressing myself to a specific question and the gentleman is trying to get me on another phase.

Mr, HOFFMAN. Oh, no; I am not. I am sticking to what the gentleman said. The gentleman was complaining because of regulations which the bureaucrats had made. They made those regulations under legislation which the gentleman advocated and supported.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. And for some of which the gentleman voted also.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Oh, wait a minute. I did not vote for your general grant of power. Because I did not vote for every blanket arbitrary grant of power; because I would not become a rubber stamp, I was accused during the campaign of obstructing the war effort. Now we know, and many a Member on the majority side admits, the absurdity of the regulations the bureaucrats are putting out under the power we gave them.

I knew that the doggone thing would not work, and so did almost everybody else in the country. It was only the professors and those New Dealers who thought that they could make it go. Now the argument is that the boss, the big boss, the administration, is not responsible for what his hired men do. Why does not he fire them? Was the gentleman in favor of Mr. Henderson resigning? He was one of those bureaucrats, or does the gentleman think he was one of the good ones?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I do not know whether he was good or bad. I know what is happening today with certain regulations and I do not believe the administration would sanction it if the matter was called to the attention of the public.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Oh, the gentleman means that the administration will not stand for it if the people make it too hot for the administration.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Oh, I did not say that.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The President is responsible. He has the power. He delegates it to somebody, to some bureaucrat, and then that bureaucrat comes along and squeezes the people so that they cannot support the men that we have sent abroad, and yet the gentleman says that the administration is not responsible. You tell me, in God's name, if the administration, which has the power and the money, is not responsible, who is?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Does the Republican platform and the Republican minority approve of everything that the gentleman from Michigan says on this floor?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Oh, heavens, no. We do our own thinking over on the Republican side. Each individual man over here thinks for himself, and if you would do a little thinking on some of these bills that I have introduced here, we would get a little further toward solving some of our problems. Although there are symptoms over here of following the leader, yet as a rule, if I understand it correctly, the Republicans have always done their own thinking and voting as their conscience and judgment have indicated they should vote.

Over there—and this is a secret, too—for the last 6 or 8 years those gentlemen on the majority side, patriotic as they are, have always played this little game of follow the leader. You all remember back when you were boys you played that game, and the leader would run around on top of this picket fence, over that ridge pole, and then the first thing you knew everyone was off in the ditch somewhere. Now, that is the situation we are in at the present time. And I am glad, I am happy, to know that the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN], who has been an ardent, an all-out, shut-eyes-and-swallow-everything supporter of the New Deal—now at last has discovered when his people in New York are being pinched that that medicine which he has been ramming down the necks of the people out in the country is not good medicine. It has proved to be castor oil instead of paregoric.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I was going on to talk about something—

Mr. DICKSTEIN. When the gentleman remembers, as he must, that time after time the Republican minority voted in a solid block, why does he criticize the Democratic Party? Why should we not vote in a solid block when we knew the proposed legislation was wrong?

Mr. HOFFMAN. No; I never criticized the Democrats; no, no, just the New Dealers.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Just a moment ago the gentleman condemned the whole Democratic Party.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Oh, my, no; there it is! That is the way it goes! The gentleman gets excited. I did not criticize the Democrats at all, because the Democrats are honest, conscientious, zealous Americans, though sometimes mistaken. It is just the New Dealers here who want to sell us out, who want to do away with our system of government, and are ruining our country; that is the only group I am criticizing. But wait a second—there is that other group, the Communists—I forgot them, but they work so close together that they come under one head.

But what I wanted to talk about is this: We have heard a lot today about the gentleman's people being cold. I rather fancy some of the constituents of the gentleman from New York are getting cold up there because they are not getting coal. I cannot sympathize too much with him about that. I cannot sympathize with him about the lack of beef, either, because I remember that he backed a policy under which, when our farmers wanted to take milk or meat into the city of New York before they could get into the city, our teamsters, our farmers, had to dig down in their socks and pay $8.41 if they were driving a small truck and $9.42 if it were a big truck, just to take farm produce into the city for the gentleman's constituents to eat to keep them from being hungry. You charged us—you robbed us, let me put it—while we were taking in food for them to eat—do not talk about selling it, even if we gave it to them, if we took a truckload of beef to feed the hungry people the gentleman says there are in New York and drove up to the city limits, we could not get into New York City until we dug up $8.41 tribute money to permit us to drive on the streets. Paid to the city? Oh, no; paid to the union racketeers. Now, what do you think of that? Do you think that was right? I wish they would get hungry and stay hungry just a little while, say, 5 minutes, until they changed their minds and decided to help themselves by being fair and breaking the grip of the racketeers. We can bring food and fuel to your city limits, but you will not let us bring it into the city markets and stores until we have paid for the privilege of bringing it in. It does not strike me that that is a situation that calls for sympathy for the people of the gentleman's district.

END THE COAL STRIKE

Now, as to this coal strike. Why was this strike brought on? It was caused by John L. Lewis and the racketeers in his organization sticking another 50 cents on the miners every month before they could work. The miners say: "We are patriotic; we will dig the coal if you let us." And John says: "No; you cannot dig any more coal until you pay that 50 cents." And the administration backs the policy of giving a closed shop and check-off, so that if the miner works that $1.50 will come out of his pay check. He never gets the money in his hand until that $1.50 is taken out. This coal strike is the fault of the administration.

Why does not the administration and the press turn their guns on the politicians in control of the labor union who are insisting upon the payment of this extra 50 cents? These miners never agreed to this additional 50-cent assessment. That was just put over on them by the organization to which they are compelled, by this administration, to belong. Let the administration quit playing a crooked political game with labor politicians and the miners will work.

The administration pretends to be a friend of labor. But what is it trying to do to the employees of Montgomery Ward & Co.? President Roosevelt in effect orders Montgomery Ward & Co. to refuse to continue giving jobs to the men and women employed by it unless those men and women pay the sums demanded by union officials.

In Germany, men and women work where Hitler's agents tell them to work. Here in America, men and women cannot work, even in defense of their country, unless they join and pay tribute to unions backed by the President.

Not long ago, in Jackson, Mich., 175 employees, who did not want to submit to the demands of 30 fellow employees who were members of a C. I. O. union, were told by the administration to get back to work. Why did not the administration tell the 30 C. I. O. employees to stop trying to force the 175 into the C. I. O. union?

Does this administration think it is creating confidence in our Government by demanding that everyone who wants to work in the highly paid jobs must open his pocket to the hand of the union racketeer, organizer, or politician?

It is all very well to talk about carrying the "four freedoms" to the uttermost parts of the world. What about having a little of the freedom to work right here at home?

Today I have introduced a bill which, if enacted, will help to end the un-American practice of sabotaging our war effort by insisting that everyone who wants to contribute to that effort kick in to the funds of an organization which contributed to the President's campaign fund.

Let us have a little more Americanism, a little more constitutional government, a little more regard for the freedom and liberty of our citizens; not quite so much solicitude toward building up organizations which may be able to exert political power in the 1944 campaign.

Two statements from Montgomery Ward shed light on the situation. I quote:

MONTGOMERY WARD'S SECOND STATEMENT TO NATIONAL WAR LABOR BOARD

The following statement was submitted to the National War Labor Board at its meeting in Washington on December 8, 1942:

The War Labor Board, on November 5, 1942, issued an order that Wards "incorporate" in a contract with a Congress of Industrial Organizations union at Chicago:

1. A clause establishing a form of the closed shop, called maintenance of membership, together with a check-off of union dues from wages.

2. A clause providing for compulsory arbitration on any questions the union wishes to raise.

3. A clause guaranteeing in these uncertain times present wage and working conditions for a year.

Wards rejected this order of the Board for these reasons:

1. The Board was without authority. Congress, the only lawmaking authority under the Constitution, has not empowered the Board to order any employer to do any of the things which the Board demanded of Wards.

2. The order violated the fundamental principles of liberty. Liberty requires that an employee be free to join or to resign from a union without jeopardizing his livelihood. Liberty requires that an employer be free to employ the person best suited for the work.

3. The order was in itself illegal. The order required Wards, first, to interfere with the free choice of its employees to resign from the union; second, to give support to the union by a check-off of union dues; and third, to discriminate against employees if they resigned their membership in the union, all in direct violation of the National Labor Relations Act.

4. Wards operates in a highly competitive field composed of 1,750,000 retail establishments. It is unfair to impose burdens upon Wards and not upon those with whom it is in competition.

The imposition of the closed shop against Wards cannot be justified by reference to the so-called no-strike agreement. Wards was not a party to this agreement. Wards had no voice in the selection of those who, as representatives of industry, attended the conference in December 1941, which formulated this agreement. Wards has never ratified the results of that conference.

Furthermore, the conference itself did not agree that the War Labor Board might impose the closed-shop principle. Those acting as representatives of industry expressly recommended to the President that this issue not be considered by the Board. The Board, in ordering a form of closed shop at Wards, has acted contrary to these expressed recommendations of the industry representatives.

If Wards had had the right to test the legality of the Board's demands in a court, Wards would have done so, but Wards was deprived of a remedy in the courts by the Board's complete lack of legal authority to compel obedience of its order. The court will only act when legal rights have been violated. The courts have declared that the mere making of demands which do not have to be obeyed does not, in the eyes of the law, violate any legal right. The Board's very lack of authority thus resulted in a denial to Wards, as it has to other employers, of a right to relief in the courts.

The President of the United States, as well as the Board, is wholly without constitutional authority to order any employer to do the things demanded of Wards. Nevertheless, in deep respect for the President and his great responsibility in time of war, Wards said, in rejecting the Board's order:

"If Congress imposes closed shops, compulsory arbitration, or contracts for a year's duration on employers, or if the President of the United States, as Commander in Chief in time of war, directs that Wards accept the Board's ruling, which we earnestly believe are illegal and uneconomic, we will respectfully obey."

The President, on November 18, wrote the company, saying:

"As Commander in Chief in time of war, * * * I * * * direct Montgomery Ward & Co. to comply, without further delay, with the National War Labor Board's directive order of November 5, 1942."

Wards immediately answered:

"Your order of November 18 has been received and will be promptly obeyed."

Wards thereupon altered the general form of its contracts with unions and incorporated, word for word, the clauses ordered by the War Labor Board. This document was offered to the union. The company has fully complied with the President's direction and will continue to do so.

The document which the President has directed Wards to sign is not a contract. The requisite of a contract is that there be a meeting of the minds or agreement between the parties. There has been no agreement between Wards and the union. The document which the President has ordered Wards to sign affects the rights and liberties of Wards and of its employees. Therefore, in order that the document itself may be clear and state the facts, Wards informatively included these three sentences:

"The following provisions are not voluntarily agreed to by the company. In the company's opinion they are illegal and unsound. These provisions are copied verbatim from the War Labor Board's order of November 5, 1942 and are incorporated herein, on the company's part, under duress and only because the President of the United States as Commander in Chief in time of war has expressly ordered that they be included."

These three sentences are in all respects true. They do not alter the effect of the provisions ordered by the Board—provisions which Wards will carry out. Nevertheless, the union has refused to sign the offered document.

Wards will be happy to accept any improvement in the wording of this statement, but Wards will resist any attempt to hide the truth by a change in its substance.

On January 9, 1941, the President said:

"In the future days which we seek to make secure, we look forward to a world founded upon four essential human freedoms. The first is freedom of speech and expression—everywhere in the world."

Wards feels that it is bound by the rules of good citizenship to make sure that the simple truth about these provisions and Wards' acceptance of them be not hidden from or misrepresented to its hundred thousand employees, its 60,000 shareholders, and its many millions of customers. The elimination of this statement would serve no purpose but to conceal the truth from readers of the document.

Wards has cheerfully met with the union and with this Board whenever requested. Wards has promptly obeyed the direction of the President. Wards insists that its right to tell the truth not be destroyed.

JANUARY 11, 1943.

To All Montgomery Ward People:

1. You are free to join or not to join a union, as you wish. The company fully respects this privilege. Your opportunity with the company will be the same whether you are a union member or not.

2. You do not have to join a union to work at Ward's.

3. Ward's is opposed to all forms of the closed shop. Liberty requires that an employee be free to join, to refuse to join, or to resign from a union without losing his job. Liberty requires that an employer be free to employ the person best suited for the work.

4. The President of the United States has commanded Ward's to accept for its Chicago plant a form of closed shop called "maintenance of membership." Under this form of closed shop, employees are not free to resign from the union without losing their jobs. Ward's is compelled to discharge every union member who fails to maintain his union membership in good standing (nonpayment of dues, etc.). This making of membership in a union a condition of holding a job is the closed shop.

5. Ward's did not voluntarily agree to this requirement. Ward's believes it to be illegal and uneconomic. Ward's has accepted it under duress and only because the President of the United States expressly so ordered.

6. Ward's is the only retailer in the United States upon whom the President has imposed any form of the closed shop. It is unfair to impose burdens upon Ward's and not upon those with whom it is in competition. If the retail industry is to be subjected to the closed shop requirement, it should be legislated by Congress and applied uniformly against all retail establishments.

7. The National War Labor Board has now called a hearing to determine whether the employees at Ward's six large stores in Denver, Detroit, and New York City must belong to the union in order to hold their jobs. Ward's will continue to oppose this illegal and uneconomic requirement. Ward's will reject any demand of the Board that employees be discharged because they fail to maintain their union membership.

8. The President of the United States has no authority to order Ward's employees to remain union members in order to hold their jobs. Congress is the only lawmaking authority. Congress has passed no law requiring the closed shop.

SMEAR-PURGE ARTISTS STILL WORKING

Mr. Speaker, there is something else that I wish to speak about today.

One of the most vindictive and most unreliable of those engaged in the campaign to smear-purge Members of Congress and destroy the confidence of the people in Congress, notwithstanding the rebuke administered the group by the people at the November election, still continues his dirty work. As an illustration, in the Sunday, January 10, edition of the Washington Post, that paper and Dillard Stokes, alias Jefferson Breem, alias Quigley Adams, continued their campaign of misrepresentation and falsehood by falsely writing that I charged that the prosecution of certain individuals alleged to be seditionists was "just an effort to smear" isolationists.

I certainly did tell the House, and I propose to repeat that charge as often as may be necessary, that Maloney, an assistant to the Attorney General of the United States, and Stokes and the Washington Post have been using the grand-jury investigation to smear Congressmen, but I never have claimed—I do not claim now—that the investigation by the grand jury and the subsequent prosecution of the persons indicted was solely for the purpose of smearing Congressmen. Those instrumentalities were diverted from their legitimate purpose by Maloney and Stokes and were improperly used to smear Congress.

Either Dillard Stokes willfully, in reporting proceedings of the grand jury, lied, or he violated the rules governing grand-jury proceedings, when on the 22d of January 1942, in the Washington Post, he wrote, "the prosecutors declared Hill told the grand jury he recently received $12,000, but would not reveal the source." Did the prosecutors, including Maloney, reveal to Stokes the secrets of the grand-jury room? Either they did, or the truth is not in Stokes. If they did tell him what Hill said in the grand-jury room, they as officers of the court should be haled before the court to answer a contempt charge.

Now note, please, that charge does not rest upon any statement made by me; I merely quote what Dillard Stokes said.

On December 8 I called the attention of this House to another instance where a columnist writing for the Washington Post quoted the testimony of a grand-jury witness, Mrs. Goode, and a statement made in the jury room, according to the columnist, by a grand juror. It would seem that Washington is the only place in the United States where the rule as to the secrecy of the grand-jury proceedings is violated.

Certainly I do not complain because a grand jury is investigating alleged criminal acts. I do complain when that body and an assistant to the Attorney General of the United States proceeds in violation of all fairness, decency, and legality to carry on a subversive activity.

Stokes then sought to create the impression by his Sunday article that I had either failed or refused to answer three Members of the House who spoke in defense of Maloney—two on the 10th and the other on the 14th day of December last, and that I was upon the floor.

Each of those gentlemen spoke when I was not upon the floor, without notifying me that they intended to refer to me and I answered them earlier this week.

Stokes further stated and I quote:

The Speaker flung these questions at the dour Michigan isolationist.

He capitalized the word "Speaker," evidently intending the readers to believe that the Speaker of the House had asked me certain questions. The Speaker did not ask me any questions. The questions repeated in the Post were asked by the Member from Pennsylvania, Mr. Holland. Stokes but asked them again and why did he repeat them? Why did Holland ask them—because they wanted the information? Oh, no; they just wanted to again—once more—link my name with the names of those who have been indicted. That was their sole purpose.

During the grand jury investigation Stokes tried to make it appear that I was concealing something. He knows better. As long ago as November 17, 1941—more than 13 months ago—on the floor of this House when one of the assistants to the Attorney General was sitting in the gallery, referring to him I said, "If he is hard up for witnesses, he can call me. I will be glad to go down and talk to him. Thirty thousand copies of my speeches went out under my frank that were antiwar speeches." Those were the speeches entitled "We Burned Our Fingers Once—Will History Repeat Itself?" Now Stokes, more than a year later, squawks and asks whether I sent out those speeches.

Why, on January 2, 1942, under his own signature in the Washington Post was the same fact published?

On April 13, 1942, I nailed the lie that in the speech, Don't Haul Down the Stars and Stripes, I called the President a Judas and pointed out those to whom I referred as betraying our Nation. On that same occasion I disclosed the fact that I had furnished thousands of copies of that speech to others.

What a silly donkey Dillard Stokes, alias Jefferson Breem, alias Quigley Adams, shows himself to be when in writing about what I had to say on the floor yesterday he captioned his report, "HOFFMAN admits circulating speech." Members of the press gallery, Members of the House, and those of the public who paid any attention at all to the matter know that I never denied circulating the speech, Don't Haul Down the Stars and Stripes. Stokes knows it but he is so crooked, his mind is so twisted, he is so lacking in political morality that he just cannot tell the truth. He must in writing an article, disseminate falsehood.

Those familiar with the circumstances know that time and again on the floor of this House I have stated that I circulated that speech, that anyone who wanted a copy could have it for the asking.

The first question asked by the smear-purger, Dillard Stokes, in his Sunday article was this:

1. Will the gentleman from Michigan deny that two mail sackfuls of a speech delivered by him on the floor of this House, in which he called the President a Judas, were delivered to Mrs. Bethune in Washington and that the speeches in those mail sacks were enclosed in franked envelopes bearing the frank of the gentleman from Michigan?

Answer to question 1: I have pointed out the falsity of Stokes' statement that in that speech I called the President a Judas. For further answer to that question let me here quote from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of May 28, 1942, page 4728. Those speeches went out in franked envelopes. What of it?

March 30: Copies went to Mrs. N. N. Bethune, the LaSalle Apartments, 1028 Connecticut Avenue, NW., Washington D. C., upon the understanding had with her and with Mrs. Goode, who was in the office with her asking for reprints, that they were to be addressed and mailed to the members of the organization known as the Dames of the Loyal Legion and others mentioned by Mrs. Goode when she first came to my office asking for reprints.

I will answer the other seven questions categorically.

2. Will the gentleman from Michigan deny that he sent, or caused to be sent, 2,000 copies of this same speech to Charles B. Hudson of Omaha, Nebr., who is now under indictment, charged with conspiring to break down the morale of the armed forces?

Answer to question 2: He received 2,000 copies of Don't Haul Down the Stars and Stripes in the flat—not in franked envelopes. What of it?

3. Will the gentleman from Michigan deny that he sent 1,000 copies of this same speech to Gerald B. Winrod of Wichita, Kans., another of the defendants in the same indictment?

The same answer as made to the second question will serve as an answer to questions 3 and 4, except that Winrod received 1,000 and Baxter 500 copies of Don't Haul Down the Stars and Stripes. Again I ask, What of it?

Let me add all three were indicted on the 28th day of July 1942 for a violation of section 9 of title 18 of the United States Code. All three were arrested and with other defendants indicted at the same time for the same offense and were brought before the court in the District of Columbia. The validity of the indictment was challenged on the 8th day of August 1942. Though Maloney had used 71 days, according to Attorney General Biddle, in taking testimony against these gentlemen, on August 12 he asked for an additional 30 days to answer the challenge to the validity of the indictment. If my understanding is correct, from that day to this Maloney has never accepted that challenge nor has he brought the defendants to trial.

Maloney evidently has forgotten that provision of our Constitution which guarantees to every person accused, a speedy and impartial trial. We all recall the Scottsboro case where the conviction of the Negroes from the South of the most heinous crimes known to our law, was reversed by the United States Supreme Court because they had been denied a fair trial; that is, men of their race on the jury.

A speedy trial was not Maloney's objective. When it seemed no longer possible to delay the challenge to the validity of the indictment, Maloney, on January 4, handed in a new indictment charging a violation of the same section by practically the same acts and charging, absurdity of absurdities, that the defendants conspired to violate that section 7 years before the act became a law.

Where is Maloney's pal, Walter Winchell, who was suddenly assigned to active service? For months Winchell, a lieutenant commander in the Navy, violated the articles of war by falsely charging Members of Congress with disloyalty. He was much in evidence, but when it appeared that those charged with sedition were about to be brought for trial and that Winchell, the courageous Winchell, who peddled salacious gossip or, as Pegler described him, "the gent of the men's room," might be called as a witness, forced upon the stand, and compelled to submit to a cross-examination which would disclose some of his falsehoods, his back-door connections with brothels and gambling joints, his pipe lines into Maloney's office, he was suddenly sent on active duty. If he was detailed to the job for which he is best suited, he will be found. It may be, too, that he has been sent to Australia to prepare a garden for "Paving-Block" Flynn, former chairman of the National Democratic Committee.

Questions 5, 6, and 7:

5. What use did the gentleman from Michigan intend that these conspirators should make of his speech?

6. Was it to be used in furtherance of their conspiracy to break down the morale of the armed forces of the United States at a time when we are at war and our boys are giving up their lives for the defense of our country?

7. Let him explain to this body what his interest was in sending his speech to these people.

The answer to all three questions is the same. The use which I expected to be made of my speeches, the purpose of the speech, and the circulation of it was set forth by me when I spoke in this House on the 28th day of May 1942. It was explained again on the 11th day of January 1943 and on many, many occasions in between those dates.

To, once for all, enlighten Dillard Stokes, if that can be accomplished, let me say to him that that speech was made and it was distributed in the hope that some of those who lack confidence in the United States of America and in her institutions, in the determination of her people to preserve this, a Nation, would finally be convinced that the people of America believe in America, believe in the Constitution, and believe that, under God and with his help, we will be able, in spite of the enemies from without and the traitors from within, to carry on as have our forefathers since the day of Washington.

To convince Stokes and Maloney and some of the others who were engaged in the now admitted conspiracy, to slander and vilify the Congress and to destroy it as a coordinate branch of the Government, that there was no secrecy about the distribution of that talk, I here refer to remarks made by me on the 28th day of May from the Well of the House and which will be found on pages 4728 and 4729 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I do not quote from those remarks at length but I here repeat that many, many individuals received copies of that talk; that copies went to residents of 34 of the 48 States of the Union who asked for them.

Question 8:

Let him explain to this body his unusual interest in the prosecution of an indictment which does not name him either as a defendant or a conspirator.

Answer to 8: I have no interest whatever in the prosecution of either of the indictments returned against the defendants therein named. I have no knowledge as to whether those defendants or any of them are guilty or not guilty. As a lawyer practicing for something like 40 years, I have been deeply interested in the misuse and the abuse made of judicial processes by the man Maloney.

I have been astounded by his unfair methods, by his complete disregard of professional ethics, by the rank injustice of his procedure. Over and above all that, I have been interested in the proceedings of the grand jury and of Maloney prior to the rendition of the indictment, and by his effrontery in violating all constitutional guaranties thrown around the people's Representatives. Though I did not choose to avail myself of any protection afforded by the Constitution, but volunteered to give the prosecuting representative of the Department of Justice any information at my command.

I was interested in the proceedings of the grand jury because the Washington Post and its reporter, Dillard Stokes, alias Jefferson Breem, alias Quigley Adams, used those proceedings in their effort to smear and purge Members of Congress. I had never realized that an official connected with the Department of Justice would so prostitute his office, that he would engage in such a foul conspiracy, and I determined that I would do all in my power to give to the public a true and accurate picture of the disreputable, morale-destroying methods of Maloney and Stokes.

Just to prove that Stokes cannot tell the truth about even immaterial matters, permit me to call attention to the fact that he wrote, and I quote, referring to the talk made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCGRANERY] and the gentleman from Kansas, Mr. Houston:

Congress did not adjourn for several days and HOFFMAN was often on the floor, free with carping and with questions, but not with answers.

That statement is absolutely false. I was not on the floor when any of the gentlemen made the remarks to which Stokes refers; had no knowledge that they intended to speak and at 5:10 on that day I left for my home to bid my son, who was going into the Navy, good-bye. I did not return until after Congress adjourned. Again Stokes wrote a plain lie—a lie which he knew to be a lie.

I have had no acquaintance with Hudson, Baxter, or Kullgren. I have no knowledge of what they did with the copies of the speech, "Don't Haul Down the Stars and Stripes." If any of the men named, or all of them, sent out the talk "Don't Haul Down the Stars and Stripes," with seditious material, he or they made a mistake for if you will pardon my egotism, I am quite sure that the patriotic sentiments contained in that speech of mine would tend to overcome any seditious sentiments expressed in the other literature.

Having now answered several questions, permit me to ask one—the people having answered at the November election, the vilifying propaganda of Stokes, the convict Browder, Birkhead, Maloney, Winchell, and others of that ilk and of the Union for Democratic Action, the New Republic, the Masses, PM, the Chicago Sun, and the Communists, just how much further does Stokes, Browder, Winchell and company intend to go to create disunity? Just when will they end their conspiracy to destroy the morale of the American people?

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from Kansas is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to use my time this afternoon.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next, after the other special orders, I may address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GORE] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. GORE. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to use my time.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. MCCORD, for Tuesday and Wednesday of next week, on account of an important engagement at West Point, N. Y.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CLASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include a letter from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

(Mr. BENDER asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.)

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MCCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, to include a statement in my remarks, and to have it printed in the Appendix of the RECORD.

[Mr. MCCORMACK addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. MCCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock) the House adjourned to meet, pursuant to its special order, on Monday, January 18, 1943, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE

MONDAY, JANUARY 18, 1943

The Chaplain, Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God, our Father, whose kingdom is forever and against which the gates of hell cannot prevail, we would rest our weary and needy souls in Thee. At the wicket gate of another day with all its waiting tasks, we bow our heads and our hearts in reverence and devotion.

Into Thy hands we commit the mystery and the mastery of the godlike power of choice—the royal right to say "I will. Our wills are ours, we know not how; our wills are ours to make them Thine."

May the altar lights of faith, undimmed, burn brightly in spite of the winds of adversity and unbelief. In the confusions of these troubled days, help us to keep inviolate in our souls a little shrine of quietness; a chapel of peace within, an altar of contrition, a sanctuary of sure and swift retreat, where the world's angry voices die, where Thou alone art real. So, in turmoils without and within, may we find day by day,

"A little place of mystic grace,
Of self and sin swept bare,
Where we may look upon Thy face
And talk to Thee in prayer."

In the dear Redeemer's name we ask it. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, January 14, 1943, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

OATH OF THE PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the oath of office of the Honorable CARTER GLASS, Senator from the State of Virginia, as the President pro tempore of the Senate, duly subscribed and sworn to by him on the 14th instant, which will be read.

The oath was read and ordered to be placed on file, as follows:

I, CARTER GLASS, President pro tempore of the Senate of the United States of America, do solemnly swear that I will truly and faithfully discharge the duties of my said office, to the best of my knowledge and abilities.

CARTER GLASS.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 14th day of January A. D. 1943.

A. D. BARKSDALE,
United States District Judge for the Western District of Virginia.

LYNCHBURG, VA.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in this connection I send to the desk a resolution and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution (S. Res. 62) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be notified of the election of Hon. CARTER GLASS, a Senator from the State of Virginia, as President of the Senate pro tempore.

NOTIFICATION TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. BARKLEY. I send forward another resolution, and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution (S. Res. 63) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the House of Representatives be notified of the election of Hon. CARTER GLASS, a Senator from the State of Virginia, as President of the Senate pro tempore.

UTILIZATION OF MANPOWER

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that at the earliest opportunity following the convening of the Senate on Thursday next I shall address the Senate on the subject of how our manpower should be divided for the conduct of the war, with reference to the Army, the Navy, shipping, production for war purposes, agriculture, and the civilian economy.

CONFIRMATION OF PRENTISS M. BROWN TO BE PRICE ADMINISTRATOR

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, as in executive session, from the Committee on Banking and Currency I report favorably the nomination of Hon. Prentiss M. Brown to be Price Administrator, and I ask unanimous consent that the nomination be at once confirmed.

Mr. McNARY. Was the committee unanimous in its approval of the nomination?

Mr. WAGNER. The committee was unanimous.

Mr. McNARY. I am advised, and I think authentically, that the present Administrator desires to leave his position at once. I conferred this morning with former Senator Byrnes, the Director of Economic Stabilization, and he is anxious that Mr. Brown be inducted into office at once. I have high regard for both these gentlemen, having served with them in the Senate.

Of course, it is contrary to the rule to permit confirmation of a nomination without its going to the Executive Calendar, and it is not done unless unanimous consent is given; and request is made for unanimous consent on this occasion.

I have discussed the matter with the able junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON], and I can say that he has no desire to oppose the confirmation.

In view of the circumstances, and always keeping in mind my desire to conform with the rules of the Senate, I am willing in this instance to waive the rule, and, so far as I am personally concerned, consent to action at this time upon the nomination of former Senator Brown.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the nomination as in executive session? The Chair hears none, and the nomination will be stated.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Prentiss M. Brown to be Price Administrator, Office of Price Administration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. WAGNER. I ask that the President be at once notified of the confirmation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the President will be notified forthwith.

QUORUM RULE ADOPTED BY COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY

Mr. VAN NUYS. Mr. President, at the first regular meeting of the Committee on the Judiciary, held in executive session today, the 18th instant, the following proposed rule of committee procedure respecting a quorum of the committee was submitted by the chairman:

PROPOSED COMMITTEE RULE NO. 4

Resolved, That a quorum of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary shall consist of six members present in person at any regular or special meeting of the committee.

The rule proposed was unanimously adopted by the committee.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following letters, which were referred as indicated:

AWARDS OF CONTRACTS FOR THE NAVY

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Navy, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report relative to division of awards of certain quantity contracts for aircraft, aircraft parts, and accessories therefor entered into with more than one bidder under authority of law, during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1942, the prices therefor and the reason for the award in each case (with an accompanying report); to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

LEGISLATION OF LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY AND MUNICIPAL COUNCIL OF ST. THOMAS AND ST. JOHN, V. I.

Two letters from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, pursuant to law, copies of legislation passed by the Legislative Assembly of the Virgin Islands and the Municipal Council of St. Thomas and St. John, V. I. (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

REPORT OF OPERATIONS OF THE RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

A letter from the Chairman and Secretary of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report covering the operations of the Corporation for the period from its organization on February 2, 1932, to September 30, 1942 (with accompanying papers); to the Commitee on Banking and Currency.

EMPLOYEES RECEIVING $3,000 AND OVER, OFFICE OF PRICE ADMINISTRATION

A letter from the Administrator of the Office of Price Administration, transmitting, in response to Senate Resolution 322, Seventy-seventh Congress, information on national and field office employees receiving salaries of $3,000 and over, with the exception of region II including the States of New York, Maryland, New Jersey, Delaware, and Pennsylvania (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Appropriations.

DISPOSITION OF EXECUTIVE PAPERS

A letter from the Archivist of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, lists of papers and documents on the files of the Departments of War and Labor; the National Archives, and National Housing Agency, which are not needed in the conduct of business and have no permanent value or historical interest, and requesting action looking toward their disposition (with accompanying papers); to a Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Papers in the Executive Departments.

The VICE PRESIDENT appointed Mr. BARKLEY and Mr. BREWSTER members of the committee on the part of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Petitions, etc., were laid before the Senate by the Vice President and referred as indicated:

A resolution of the House of Representatives of the State of Massachusetts; to the Committee on Banking and Currency:

"RESOLUTIONS MEMORIALIZING CONGRESS TO TAKE IMMEDIATE STEPS TO RELIEVE DISTRESS AND SUFFERING CAUSED BY THE SHORTAGE OF FUEL OIL IN MASSACHUSETTS

"Whereas the prosecution of the existing war has limited the facilities for the transportation of fuel oil into the New England States, thereby drastically reducing the supply thereof; and

"Whereas the people of this Commonwealth are undergoing great suffering by reason of their inability to properly heat their homes due to said reduced supply of fuel oil, thereby creating a deplorable condition and a serious menace to the lives and health of the people of this Commonwealth; and

"Whereas the people of this Commonwealth look to Congress for the providing of immediate relief from this dangerous situation; and

"Whereas tragedy has already occurred in this Commonwealth in the death of residents thereof due to exposure to cold in their homes; and

"Whereas many stricken families without heat in their homes will soon be forced to seek shelter elsewhere unless immediate relief is provided: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the House of Representatives of Massachusetts respectfully urges upon the Congress of the United States the dire necessity of immediate action by it, through legislation or otherwise, so that relief may be provided without delay for the people of this Commonwealth who are so vitally affected by this extraordinary emergency which deprives many of them of the only means of heating their homes and who are threatened with increased suffering if such action is not taken forthwith; and be it further

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Commonwealth forthwith forward copies of these resolutions to the President of the United States, to the Presiding Officers of both branches of Congress, and to the Members of Congress from this Commonwealth.

"In the house of representatives, adopted January 7, 1943.

"LAWRENCE R. GROVE,
"Clerk.

"A true copy.
"Attest:
"[SEAL] F. W. COOK,
"Secretary of the Commonwealth."

A letter from the President of the Senate and the President of the Chamber of Deputies of the Dominican Republic, urging the teaching of the Portuguese language in the higher institutions of learning in this country; to the Committee on Education and Labor.

A letter in the nature of a memorial from Harry A. Gordon, Esq., of New York City, N. Y., remonstrating against any action by the War Labor Board to require the incorporation into an agreement with a labor union of a provision that the right to a continuance of employment of workers shall be dependent upon their membership in the union and payment of dues (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Education and Labor.

A letter from Lic. Javier Rojo Gomez, of Mexico, relative to a memorandum reporting on the activities of the Federal Department of Justice under his charge; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

A letter in the nature of a memorial from Earl L. and Anna E. Miller, of Rochester, N. Y., remonstrating against confirmation of the nomination of Edward J. Flynn, of New York, to be Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to Australia; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The petition of Leonard H. Holder, trading as April Showers Co., Washington, D. C. (by Zach Lamar Cobb, attorney for petitioner, Los Angeles, Calif.), praying for a redress of grievances caused by the alleged repudiation in the War Production Board of its written authorization, duly issued and fairly obtained, in connection with the procurement of prefabricated copper tubing intended to be used in the erection of the Dorchester House Apartments (with an appendix); to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A telegram from Lawrence C. Spivack, chairman of the book and magazine publishers' committee of the 1943 victory book campaign, New York City, N. Y., inviting Senators to contribute copies of their own books to be sent to persons in all branches of the armed service; ordered to lie on the table.

JOINT COMMITTEE ON BUDGETARY CONTROL

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I submit a concurrent resolution, which I ask be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The resolution goes to the establishment of a joint committee on budgetary control, and is offered by the minority members of the Senate Appropriations Committee. The members of that committee may later in the day wish to address themselves to the subject of the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 2) submitted by Mr. NYE (for himself, Mr. BRIDGES, Mr. LODGE, Mr. HOLMAN, Mr. WHITE, Mr. GURNEY, Mr. BROOKS, Mr. BURTON, and Mr. REED) was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States (the House of Representatives concurring), That there is hereby created a joint congressional committee known as the Joint Committee on Budgetary Control (hereinafter referred to as the joint committee).

SEC. 2. (a) The joint committee shall be composed of 10 members, as follows: (1) Five members who are members of the Senate Committee on Appropriations, 3 from the majority and 2 from the minority party, who shall be chosen by the majority and minority members of such committee, respectively; and (2) 5 members who are members of the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives, 3 from the majority and 2 from the minority party, who shall be chosen by the majority and minority members of such committee, respectively.

(b) No person shall continue to serve as a member of the joint committee after he has ceased to be a member of the Committee on Appropriations by which he was chosen, except that the members chosen by the House of Representatives Committee on Appropriation who have been reelected to the House of Representatives shall continue to serve as members of the joint committee notwithstanding the expiration of the Congress.

(c) The members shall serve without compensation in addition to that received for their services as Members of Congress, but they shall be reimbursed for travel, subsistence, and other necessary expenses incurred by them in the performance of the duties vested in the joint committee, other than expenses in connection with meetings of the joint committee held in the District of Columbia during such times as the Congress is in session.

SEC. 3. The joint committee shall elect a chairman and vice chairman from among its members.

SEC. 4. The joint committee shall have power to appoint and fix the compensation of a clerk and such experts and clerical, stenographic, and other assistants as it deems advisable.

SEC. 5. The expenses of the joint committee shall be paid one-half from the contingent fund of the Senate and one-half from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives, upon vouchers signed by the chairman or vice chairman.

SEC. 6. For the purposes of this resolution, the joint committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized to sit and act at such times and places within the United States, whether or not the Congress is in session, has recessed, or has adjourned, to hold such hearings, to require the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, and to take such testimony, as it deems necessary, to authorize such expenditures as may be necessary for printing, binding, and other purposes as may be authorized by the joint committee. Subpenas may be issued under the signature of the chairman of the joint committee or any member designated by him, and may be served by any person designated by the chairman or such member. The chairman of the joint committee or any member thereof may administer oaths to witnesses. Every person who, having been summoned as a witness by authority of said joint committee or any subcommittee thereof, willfully makes default, or who, having appeared, refuses to answer any questions pertinent to the matter herein authorized, shall be held to the penalties provided by section 102 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended (U. S. C., 1940 ed., title 2, sec. 192). The cost of stenographic services in reporting such hearings as the joint committee may hold shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words.

SEC. 7. It shall be the duty of the joint committee to investigate the operation and effects of the present budgetary system, to ascertain the necessity for, the economy, and the correctness of amounts of appropriations made to or requested by the various governmental departments, independent agencies and establishments, and to make such other investigations with reference to the expenditure of public funds as it may deem necessary, and in particular to investigate such questions as may be submitted to it by the Appropriations Committees of the Senate or House of Representatives, or by any member of the joint committee, and to report, from time to time, to the Appropriations Committees of the Senate and House of Representatives the results of its investigations, together with such recommendations as it may deem advisable.

SEC. 8. The joint committee shall make available to the Appropriations Committees of the Senate and House of Representatives and to the subcommittees thereof at the request of the chairman or ranking minority member of committees or subcommittees thereof all available data, together with the services of experts and assistants on the staff of the joint committee.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO STUDY AND SURVEY PROBLEMS OF SMALL BUSINESS

Mr. MURRAY (for himself, Mr. MALONEY, Mr. ELLENDER, Mr. MEAD, Mr. STEWART, Mr. CAPPER, and Mr. TAFT) submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 66), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the authority conferred by Senate Resolution 298, Seventy-sixth Congress, third session, as agreed to October 8, 1940 (providing for a study and survey of the problems of American small business enterprises), is hereby extended and its membership increased from 7 to 12, and the Vice President is authorized to appoint 5 more members to said committee.

SEC. 2. That the limit of expenditure under the said resolution is hereby increased by $50,000.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON IRRIGATION AND RECLAMATION

Mr. BANKHEAD submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 67), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized, during the Seventy-eighth Congress, to send for persons, books, and papers; to administer oaths; and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words, to report such hearings as may be had on any subject referred to said committee, the total expenses pursuant to this resolution (which shall not exceed $5,000) to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during any session or recess of the Senate.

CONTINUATION OF INVESTIGATION OF ADMINISTRATION AND OPERATION OF CIVIL SERVICE LAWS AND CLASSIFICATION ACT

Mr. ELLENDER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 68), which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service:

Resolved, That Senate Resolution 198, Seventy-fifth Congress, agreed to on April 1, 1938 (providing for an investigation of the administration and operation of the civil service laws and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended), is hereby continued until the end of the Seventy-eighth Congress.

HEARINGS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON PENSIONS

Mr. BILBO submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 69), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Pensions, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized, during the Seventy-eighth Congress, to send for persons, books, and papers; to administer oaths; and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words, to report such hearings as may be had on any subject referred to said committee, the total expenses pursuant to this resolution (which shall not exceed $5,000) to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during any session or recess of the Senate.

HEARINGS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON MANUFACTURES

Mr. OVERTON submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 70), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Manufactures, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized, during the Seventy-eighth Congress, to send for persons, books, and papers; to administer oaths; and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words, to report such hearings as may be had on any subject referred to said committee, the total expenses pursuant to this resolution (which shall not exceed $5,000) to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during any session or recess of the Senate.

HEARINGS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION AND LABOR

Mr. THOMAS of Utah submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 71), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Education and Labor, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized, during the Seventy-eighth Congress, to send for persons, books, and papers; to administer oaths; and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words, to report such hearings as may be had on any subject referred to said committee, the total expenses pursuant to this resolution (which shall not exceed $5,000) to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during any session or recess of the Senate.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON POST OFFICES AND POST ROADS

Mr. McKELLAR submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 72), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized, during the Seventy-eighth Congress, to send for persons, books, and papers; to administer oaths; and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words, to report such hearings as may be had on any subject referred to said committee, the total expenses pursuant to this resolution (which shall not exceed $5,000) to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during any session or recess of the Senate.

DEVELOPMENT OF MINERAL RESOURCES, INCLUDING OIL AND GAS, OF THE PUBLIC LANDS

Mr. O'MAHONEY submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 73), which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys:

Resolved, That the authority conferred by Senate Resolution 53, Seventy-seventh Congress, agreed to May 1, 1941, and Senate Resolution 310, Seventy-seventh Congress, agreed to November 27, 1942 (relating to the investigation with respect to the development of the mineral resources, including oil and gas, of the public lands of the United States), is hereby continued during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Seventy-eighth and succeeding Congresses.

INVESTIGATION OF MANPOWER RESOURCES

Mr. PEPPER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 74), which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor:

Resolved, That the Committee on Education and Labor, or any subcommittee thereof, is hereby authorized and directed to make a full and complete study and investigation in cooperation with the Manpower Commission and any other agency, or agencies, public or private, it might see fit to consult, of the manpower resources of the United States with particular reference to housing, health, education, technical training, and civilian mobilization and morale, and how such manpower resources should be employed to the best advantage in agriculture, industry, the armed services, and other activities so as consistently with the spirit of our institutions, and the national emergency best to promote the war and victory for our cause. The committee shall report to the Senate, as soon as practicable, the results of its study and investigation, together with its recommendations.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Seventy-eighth Congress, to employ such clerical and other assistance, to require by subpena, or otherwise, the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such correspondence, books, papers, and documents, to make such investigations, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to incur such expenditures as it deems advisable.

That the heads of the executive department and other executive agencies detail and/or engage personnel temporarily to assist the committee upon the request of the chairman. The committee may utilize such voluntary and uncompensated services as it may deem necessary. The committee may utilize the services or facilities of the various departments and agencies of the Government.

The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the subcommittee, which shall not exceed $10,000, shall be paid from the contingent funds of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the subcommittee.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE UNEMPLOYMENT AND RELIEF

Mr. PEPPER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 75), which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor:

Whereas it is apparent that the World War and the tremendous dislocations in the domestic and world economy and trade will present serious unemployment, industrial, trade, and fiscal problems; and

Whereas it is important that the Congress, the Government, and the country may be aware of such problems, so that most appropriate and proper measures to meet them may be prepared: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That a special committee consisting of nine Senators, to be appointed by the Vice President, is hereby authorized and directed to study, survey, and investigate unemployment and relief problems, and cases of dislocation, and problems appearing in our economy, trade, and fiscal affairs in the United States arising, or likely to arise, out of disturbed world conditions, the defense program, and the conditions attending the post-war period. Such committee shall be authorized to act in concert or cooperation with any other committee of the Congress having similar objectives, or with any committee appointed by the President, or with any administrative agencies of the Government. It shall be the duty of the committee to collect such data as will be in the public interest and of benefit to the Congress. The committee shall begin its study, survey, and investigation as soon as practicable, and shall continue such study, survey, and investigation expeditiously and with all possible dispatch, and shall at such times as it may see fit, or the Senate may require, report to the Senate any recommendations it may have for legislation.

SEC. 2. For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Senate, during the Seventy-eighth Congress, to employ such experts and clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, and to take such testimony and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expense of the committee, which shall not exceed $5,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee.

SUBCOMMITTEE ON REOCCUPATION AND RECONSTRUCTION

Mr. PEPPER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 76), which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Resolved, That there shall be established within the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations a subcommittee, to consist of not more than seven members, to be appointed by the chairman of the said committee. This subcommittee, which shall be known as the Committee on Reoccupation and Reconstruction, is authorized and directed to study all problems relating to the economic reconstruction and political reorganization of areas reoccupied by the United States or any of its Allies among the United Nations in the more complete and effective organization of the United Nations. The subcommittee shall examine the effectiveness of reconstruction and reoccupation measures currently being undertaken or proposed as to their effectiveness in winning the war and achieving reconstruction of the reoccupied areas in harmony with the interests of the United States, friendly nations, and minimizing the possibility of future conflict. The subcommittee shall report to the Committee on Foreign Relations, which shall report to the Senate such findings as it may make, from time to time, relating to the problems of reoccupation and reconstruction together with its recommendations, if any, for necessary legislation. For the purpose of this resolution the subcommittee is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Seventy-eighth Congress, to employ such clerical and other assistants, to borrow from Government agencies and departments such special assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such correspondence, books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable within the limits of such funds as shall be set aside for its use by the Committee on Foreign Relations or shall be appropriated to it directly by resolution of the Senate. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per 100 words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $2,500, in addition to the cost of stenographic services to report such hearings, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

AMENDMENT OF CLOTURE RULE

Mr. PEPPER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 77), which was referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That that part of Rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate relating to cloture (as shown on p. 28 of the Senate Manual) is amended to read as follows:

"If there is presented to the Senate at any time a motion, signed by 16 Senators, to bring to a close the debate (1) upon a motion to take up a measure, together with any and all points of order against such measure, or (2) upon any pending measure, the Presiding Officer shall at once state the motion to the Senate, and 1 hour after the Senate meets on the following calendar day but one, he shall lay the motion before the Senate and direct that the Secretary call the roll, and, upon the ascertainment that a quorum is present, the Presiding Officer shall, without debate, submit to the Senate by an aye-and-nay vote the question:

" 'Is it the sense of the Senate that the debate shall be brought to a close?'

"If such question shall be decided in the affirmative by a majority vote of those voting in the case of any such motion to take up a measure, together with any and all points of order against such measure, then such measure shall be deemed to be the unfinished business.

"If such question shall be decided in the affirmative by a majority vote of those voting in the case of any such motion to bring to a close the debate upon any pending measure, then such measure shall be the unfinished business to the exclusion of all other business until disposed of. Thereafter no Senator shall be entitled to speak in all more than 1 hour on the pending measure, the amendments thereto, and motions affecting the same, and it shall be the duty of the Presiding Officer to keep the time of each Senator who speaks. Except by unanimous consent, no amendment shall be in order after the vote to bring the debate to a close, unless the same has been presented and read prior to that time. No dilatory motion, or dilatory amendment, or amendment not germane shall be in order. Points of order, including questions of relevancy, and appeals from the decision of the Presiding Officer, shall be decided without debate."

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON POST OFFICES AND POST ROADS

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report favorably, without amendment, Senate Resolution 72, submitted today by Mr. MCKELLAR, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 72) was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized, during the Seventy-eighth Congress, to send for persons, books, and papers; to administer oaths; and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words, to report such hearings as may be had on any subject referred to said committee, the total expenses pursuant to this resolution (which shall not exceed $5,000) to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during any session or recess of the Senate.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION AND LABOR

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report favorably, without amendment, Senate Resolution 71, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 71) submitted today by Mr. THOMAS of Utah, was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Education and Labor, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized, during the Seventy-eighth Congress, to send for persons, books, and papers; to administer oaths; and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words, to report such hearings as may be had on any subject referred to said committee, the total expenses pursuant to this resolution (which shall not exceed $5,000) to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during any session or recess of the Senate.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I ask that we have order in the Senate. I had difficulty in hearing what the resolutions submitted by the Senator from Illinois referred to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. McNARY. I wish to ask the able Senator from Illinois whether the resolutions reported by him are the formal resolutions which are presented at the beginning of each session of the Congress?

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, they are. I will say to the distinguished minority leader that all the resolutions which the committee has reported favorably have placed a limitation of $5,000 on the amount of money each committee can expend, with the exception of three resolutions dealing with three committees, which I am now about to submit, which would place the limitation of $10,000 each upon those three committees. Those committees are the Committee on Finance, the Committee on Appropriations, and the Committee on Banking and Currency. The work of those three committees is of such a voluminous nature that the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate deemed it advisable to increase the appropriations for those committees from $5,000 to $10,000.

Mr. McNARY. I think the explanation made by the Senator from Illinois is very wholesome. Did the full Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate pass upon the policy referred to by the Senator?

Mr. LUCAS. Will the Senator from Oregon repeat the question?

Mr. McNARY. The matter, as I understand, was presented to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, and it is, as I understand, the policy of that committee for this year to grant three of the committees of the Senate $10,000 and other committees of the Senate $5,000?

Mr. LUCAS. That is correct. The majority of the committee agrees to that policy.

Mr. McNARY. I thank the Senator from Illinois for his statement.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON FINANCE

Mr. LUCAS. With the explanation I have just made, Mr. President, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report favorably, with amendments, Senate Resolution 36, dealing with the expenses of the Committee on Finance, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution (S. Res. 36), which had been submitted by Mr. GEORGE on the 11th instant.

The amendments were, in line 8, after the word "Senate," to insert "and", and, in line 13, after the word "committee", to insert "(which shall not exceed $10,000)", so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance, or any subcommittee thereof, hereby is authorized to sit during the sessions or recesses of the Seventy-eighth Congress at such times and places as it may deem advisable; to make investigations into internal revenue, customs, and other matters within its jurisdiction, and to compile and prepare statistics and documents relating thereto as directed from time to time by the Senate and as may be necessary; and to report from time to time to the Senate the result thereof; to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ such expert, stenographic, clerical, and other assistance as may be necessary; and all the expenses of such committee (which shall not exceed $10,000) shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND CURRENCY

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report favorably, with amendments, Senate Resolution 42 and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution which had been submitted by Mr. WAGNER on the 11th instant.

The amendments were, in line 11, after the word "expert", to insert a comma; and in line 12, after the word "hereof", to insert "(which shall not exceed $10,000)", so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Banking and Currency, or any subcommittee thereof, hereby is authorized to sit during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Seventy-eighth Congress at such times and places as it may deem advisable, to make investigation into all matters within its jurisdiction, and to compile and prepare statistics and documents relating thereto as directed from time to time by the Senate and as may be necessary, and to report in due course to the Senate the result thereof; to send for persons, books, and papers; to administer oaths, and to employ such expert, stenographic, clerical, and other assistance as may be necessary; and all the expenses incurred in pursuance hereof (which shall not exceed $10,000) shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. LUCAS. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report favorably, with amendments, Senate Resolution 53, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution which had been submitted by Mr. McKELLAR (for Mr. GLASS) on the 14th instant.

The amendments were, in line 6, to strike out the word "before" and to insert "referred to", and in line 7, after the word "thereof", to insert a comma and "which shall not exceed $10,000", so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized, during the Seventy-eighth Congress, to send for persons, books, and papers; to administer oaths; and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words, to report such hearings as may be had on any subject referred to said committee, the expense thereof, which shall not exceed $10,000, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during any session or recess of the Senate.

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

EMPLOYMENT OF WAR PRODUCTION BOARD DOLLAR-A-YEAR PERSONNEL

[Mr. GILLETTE asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a memorandum from the Food Distribution Administration, Department of Agriculture, entitled "Director's Memorandum No. 39, Policy on the Employment of War Production Board Dollar-a-Year Personnel Transferred to the Food Distribution Administration," which appears in the Appendix.]

THE SANCTITY OF THE LAW—SERMON BY REV. IGNATIUS SMITH

[Mr. MEAD asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a sermon by Rev. Ignatius Smith, O. P., dean, school of philosophy, Catholic University of America, at the Red Mass, at the Immaculate Conception Shrine, January 17, 1943, which appears in the Appendix.]

CONTRIBUTION OF THE AVERAGE CITIZEN TO WINNING THE WAR

[Mr. BROOKS asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a letter from James W. Shoemaker, secretary of the Charleston (Ill.) Chamber of Commerce, regarding little business, which appears in the Appendix.]

PAY-AS-YOU-GO TAX PLAN—EDITORIAL IN THE WASHINGTON TIMES-HERALD

[Mr. REYNOLDS asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial entitled "Anybody Lose by Ruml Plan?", dealing with the proposed pay-as-you-go method of Federal income-tax collection, published in the Washington, D. C., Times-Herald, which appears in the Appendix.]

FIRST THINGS FIRST—ARTICLE BY WALTER LIPPMANN

[Mr. MALONEY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article entitled "First Things First" written by Walter Lippmann and published in the Washington Post of January 12, 1943, which appears in the Appendix.]

EXPANSION OF SOCIAL SECURITY

[Mr. WAGNER asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD several editorials in support of an expanded social-security program, which appear in the Appendix.]

EXTENSION OF WORKWEEK

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, under the heading of "Subjects on the table" on the calendar I find Senate bill 237, a bill to provide that the workweek established by the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 shall temporarily be extended from 40 hours to 48 hours, introduced by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED]. I do not understand why the bill, which should be referred to a legislative committee, was placed on the calendar under the heading of "Subjects on the table." The bill should have been referred to the Committee on Education and Labor. The Senator from Kansas is not in the Chamber at the moment. I understand that he asked that the bill be placed on the table; but that is not the course which the bill should take.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I do not recall the reasons assigned by the able Senator from Kansas, who introduced the bill, for suggesting that it be placed on the table. Of course, it should be referred to the committee having general jurisdiction over a bill of that nature. Is the subject matter in the form of a bill or a resolution?

Mr. BARKLEY. It is Senate bill 237. It is not a resolution. I have been informed privately that the reason why the able Senator from Kansas asked that the bill be placed on the table was that he desired to make some remarks with reference to it. He may do so anyway. I am willing to withhold any motion until the able Senator from Kansas is present. Obviously, the bill should be referred to the proper committee.

Mr. McNARY. There is no doubt that the bill must finally be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor which has jurisdiction.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The fact that the bill has been ordered to lie on the table does not preclude its reference to the appropriate committee.

Mr. McNARY. In view of the absence of the able Senator from Kansas, I ask that the bill remain in statu quo until he returns.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have no objection to that course. I called the matter to the attention of the Senate in order that the bill might not be regarded as having a status under which it could properly be taken up at the present time merely because it lies on the table.

Mr. McNARY. No, Mr. President; it would not have that status at all.

ORDER DISPENSING WITH CALL OF THE CALENDAR

The VICE PRESIDENT. The routine morning business having been concluded, the calendar under rule VIII is in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the call of the calendar be dispensed with. The bills appearing on the calendar were reported only last Thursday, and some Senators may wish to examine them more thoroughly. I do not know of any good reason for calling the calendar today.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I join in the request. Until a few minutes ago I did not know that any bills were on the calendar and I should like to have an opportunity to inspect them. I hope that consideration of the bills on the calendar will go over until Thursday.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, there is no objection to that. If I correctly recall, all the bills on the calendar were passed by the Senate at the last session of Congress, but they failed of passage by the House. There is no particular reason for considering them today. However, I should like to have them considered on Thursday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHANDLER in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

THE ROLE OF CONGRESS—EDITORIAL FROM THE CLEVELAND PLAIN DEALER

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert at this point in the RECORD an editorial which appeared in the Cleveland Plain Dealer of January 5, 1943.

This particular editorial refers to a resolution which I first introduced in the Senate on October 22, 1942, and which I reintroduced on January 7, 1943. The author of the Plain Dealer editorial is so grievously in error in connection with this proposal that I desire to refer to the editorial very briefly.

In the first place, my proposal was not defeated in the last Congress, and in the second place, it is not a measure "to assist in the prosecution of the war." I have previously, on the Senate floor and elsewhere, insisted that this measure—and those who read the proposal would quickly understand—is not intended to "assist in the prosecution of the war," nor is it a proposal to investigate the "conduct of the war." Military strategy rests—and must rest—with the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy and the officers of those services.

At some later time I shall discuss the aforementioned resolution at some length, but I believe that I should, for the sake of the Plain Dealer—and the record—correct this misunderstanding at this time.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ROLE OF CONGRESS

The intention of Senator FRANCIS MALONEY, of Connecticut, to reintroduce a bill, defeated in the last Congress, which would set up a bipartisan congressional committee "to assist in the prosecution of the war" is in line with the post-election opinion that the Seventy-eighth Congress should have a good deal more to say about the conduct of the war than the Seventy-seventh had.

There is danger inherent both in the bill and the point of view. Certainly it was never intended that the Congress should be responsible for strategy or have more than an intelligent insight into the military aspects of war.

The actual conduct of the war should and must remain in the hands of the President, who is Commander in Chief. It is to be hoped that he will choose his counselors and advisers wisely and in matters of strategy will be guided by the judgments of those who by training and experience are best qualified to formulate them.

Congress should have no voice, for example, in deciding where or when any military operation should be undertaken. In the first instance it is impossible for Congress to act with the secrecy required by successful military operations; in the second, congressional decisions cannot be reached with the expedition which so often is the essence of such operations.

In matter of supply, on the other hand, Congress has very definite obligations and responsibilities. Whether in the present set-up at Washington, with so much of the activity on the home front in the hands of such agencies as the War Production Board, the Manpower Commission, and the Office of Price Administration, Congress should initiate policies or should wait for guidance from the heads of these war agencies is a moot question.

Certainly Congress should function as a watchdog, and when it becomes apparent that the executive departments and administrative agencies created by the President for prosecuting the war on the home front are not functioning effectively and in the broad public interest, should intervene.

There are two situations which, in our opinion, call for early action at the hands of Congress because of the failure of the executive department to adopt and pursue policies on the home front commensurate with the gravity of the war emergency.

The first of these has to do with the financing of the war. No one familiar with war financial measures and policies would contend for a second that the Secretary of the Treasury and his advisers have given the Nation sound leadership in fiscal matters in the last year or have lent their support to fiscal policies of the kind and character required by the present and prospective rate of expenditures.

In the face of this admitted fact the appropriate committees of the two Houses should act on their own. There is nothing in the record of Secretary Morgenthau to suggest that his counsel will be useful in the future. He has obviously preconceived notions both of raising most tax revenues by imposing heavy burdens on business and on persons of large means, and of the adequacy of a purely voluntary borrowing program from which apparently he will not recede. Still obviously unconvinced of the dangers inherent in heavy dependence on the commercial banks for funds with which to finance the war, the Secretary of the Treasury has impeded and will probably continue to impede the progress of sound financial policies. The sooner the Congress takes cognizance of this probability the better.

There is much to indicate also that the executive department of the Government has no intention of dealing firmly with the labor problem. It held out consistently against any legislation restricting the rights of organized labor in the first year of war and despite the lip service it has paid to over-all wage ceilings its agencies find excuses almost daily for authorizing wage increases, thus adding to the dangers of inflation and, still worse, supporting the impression which is widely entertained that it is the policy of the administration to protect labor against any war sacrifices or any reduction in real wages.

Here, then, is another place for congressional policy determination, and probably for legislative enactment. There are doubtless others. Certainly others will present themselves as the year advances.

The effectiveness of the new Congress, then, will be determined largely by the wisdom it displays in stepping into situations in which the executive departments and the administrative agencies have bogged down and in steering clear of the problems and situations which obviously can be dealt with only by the Commander in Chief, with the aid of his military and staff advisers.

GEN. ROBERT E. LEE

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, tomorrow, January 19, will be the one hundred and thirty-sixth anniversary of the birth of Gen. Robert E. Lee, the beloved hero of the Southland, and, as the Senate will probably not be in session tomorrow, I should like to take a moment to pay him respect and honor and reflect the esteem in which he is held by North, South, East, and West.

General Lee, if he were living today, would in this terrible conflict impress upon us all that we should do our duty without thought of self. Duty was to him his very lifeblood, and his Christian character, tolerance, temperance, integrity, and fidelity to the truth should be an inspiration to all of us.

As a part of my remarks I ask to have inserted in the RECORD a brief sketch of the life of General Lee written by my secretary, Hal P. Phillips.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A BRIEF SKETCH OF THE LIFE OF ROBERT E. LEE

(By Hal P. Phillips)

Robert E. Lee, fourth son of Gen. Henry Lee (known in history as Light Horse Harry Lee) and the third son of Anne Carter, his second wife, was born January 19, 1807, at Stratford, Westmoreland County, Va., about a mile from the south bank of the Potomac River.

As a youth, as a young man, and all through life he was an ardent admirer of Gen. George Washington, and it is said one could not fail to note the strong resemblance of his character in its strength, its poise, and its rounded completeness to that of Washington.

In 1825, at the age of 18, he entered West Point as one of Virginia's representatives. It is said that Andrew Jackson, then United States Senator from Tennessee, to whom he applied in person, was responsible for his appointment to the academy.

In a class of 46 Lee graduated second with the extraordinary distinction of not having received a demerit. He and Joseph E. Johnston entered the academy as classmates and here a friendship was formed that was never impaired.

June 30, 1831, he married Miss Mary Parke Custis, granddaughter of General Washington's stepson. Seven children were born to them, all of whom grew up—two adopted the profession of arms and rose to the rank of major general in the Confederate Army.

After graduating from the Military Academy he was assigned to the engineers. His first service was in Virginia, where he was engaged on seacoast defense, an experience greatly helpful later on when he was called to construct coast defenses of the Carolinas.

When the bloody Negro uprising known as the Nat Turner rebellion occurred, he was stationed nearby at Fortress Monroe. The important mission of quelling this rebellion—in which he succeeded—was entrusted to him.

In 1834 he was assigned to Washington as assistant to the Chief Engineer of the Army; in 1836 he was promoted to the rank of first lieutenant and in 1838 to the rank of captain.

When the Mississippi River, owing to a gradual change in its banks, threatened the city of St. Louis, he was sent by General Scott to take charge, and although the city withdrew its appropriation because of his methodical way, the young engineer succeeded.

In 1842 he was assigned to Fort Hamilton, where for several years he was engaged in improving defenses of New York Harbor. Two years later he was appointed on the Board of Visitors of the United States Military Academy. His efficient service thereon prepared him for the position of superintendent of the academy later on—1852.

During the Mexican War Lee, starting in as an engineer officer on the staff of General Wool, achieved more renown than any other soldier of his rank, and possibly more than any other officer in the army of invasion except the Commander in Chief. He became General Scott's chief of staff, and between the two was cemented a friendship which even the Civil War could not destroy. His scouts and reconnaissances at Cerro Gordo, Contreras, Churubusco, and Chapultepec brought him the brevets of major at Cerro Gordo and of colonel at Chapultepec September 13. General Scott declared that he was the "very best soldier he ever saw in the field."

Such, in brief, was Col. Robert E. Lee when at the age of 54 he found the storm of civil war on the verge of bursting upon the country.

April 17, 1861, Virginia seceded from the Union; and 3 days later, April 20, Colonel Lee resigned his commission in the United States Army. To his sister, whose husband and son espoused the Union cause, he wrote: "With all my devotion to the Union and the feeling of loyalty and duty of an American citizen, I have not been able to make up my mind to raise my hand against my relatives, my children, my home. I have, therefore, resigned my commission in the Army; and save in defense of my native State, with the sincere hope that my poor services may never be needed, I hope I may never be called on to draw my sword."

As he wrote his son April 5, 1852: "Do your duty in all things like the old Puritan. You cannot do more; you should never wish to do less. Duty is, then, the sublimest word in our language." So for 4 years he followed duty with the constancy of the northern star:

"Of whose true, fixed, and lasting quality,
There is no fellow in the firmament."

After the war, although tendered positions carrying with them large salaries, General Lee accepted the presidency of Washington College at a salary of $1,500 a year—October 2, 1865.

At the age of 63, October 12, 1870, General Lee passed away and was buried in the little mountain town of Lexington, in the valley of Virginia, where he lived and where he died.

"A prince once said of a monarch slain,
'Taller he seems in death.'"

PROHIBITION OF LIQUOR SALES AROUND MILITARY CAMPS

Mr. O'DANIEL. Mr. President, it is my intention to speak briefly on a bill which I intend to introduce soon in the Seventy-eighth Congress. It is an exact copy of Senate bill 860, which was introduced in the Seventy-seventh Congress by my predecessor, the late Senator Morris Sheppard, except that my bill omits that part of Senate bill 860 which deals with vice in and around Army reservations, because that part of Senate bill 860 has already been enacted into law. My proposed bill seeks to enact into law only the remainder of Senate bill 860, which has not yet been enacted. It reads as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the interest of the common defense no person, corporation, partnership, or association shall sell, supply, give, or have in his or its possession any alcoholic liquors, including beer, ale, or wine at or within any military camp, station, fort, post, yard, base, cantonment, training or mobilization place which is being used at the time for military purposes, but the Secretary of War may make regulations permitting the sale and use of alcoholic liquors for medicinal purposes. Any person, corporation, partnership, or association violating the provisions of this section or any orders, rules, or regulations made by proper authority thereunder shall unless otherwise punishable under the Articles of War be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and be punished by a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $1,000 and/or imprisonment for not less than 30 days nor more than 12 months.

SEC. 2. That in the interest of the common defense it shall be unlawful within such reasonable distance of any military camp, station, fort, post, yard, base, cantonment, training, or mobilization place as the Secretary of War shall determine to be needful to the efficiency, health, and welfare of the Army and/or Navy and shall designate in general orders or bulletins for any person, corporation, partnership, or association to sell, supply, give, or have in his or its possession any alcoholic liquors, including beer, ale, or wine. Any person, corporation, partnership, or association violating the provisions of this section or any orders, rules, or regulations made by proper authority thereunder shall, unless otherwise punishable under the Articles of War, be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and be punished by a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $1,000 and/or imprisonment for not less than 30 days nor more than 12 months.

SEC. 3. In construing the foregoing sections of this act, the word "Army" shall extend to and include "Navy"; the word "military" shall include "naval"; "Articles of War" shall include "articles for the government of the Navy"; the words "military camp, station, fort, post, yard, base, cantonment, training, or mobilization place" shall include such places under naval jurisdiction as may correspond to the aforenamed places under military jurisdiction. The powers conferred under this act upon the Secretary of War are hereby conferred upon the Secretary of the Navy with regard to the naval service. The words "Navy" and "naval" shall include the Marine Corps. The aviation units of both the military and naval service shall be subject to the provisions of this act.

Mr. President, I wish to explain the urgent need of this legislation. We are now engaged in the most horrible war the world has ever witnessed. All our selfish interests and personal likes and dislikes should be abandoned for the duration, and we should concentrate all our might and main on one thing, and one thing only, and that one thing is the winning of this war. This bill is strictly a war measure. It has absolutely no relationship whatever with the highly controversial subject of national prohibition. Let us then discuss it and consider it solely from the standpoint of a war measure.

I believe almost everybody agrees on three things: First, a man is less efficient when he is intoxicated; second, he cannot become intoxicated except by drinking liquor; third, he cannot drink liquor if it is not obtainable.

My bill is, therefore, positive assurance that our armed forces will not be intoxicated in any degree while on duty, because it prohibits the possession of liquor on Army reservations. Certainly, with our Nation and everything we hold dear hanging in the balance, this is no time to theorize or to trifle. We must eliminate all possible hazards. My bill completely eliminates one hazard—liquor.

My bill is based on at least three sound fundamental principles:

First. It will place Government workshops and training schools on Army reservations in exactly the same category with all successful civilian factories and schools. Practically every successful civilian factory or training school in America prohibits liquor to be sold on the premises or consumed by employees or students on duty. Upon that sound fundamental principle America has been built into the greatest commercial nation on earth. This bill will impose on the personal liberties of soldiers no restrictions that are not now imposed by rules upon civilian employees while on duty. While off duty, soldiers and civilians alike may buy liquor from legally established stores, and may drink it if they desire.

Second. My bill includes the sound fundamental principle so strongly advocated by most businessmen—that of keeping the Government out of active business competition with private enterprise. By prohibiting the sale of liquor on Government reservations, the legally established private liquor stores outside the Government reservations will enjoy the business. The privately owned establishments have their money invested in property, pay their licenses and taxes, and are, therefore, entitled to some protection from the competition of the Government which they help support by paying license fees and taxes.

Third. The third sound fundamental principle contained in my bill is to simplify management on the Army reservations and to reduce the cost of operation. Every business manager knows that eliminating unnecessary activities reduces operation costs and gives more time to devote to the major purposes. My bill lifts the liquor business, its supervision, and enforcement out of the Army camps, thereby eliminating that expense and leaving more time for all men to devote to the major purpose of the Army—the winning of the war.

My bill goes further than that. It recognizes that in some instances it is just or necessary that such helpful regulations be established in certain areas adjacent to Army reservations. So the bill provides that in such cases the Secretary of War or Secretary of the Navy will have legal authority to establish such areas. Certainly they are the public officials to whom such authority should be delegated. Upon their shoulders rests the responsibility of maintaining the efficiency, health, and welfare of our armed forces. Therefore, along with those duties and responsibilities should also go the legal authority to do the things necessary to carry out their duties. It is not certain that they now possess that authority. My bill will give them that authority, beyond any doubt.

Mr. President, it is well known that our present Secretary of War and Secretary of the Navy have opposed the enactment of this legislation. I can easily understand why any public official might prefer that no additional responsibilities be placed upon him, especially responsibilities as grave as these. But some public officials should have this grave responsibility placed squarely upon their shoulders, and I know of no more appropriate persons upon whom to impose it than the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of War.

Suppose, before this bill is enacted, that some terrible catastrophe should occur due directly to conditions which this bill would have prevented. Who would share the blame? The Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy certainly could not be blamed. In my opinion, nobody except the Members of Congress could be blamed for having failed to center the responsibility upon some specific person or persons.

Under these conditions it is only natural that opposition to this legislation should come from the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy. But, according to our form of government, Mr. President, I believe Congress should be guided by the voice of the people who elected us to office, not by the voice of public officials who hold office only by appointment and are not the elected representatives of the people. I am a strong advocate of the theory upon which this Government was founded—namely, that the people are the masters and the public officials are the servants. I fear that too many Washington bureaucrats of the present day who show signs of wanting to dictate to Congress have the opposite view, and that they believe public officials are the masters and that the people are the servants.

We also find opposition to this legislation now showing up in the form of propaganda issued by the Office of War Information. This agency recently detoured from its duty of passing out war information to the public, and issued a 16-page epistle. The Office of War Information failed to title the article, but it has been titled by the journal of the liquor industry, Tap and Tavern, in their editorial of January 4, 1943, as follows: "An Answer to the Liquor Industry's Prayer." Mr. President, is it not characteristic that the liquor interests would embellish their ally's concoction with sacrilege? I shall not take time here to discuss all the false statements or inconsistencies contained in the article titled by the liquor industry's journal, "An Answer to the Liquor Industry's Prayer."

On page 1 the report states:

> There is not excessive drinking among troops and drinking does not constitute a serious problem.

On page 9 it states:

> General Marshall, in July 1942, ordered that military police be stationed on all trains and at all depots habitually used by military personnel. Because of the shortage of military police, this order is not yet completely in effect, but 1,935 men will soon be detailed exclusively to these duties.

So, Mr. President, during this period of serious manpower shortage we have 1,935 able-bodied men assigned exclusively to the policing of troops on trains, at a cost of approximately $6,000,000 a year of our heavily burdened taxpayers' money, although the report says, "Drinking does not constitute a serious problem."

Only fragmentary parts of the voluminous report were quoted by most newspapers, but intertwined in the report are statements that near 1 camp 16 soldiers were arrested in 1 night for drunkenness; 5 in another. In another camp in 1 month there were 18 courts martial for soldiers charged with intoxication; 14 in another; 16 in another; 23 in another. In another town 900 men a month were being sent back to camp in custody of military police, and in the past the number has run as high as 900 a week. The report says that in 1 camp there were 404 arrests for minor offenses in 1 month, and 508 the next month; and the report further states "minor offenses, for our purposes, can be considered drunkenness." I call attention to the fact that with all this drunkenness going on and hundreds of arrests being made, as stated in the same report, we are told that "drinking does not constitute a serious problem."

The anonymous gum-soled sleuths of O. W. I. who reportedly strode over 12,000 miles of territory during this tire shortage emergency and strict gasoline rationing period to write the Answer to the Liquor Industry's Prayer, evidently missed Sheppard Field at Wichita Falls, Tex.—the field named in honor of the author of S. 860. A humble citizen from that district wrote me under date of December 29, 1942, as follows:

I attended a funeral in Wichita Falls back when Sheppard Field first opened and the police told my husband that the night before they put 50 drunken soldiers in jail.

Since that time conditions became so bad under the management of those who oppose S. 860 that a public election was held, and an indignant and outraged public citizenship, who had high respect and sincere consideration for the welfare of our brave and noble boys in uniform, outlawed liquor in that entire county for the benefit of our boys in armed service.

Mr. President, I read the following, from page 4 of this sheet known as the Answer to the Liquor Industry's Prayer:

It is legal for a civilian to take a drink in this country; it would be discriminatory to deny the same right to the soldier who has already relinquished many privileges the civilian considers his rights.

Take notice of that logic, if you will, and then listen to the paragraph which immediately follows that statement, reading as follows:

Enlisted men and noncommissioned officers may not possess hard liquor on a Government reservation and this regulation is stringently enforced.

Inconsistency, thou art a jewel. In one breath the statement is made that it would be discriminatory to permit civilians to drink liquor and deny the right to soldiers, and in the next breath the statement that enlisted men and noncommissioned men may not possess hard liquor on a Government reservation. What do they have, Mr. President? An Army club where only a favored few officers may indulge? My bill would straighten out that inconsistency and remove all discrimination.

I will not take time here to point out various other inconsistencies in the 15-page document titled "An Answer to the Liquor Industry's Prayer," published by our Government at Government expense, but I will say that about the only way it could have been made more ridiculous than it is would have been for it to have been prepared by the editors of the defunct old Literary Digest. The report, in my opinion, falls into the category of pure propaganda, issued for the sole purpose of trying to influence public opinion. It so happens, however, that there are a great many people living around our Army camps, some of whom have relatives in those camps, who know that conditions are not as outlined in this report.

As an example, I refer Senators to the front page of the Hugo Daily News, of Hugo, Okla., dated December 30, 1942. In the second column is a news item date-lined Washington, D. C., reading in part as follows:

The American Army drinks beer and whisky conservatively and is the best-behaved Army in the world, Office of War Information said today in a comprehensive report on drinking conditions in and around training camps and posts. * * * Soda pop, said the report, is the favorite drink in Army camps.

On the same front page in the fourth column is this news:

A total of 288 arrests of soldiers for drunkenness in Hugo last week end was reported by Lieutenant Smith, Camp Maxey provost marshal. Unless sales of liquor in Hugo and elsewhere in the country are curbed sufficiently to bring about a marked improvement of this situation next week end, which will be immediately after pay day at Camp Maxey, the Army's answer will be "Hugo off limits" on that score.

It would seem to me that the people in and around Hugo could have very little confidence in any reports put out by O. W. I., in view of this report to their own knowledge being so far from a correct statement of the actual conditions existing there. The same may apply to people around Army camps all over this Nation who are familiar with true conditions. I am of the opinion that this war is too serious a problem to be used as an excuse for a Government agency to publish "an answer to the liquor industry's prayer."

This deadly war is indeed a serious war. The brave soldiers in the ranks realize it is serious. The families who have dear ones at the battle front realize it is serious, and the heartbroken Gold Star Mothers and others who have lost their dear ones in battle realize it is serious. Yet, I ask you, Do the liquor interests view this war from a different standpoint—from a profit-motive viewpoint? They have said an official Government document is "an answer to the liquor industry's prayer." They have also stated that they consider the regimentation and concentration of teen-age boys as an opportunity to increase the volume and profits of the liquor traffic. To substantiate that I quote from another liquor editorial in the Brewers Digest, published at Beloit, Wis., as follows:

One of the finest things that could have happened to the brewing industry was the insistence by high-ranking Army officers to make beer available at Army camps. * * * The opportunity presented to the brewing industry by this measure is obvious.

Commenting on the attitude of the Army authorities, the editorial proceeds:

Here is a chance for brewers to cultivate a taste for beer in millions of young men who will eventually constitute the largest beer-consuming section of our population.

That article proves the true character of the men engaged in this hellish liquor traffic, and establishes their brand of patriotism—the brand that looks upon this bloody war as a means of increasing their volume of liquor business and greedy profits. Mr. President, brushing aside all the alibis and manufactured statistics and getting down to bedrock, everyone knows that this business of selling booze either to military or civilian customers is only a game to make money. Reason tells us that if we were to take the profit out of the booze racket, nobody would continue in that business very long. I ask, Why should our Government back such a nefarious and degenerating business just for the purpose of enabling a few conscienceless money-grasping individual booze manufacturers and dealers to make profits?

Let us look a little further into this nefarious liquor traffic, fostered, condoned, encouraged, and engaged in by our Federal Government. We boast of our democracy, our freedom, and our liberty. Then, to counteract our song of freedom and liberty, we drown it out by our actions. Good Christian people who oppose liquor and all the evil akin to it, have by law established dry counties or States. There these freedom-loving and liberty-loving fathers and mothers have reared their families, bringing up their boys and girls in a clean, Christian environment. Then comes the war. Their teen-age boys, before becoming old enough to vote, are drafted into the armed service and taken from their clean, wholesome surroundings and forced to live where liquor is sold and drunk freely. At that impressionable age, when the habits of those teen-age boys are so susceptible to character-deteriorating influences, they are deprived of the tender care and protective guidance of their fathers and mothers, and entrusted to the care of their Uncle Sam. And, I ask, What does their Uncle Sam do? He sets up a saloon right in the reservation where these teen-age boys are forced to live. This thing of getting our teen-age boys away from their good, clean Christian homes and Christian parents, and placing them in liquor-infested Army camps and Army reservations, is recognized and acknowledged as a big boon to the booze business by the liquor manufacturers, and they are advertising that fact through their publications and other means of publicity. They gloat over the fact that high officials in this Government have given them what they refer to as "the answer to the liquor industry's prayer."

To show further how unfair these liquor interests are in using the war effort as a means of profit, let me point out that they are not even fair with each other. Listen to this quotation from a letter I received from the president of a large brewing company:

MY DEAR MR. SENATOR: May we bring to your attention the fact that practically all the beer for the armed forces in foreign service, for lend-lease shipments, and for the various service cantonments in this country, is purchased from 5 or 6 favored breweries. Considering that there are 488 breweries in the United States, do you not think that this distribution of Government business is a little out of proportion?

We are not being honored with any of this business and are thus petitioning you solely in the interests of fair play and just representation.

That, Mr. President, is a letter from a large brewing company accusing our Government of showing partiality to the extent of virtually giving to 5 or 6 breweries a complete monopoly on the beer business in Army camps, in all our foreign service, and in lend-lease shipments, and shutting out 482 or 483 of the 488 breweries in this Nation. If such conditions as are stated by the president of this brewing company exist, it indicates that this booze racket in Army camps is almost a closed shop. It looks like the little fellows in the brewing industry are locked out.

The brewers recognize that the business is valuable and worth fighting for, and it looks like they are staging a successful battle and a profitable one. In this time of emergency, when people are being called upon to curb their appetites and desires, let us bring out the records and show that the liquor interests are actually increasing their sales. During the fiscal year July 1, 1940, to July 1, 1941, the consumption of domestic distilled spirits, indicated by tax-paid withdrawals, and not including withdrawals of spirits produced at industrial alcohol plants, was 102,685,625 gallons. For the fiscal year July 1, 1941, to July 1, 1942, including about 7 months of war, the consumption was 119,277,575 gallons. That shows an increase of 16,591,950 gallons, according to Internal Revenue Bureau figures.

Let us now examine the beer record. In the fiscal year July 1, 1940, to July 1, 1942, the tax-paid withdrawals for conliquors for consumption amounted to 1,636,774,611 gallons, and in the following fiscal year, July 1, 1941, to July 1, 1942, the tax-paid withdrawals for consumption were 1,884,243,457 gallons, or an increase for the year of 247,468,846 gallons.

While this wild orgy of increased liquor consumption continues during our serious war crisis, encouraged by the selfish liquor gang and by our Federal Government, the Government of our sister nation to the north of us recognizes that we are in an all-out war, and recognizes that liquor will not help win the war, so on December 16, 1942, the Canadian Government reduced the amounts of liquor for sale 10 percent on beer, 20 percent on wine, and 30 percent on spirituous liquors. They also reduced the alcoholic content of spirituous liquors to a maximum of 30 percent under proof. They also prohibited the fortification of wine with distilled spirits. The Canadian Government also appealed to the Provinces to reduce the hours of sale to a maximum of 8 hours per day, which meant a cut of 8 hours a day in operation of Ontario beverage rooms.

The Canadian Government also appealed to the public for full cooperation in the Government's wartime temperance program. Contrast, if you will, this action by the Canadian Government with the action of our Government through Office of War Information issuing the statement of December 30, 1942, which the liquor interests titled "An Answer to the Liquor Industry's Prayer."

The Canadian Government has made and will make appeals to the public for full cooperation, and appeals for leadership to set an example.

In America there has been no official Government appeal for temperance in 10 years.

As far-reaching as the Canadian policy is, the reasons given for it are even more inclusive.

Premier King contended to the Canadian people that the plan would do much to make possible a total war effort, impossible under the old plan. He said the increased consumption of all liquor necessitated the action. Absenteeism and inefficiency in war work and many industrial accidents—in one Province alone equal to an entire army division—were the result of the old system of unrestricted drinking, which is the continuing American system.

Apparently the only political connotation to the new move was the Premier's warning that aside from all the evils the Government charged against unrestricted sale was the obvious resentment people were showing at the taverns continuing as usual when everywhere else, in their homes, in industries, and so forth, the people were making tremendous sacrifices in the war effort.

But the most startling ban established by the Canadian Government in its effort to help win the war is that on liquor advertising. While the brewers and distillers in the United States will spend upward of $28,000,000 in advertising in 1943, in Canada not one penny will be permitted to be expended in advertising liquor after February 1.

Contrast the Canadian ban on liquor advertising during wartime, Mr. President, with the radio programs which clutter up the air waves of this Nation urging people to be patriotic and help win the war by drinking one large bottle containing three times as much liquor as one small bottle in order to save metal caps for Uncle Sam to use in the winning of the war. This and other utterly disgusting practices by the money-crazed liquor interests is fast turning a war-worried and heartbroken American citizenship away from tolerating this foolish, demoralizing liquor traffic. This type of advertising rides the air waves and forces its unwelcome propaganda into pure Christian homes in dry territory, where the radios happen to be tuned to these radio stations. There it sows the seeds of corruption and crime in the minds of the youth of our Nation.

Federal Judge Patrick T. Stone, of Wisconsin's western district, says:

> From my experience on the bench, I have concluded that more boys and girls go bad because of drink than for any other reason. Drink quickly leads to all forms of dishonor.

Arthur James Todd, professor of sociology at Northwestern University, said in an interview:

> Just why the liquor traffic should be allowed to pyramid its tremendous waste onto the tax burdens of the country in a time of such emergency as the present program demands is an enigma to those American people who are concerned for human welfare and for the conservation of national resources.
>
> And as to the hue and cry that taxes would be even higher if the liquor revenue were withdrawn, that is complete folly. The estimated billion dollars that the liquor traffic pays annually to the Federal, State, and local government out of its customers' pocket is but a drop in a hogshead as compared with what, because of liquor, is being doled out in relief for funds, unemployment insurance, accident and sick benefits, hospitalization, care of mental and physical wrecks—women as well as men—and liquor-caused crime.
> What are beer-caused mistakes in the Army costing the people in defense taxes?
> Who will ever know?

Many people are so thoroughly disgusted with the lack of consideration given S. 860 during the Seventy-seventh Congress that unless some reasonable legislation such as this bill calls for is enacted very soon, in my opinion, there may be such a strong revolt that national prohibition legislation may be reenacted. The fact of the matter is that national prohibition exists right now. Prohibition is now in effect on dozens of articles. Our Government has a police force attempting to prevent bootlegging in gasoline, rubber tires, sugar, meat, and dozens of other articles. We do not now need to enact a national prohibition law exclusively against liquor. All that is necessary is to add liquor to the list of articles already prohibited or rationed.

Public indignation over the liquor interests' activity during this terrible war is all that is needed to add liquor to the list.

Further to substantiate my remarks concerning this growing resentment against this liquor traffic, I wish to read the following letter which was recently written and distributed by the liquor industry of Washington, D. C., in the Beverage Bulletin.

> NOVEMBER 9, 1942.
> To All Those Who Want To Keep the Alcoholic Beverage Business Alive:
>
> We have just seen the United States Senate defeat the Lee amendment to the draft bill which would have made possible the imposition of prohibition upon a large part of the country.
>
> With the rest of the industry and with the President and high commanders of the Army and Navy who led the fight against the amendment we rejoice in its defeat because if it had been adopted this amendment would have led the country back to intolerable conditions.
> Since the amendment has been defeated it behooves all those interested in preserving legal liquor to give thought to the amendment, to the strength that its proponents showed, to the reasons for its advancement, and to the reasons for its defeat.
>
> Many of those in the industry who were scared almost to death while the amendment was pending have become tremendously brave since its defeat.
>
> Many who quaked before the vote now are going around saying "I told you so" and, incidentally, adding that the defeat of the Lee amendment, shows that this country can't go dry.
>
> Many more are claiming that they and they alone are responsible for beating the proposal. Organizations within the trade, both big and little, are each, severally and collectively, asserting that it was their work that beat the amendment.
>
> Press agents and public relations counsels are pointing to their fine work and are using the defeat of the dry program to bolster themselves and their organizations.
> The defeat of the Lee amendment carries with it a great danger to the alcoholic beverage industry.

That is the plain and important fact that all of those in the industry who are commenting on the event seem to be overlooking.

The danger lies in the fact that defeat of the amendment may perpetuate the blindness with which the industry seems to be afflicted. And as long as the industry remains blind to conditions as they exist the business is liable to destruction.

The Lee amendment was defeated because common sense still prevails and because the United States Senate had the courage to withstand the demands of a heavy pressure minority.

It was not defeated because the American public or the Senate esteems the alcoholic beverage industry or the method of that industry's conduct. And further, it was not defeated by the adoption by certain industry organizations of semipressure tactics of their own.

This industry cannot afford to sit back and contemplate the defeat of the Lee amendment through rose-colored glasses while telling itself, "Everybody loves me. I'll go along my merry way and nothing will happen to me."

The fact is that despite the beating the Lee amendment took, something, or rather, some things, are going to happen to this industry. Furthermore, they are going to happen within a very short time. And unless the industry does something about it those things will be much more effective in accomplishing its destruction than would be the adoption of a half dozen Lee amendments.

In thinking about the beverage industry these days, it should be borne in mind that it is no longer a manufacturing business. It is purely a selling and buying business.

All of that part of the industry which could be of any possible use in the manufacture of war supplies is at work on that manufacture. We cannot justify the industry on the ground that part of it can be converted to making alcohol for munition purposes. That conversion is an accomplished fact.

The question now arises as to whether in the war program this business can justify the buying and selling of liquors for the manufacture of alcohol would go on even if that buying and selling were prohibited.

We believe that that buying and selling can be and is justified, even under war conditions as they exist at the present time.

But we also believe that certain modifications and changes in the methods of buying and selling alcoholic beverages are essential if the justification of their existence is to be made clear to the general public and to the legislators who will make the final decision on whether we continue to operate or not.

A great many people are in doubt as to the wisdom or desirability of continuing the sale of liquors during the wartime entirely aside from their beliefs about prohibition and temperance.

They are skeptical about the wisdom or desirability of leaving thousands of men and women employed in the liquor business when their services might be put to more useful purpose in other fields of activity.

They are skeptical about the wisdom or desirability of leaving thousands of motor vehicles with rubber tires at the disposal of the liquor business when those tires and those vehicles might be put to serving other purposes.

They are skeptical about the wisdom or desirability of permitting the liquor business to consume thousands of gallons of gasoline and oil when that gasoline and oil might be put to serving more useful purposes.

They are skeptical about the wisdom or desirability of permitting the liquor business to occupy space in stores and warehouses when that space might be used in a direct war effort.

They are skeptical about the wisdom or desirability of permitting the liquor business to use great quantities of materials, such as glass, paper, and caps when such materials consume time of workers in manufacturing.

They are skeptical about the wisdom or desirability of devoting to the liquor business railroad cars and shipping space which might be used for transporting men and freight more necessary to the war effort.

With this skepticism existing not only among the enemies of the business, but among many of its friends, it is obvious that the business exists only on sufferance.

The tendency to permit it to operate will decrease as the war pressure increases and you may rest assured that the war pressure will continue to increase.

Consequently anyone who thinks that the defeat of the Lee amendment ends the peril to the industry is living in a fool's paradise.

The Lee amendment was only the beginning. Furthermore it was probably the weakest pawn that could have been played in the game and it was played at an inappropriate time from the standpoint of the trade's enemies.

The real danger still exists. The real danger still grows.

What is the business doing about this real danger?

The answer is nothing.

That is probably not the complete answer. The business is doing nothing to abate the real danger. It is doing many things to increase that danger.

We are beating the drums for the sale of more liquor. We are waving the banners for greater and greater consumption. We are increasing the waste of manpower and material power in the business along many lines.

We are consuming materials that we don't have to consume We are using more gasoline and oil thar we need to use. We are using more space than we need to use.

And more than that we are shouting to the public that we are using these things while the public knows that we are a nonessential and purely luxury business.

If this business wants to cut down the danger that it finds itself in, if it wants to weather the storm which its own actions are brewing, its course is simple.

It must find a seat in the back of the hall and sit in it and keep quiet.

To carry out that prescription would bring drastic changes.

It would mean the end of all advertising, retail, wholesale, and distiller.

It would mean the end of the display of liquor, in windows, on bars, and everywhere else.

It would mean that we would have liquor for sale and that is all.

The public that wants liquor would find it in its legal place.

The public that doesn't want liquor and, in fact, doesn't want anything that isn't directly helpful to the war effort, wouldn't have liquor flaunted in its face every time it listened to the radio, read a newspaper, or walked down the street.

That is the only way for the industry to meet the real danger to its existence.

Has the industry the courage to meet that challenge and conduct itself on that basis?

Mr. President, that is a letter written by the liquor interests themselves. It is, without doubt, one of the most remarkable self-indictments ever published by the liquor interests. Furthermore, the truth is now known about who started the propaganda to bring about the break-down of enforcement of the prohibition law and later the repeal of national prohibition, and who paid for the campaign, and why. Much of the story is published in the official files of the congressional investigating committee and elsewhere.

According to reliable information, the repeal movement was started by a group of prominent millionaires in this Nation for the purpose of setting up a tax on liquor to replace the income tax. The plan was so appealing to some wealthy people who wanted to dodge the paying of income taxes, and the plan looked so plausible, that large contributions were made to the committee in charge for the purpose of conducting the largest and most comprehensive propaganda program ever conducted up to that time. It worked, and repeal came. But the reward hoped for by those wealthy proponents of the plan failed to materialize. Instead of income taxes decreasing, they have rapidly increased ever since. So have liquor taxes increased. The ever-increasing flood of tax money only sharpened the spending appetite of our Government bureaucrats, and now we have reached a point where taxes are about to devour the wealthy perpetrators of the "repeal plot." Perhaps in due time, and in their respective turn, taxes will also devour the liquor industry and almost all other industries, and will serve to help drag our Nation into a communistic or socialistic state. The liquor business is a wicked business. Because it is such, it will fall of its own wickedness, as did the ancient cities of Sodom and Gomorrah.

In conclusion, Mr. President, let us review the past to gain knowledge that will help guide us during the present serious war crisis.

In the enlightened world of today it is not necessary to guess the answer as to what we should do about liquor. The correct answer to the question is inscribed on all the pages of history since time began. The answer is definitely known. We have over 2,000 years of recorded history to teach us the dire results of the use of liquor. In the Holy Bible we read such admonitions as these:

Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging: and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise.

They shall not drink wine with a song; strong drink shall be bitter to them that drink it.

But they also have erred through wine, and through strong drink are out of the way; the priest and the prophet have erred through strong drink, they are swallowed up of wine, they are out of the way through strong drink; they err in vision, they stumble in judgment.

Look not thou upon the wine when it is red, when it giveth his color in the cup, when it moveth itself aright.

At the last it biteth like a serpent, and stingeth like an adder.

Beverage alcohol has played an amazing part in undermining and ultimately bringing about the defeat and collapse of practically every nation that has lost the crucial decision on the field of battle. Liquor has defeated more men, more armies, more nations than any other cause.

Alexander the Great bewailed the fact that there were "no more worlds to conquer." His end came in a carousal at the invitation of Medius. "There," said Plutarch, "he drank all the night and the next day, till at the last he found a fever coming upon him." Alexander conquered the world, but alcohol conquered him. He died drunk at the age of 33.

The Romans, in their early years strictly abstemious, undermined and destroyed their great civilization through a period of years of dissipation.

The Normans won the Battle of Hastings, September 28, 1066, during which, as the historian William of Malmsbury tells it, "they passed the night in fasting and prayer," while the Anglo-Saxons devoted the same period to drunkenness and debauch.

On Christmas Eve, 1776, the American troops crossed the Delaware and won the Battle of Trenton when they surprised the Hessian soldiers celebrating the season with drinking and feasting.

The Battle of Waterloo, fought near Brussels in June 1815, proved to be the decisive defeat of Napoleon because Marshal Ney, retiring to his headquarters on the eve of the battle, "fell into a deep and prolonged sleep" after imbibing his favorite Burgundy too freely, and "when he awoke he found himself apparently unable to give orders or to reach any decision."

In March 1918, when the German forces were advancing on Paris, the spearhead of the advance suddenly broke. No one could tell why. What transpired, as afterward officially reported by Prof. Hans Schmidt, of Helle, a commanding officer on the west front, was that—

The French had left a great supply of alcoholic drink as the surest means of retarding the German advance. Two whole divisions were found drunk, ready to be cut down by the Allied troops * * *. The wine-drenched Germans were simply mowed down by the enemy machine guns.

The Crown Prince, acknowledging the receipt of Schmidt's report, said:

If we had not found alcohol, we should have advanced farther than the March offensive. You are right in laying your finger on this painful wound.

George Washington, father of our country, realized the damaging effect of liquor, and had this to say with reference to its use:

The crime of drunkenness is one of hideous aspects and appalling consequences. There is, however, less occasion to discuss this vice, because many pens and tongues have been, of late, actively engaged in displaying its enormity, and holding up its evils to the public view. In all that is said of its guilt, its malignity, and awful effects we entirely concur. It has, indeed, been the unrelenting scourge of our earth, and is now one of the most dreadful curses by which the race is afflicted. It is at this hour one of the most prolific sources of disease, disgrace, poverty, and death, that is known in our world and more than anything else, demands the zeal of the patriot, philanthropist, and Christian, in order to its correction and final extinction. Wise and good men have ever been the uncompromising enemies of the evil practice and habits here detailed. Regarding them as offensive to God and destructive to men, they have held it their duty to condemn their indulgence, and endeavor to arrest their growth and prevalence.

With specific reference to the use of liquor in the Army and the dangers and serious consequences resulting from its use by the soldiers, George Washington, in 1756, issued an order reading in part as follows:

Any soldier found drunk shall receive 100 lashes, without benefit of court martial.

Abraham Lincoln, who led us to victory in the Civil War, said:

The liquor traffic is a cancer in society, eating out its vitals and threatening its destruction. It cannot be regulated, it must be eradicated, for all attempts to regulate it will prove futile.

Stonewall Jackson said:

I never use liquor. I am more afraid of it than of Yankee bullets.

Robert E. Lee said:

My experience through life has convinced me that abstinence from spirituous liquors is the best safeguard to morals and health.

Theodore Roosevelt, who took such a leading role in the Spanish-American War, and offered to volunteer his services in World War No. 1, said:

Neither the men in the Army nor the men engaged in doing vital work for the Army in connection with railroads, factories, mines, and shipyards should be allowed to waste strength and health in drink at this time. The same reasons that render it necessary to prohibit the sale of liquor to soldiers in uniform, or within a given number of miles from a military camp, and to stop its use on battleships, apply to extending similar protection for all citizens engaged in the work of railroads, factories, mines, and shipyards.

I may mention that my sons who are now in the Army in France write me most strongly (just as General Pershing has expressed his public opinion unstintingly) as to the harm done to the men of the Army by permitting the sale of liquor to them, stating that they believe in absolute prohibition for the Army in wartimes—and one of them adding that his experience has made a permanent prohibitionist out of him.

In 1917 Secretary of War Newton D. Baker said:

Our responsibility in this matter is not open to question. We cannot allow these young men, most of whom will have been drafted to service, to be surrounded by a vicious and demoralizing environment, nor can we leave anything undone which will protect them from unhealthy influences and crude forms of temptation.

Secretary of the Navy Josephus Daniels said during the First World War:

There lies upon us morally, to a degree far outreaching any technical responsibility, the duty of leaving nothing undone to protect these young men from that contamination of their bodies which will not only impair their military efficiency but will blast their lives for the future and return them to their homes a source of danger to their families and to the community at large.

And he said more recently, on November 2, 1942:

The same laws and regulations should be put into effect in this greater war. My experience in 1917–18 justifies me in urging that the Congress act favorably upon a like measure which worked well in that war.

Our great General Pershing, who led the Allied Nations to victory in the First World War, said:

Banish the entire liquor industry from the United States; close every saloon and brewery; suppress drinking by severe punishment to the drinker * * * and the Nation will find itself amazed at its efficiency. * * * I shall not go slow on prohibition for I know what is the greatest foe to my men, greater even than the bullets of the enemy.

On August 24, 1941, a dispatch from Vichy, France, by the United Press, stated:

A Government spokesman said today that alcoholism was the chief cause of the moral collapse of the French Army under the German attack. He said drunkenness was rampant in the Army during the 8 months of inactivity at the start of the war; that a single hospital in the Fourth Army Area had 814 cases of delirium tremens during January, and that the "disastrous area of intoxication" by young French soldiers had caused most of the cases of nervous break-down and shell shock when they had to face the German dive bombers and tanks.

Field Marshal Henry Petain, of France, after the fall of France, said:

Our soldiers were drunk and could not fight.

Dr. Charles E. Maddry, of Richmond, executive secretary of the Southern Baptist Foreign Missionary Board, witnessed the December 7 attack on Pearl Harbor. He is quoted as saying:

On December 6 Honolulu had 4,000 saloons, more than half of them operated by Japanese. Free liquor was served American soldiers and sailors the night before the treacherous Japanese assault. An immediate shut-down of all saloons was ordered, but a licensing system was put into effect in February.

This record, Mr. President, hands down the opinions of some of the world's greatest men, men upon whom we look with the greatest respect and admiration for the great deeds performed during their lives for the good of this country and all mankind, in the service of their country. There are many others whose opinions I should like to quote, but time does not permit. Also, there are others to whom we look for guidance in this country today whom I should like to be able to say had expressed themselves as being in favor of discouraging the evils of liquor, but I regret to say that I am unable to locate any such statements by them.

Mr. President, this is a serious situation, and one which the Christian people of this country are begging and pleading with our Congress to correct. We have that power but we have turned a deaf ear to the urgent appeals of those helpless citizens who are paying such a costly price. The very existence of our Nation is at stake. Thousands of men in the armed forces are disgusted with the unpleasant environment forced upon them. They want it abolished. Thousands and thousands of our citizens are demanding that liquor be abolished from our Army camps and Army reservations during this crisis. Unless this reasonable and sensible request of the people is respected, and respected by the Seventy-eighth Congress promptly, the liquor interests may well expect the wrath and vengeance of an enraged public to descend upon them by imposing measures which will not only abolish liquor from Army camps but also throughout the entire Nation.

Our great American democracy does not intend to be shackled by foreign tyrants, nor to have its heart eaten out by a gutter-sniping booze gang, even if reenforced by some dictatorially minded Washington bureaucrats. A great psychological change is taking place in the people of this Nation. They are determined to exercise their rights and not sit back and lose their country and all that they hold dear. They are ready to fight the enemy abroad as well as the enemy at home. They are getting tough. They are off soft rubber tires and are running on hard iron rims. Women are moving from comfortable homes into busy war factories. They are discontinuing their club and social activities, and picking up the riveting machines and electric welders.

Mothers, wives, sisters, daughters, and sweethearts are giving up their loved ones to fight and perhaps die in this war. They are making tremendous sacrifices, and are ready and willing to make further sacrifices if need be to back up their boys in the armed forces. But these same women are carefully observing the protection and care which their loved ones are receiving at the hands of this Government, and many of them resent bitterly the presence of liquor on the Army reservations.

Mr. President, we are building in this Nation one of the finest armies that ever existed. It is the cream of our American manhood. It is composed of those who are nearest and dearest to our hearts. There is scarcely a home in America from which has not gone some father, son, husband, brother, or other loved one. This army tugs at our heartstrings, especially so because of the thousands of teen-age boys in the service. It is for those men and boys that we seek this protective legislation. Many of them who despise liquor have requested this action. Others who advocate freedom to use it during peacetime express the desire to have it dispensed with during the period while we are engaged in the serious business of fighting this war. Are those men who abhor liquor to be, like slaves, chained to it? Are we, who have loved ones in the service who detest liquor, expected to sit idly by and not fight for their rights and freedom, while they fight for the rights and freedom of all of us?

Mr. President, this is a just cause, and, with the help of God, we will be delivered from the destructive and demoralizing effects of liquor while we are fighting this terrible war. We know there is a God in Heaven, and God is not mocked. Prayer is a holy thing, and thousands of good Christian people are praying daily for enactment of this legislation to protect our boys in the service, and to help win this war and save our Nation. May the Seventy-eighth Congress have the honor of furthering this great cause at this critical time, when the whole world is trembling in the balance, and all of our people are bowed in brief because of this deadly war.

God give us men! A time like this demands
Strong minds, great hearts, true faith, and ready hands;
Men whom the lust of office does not kill;
Men whom the spoils of office cannot buy;
Men who possess opinions and a will;
Men who have honor; men who will not lie;
Men who can stand before a demagogue,
And damn his treacherous flatteries without winking!
Tall men, sun-crowned, who live above the fog
In public duty and in private thinking.
God give us men.

THE PEACE AND THE NEW WORLD ORDER FOLLOWING THE WAR

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, there is a great deal of talk nowadays about the kind of a treaty and the kind of a world we shall have when the war is won. I wonder if we are not just a little bit "previous" when we spend so much time on that subject.

The other night I heard the national commander of the American Legion tell an audience in Washington that first we had better win the war before we talk so much about winning the peace.

The eminent commentator, Upton Close, yesterday over the radio said some words which all America should hear. He spoke on this very subject. He said we should not confuse the issue.

In other words, he indicated clearly that we had a big job ahead of us. He said we were not winning through at present. He spoke of the Budget of $109,000,000,000 presented by the President, to be spent in 1 year, and said that the Germans and the Japanese were planning to extend the war over a long period of time, so that the struggle would result in a stalemate, meaning that we could not continue indefinitely to spend at the rate of $109,000,000,000 a year.

Here in the Senate, and in the country generally, our attention has been diverted from the tremendous Budget demand of $109,000,000,000 by such matters as the Flynn nomination.

At first, when the President suggested $109,000,000,000, America seemed a little appalled at the suggestion that we were going to spend that amount in 1 year's war effort. The total cost to America of the last World War has been estimated at $42,000,000,000. The size of the Budget is not the important thing. The important question is, Are we using every dollar most efficiently toward the objective of winning the war?

We know that it is just as dangerous to spend too much carelessly as it is to spend too little too late.

Mr. President, I did not rise, however, to speak on that subject. I rose to make one point, and a simple one. It is fine for us to talk of a unity of objectives among the United Nations. It is fine for us to talk of some concert of action among the United Nations, looking toward an ultimate peace. It is fine for us to talk of correlating all these objectives through a council composed of representatives from each of the United Nations. It is well for us to talk over all these things, but, Mr. President, I submit that long before these things can even be considered, we must establish some kind of a simple mechanism—some kind of assurance—that, whatever happens, the people's representatives will be consulted.

In other words, Mr. President, in the establishment of whatever kind of peace or whatever kind of new world we are looking toward, the fundamental issue involved is the preservation of our system, and that means that the representatives of the people must be consulted.

This is a time for us to avoid all the mistakes of past history. This is a time for us to give assurance to the United States and to the world that whatever kind of peace is written, that whatever objectives are considered, the elected representatives of the people will have a voice in the determination of those objectives or of that peace.

Mr. President, the treaty which will be written when the war ends will determine the course of history for decades and perhaps centuries to come. Because we as a nation have grown so big and so powerful, the new situation has created new responsibilities and new duties. Therefore, we must make sure that we as a people are adequate to meet those responsibilities, especially now that modern inventions have contracted the globe.

What constitutes adequacy? The Good Samaritan, of whom Christ spoke, was adequate for the occasion. He had the proper concept as to his responsibilities—which the priest and the Levite did not have—but he also had the wine and the oil and the cash, making him the good neighbor. He made the wounded man whole so he could take care of himself. In other words, the greatest act of charity is that which enables the recipient to become competent and to stand on his own feet.

In the international field, as President Hoover has shown, we will have to feed the world when the war is over, becoming the Samaritan among the nations in order that once more humanity may march toward a better tomorrow. It is our job to make other nations competent to attend to their own business, but not to be a Santa Claus for the whole world.

Let us in our work, as the Samaritan of the nations, not forget—and this is very important—that a battle is constantly being waged between the forces of good and the powers of darkness. Let us never again be apathetic, careless, unalert. The fight between right and wrong, liberty and slavery, greed and selflessness, tolerance and intolerance, justice and injustice goes on within and without the Nation, and the ending of the war will not bring that fight to a close.

The good yeast is working and we look forward to the time when wars between nations shall be no more, when nations shall beat their swords into plowshares and make war no more, and the people of earth shall have one objective and that is to improve themselves and God's footstool—living in peace, fraternity, and brotherhood. But let us not confuse hope with reality.

The new world order toward which we are groping our way calls for men of action, possessing the qualities of the realist and the idealist. Yes; America has a tremendous job ahead of her.

Recently there have been introduced in the House and the Senate various resolutions which would establish a postwar planning commission. House Joint Resolution No. 28 was introduced by Mr. MUNDT of South Dakota, and House Joint Resolution No. 36 was introduced by Mr. VOORHIS of California. In the Senate a similar measure was introduced by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY].

In substance, each of these measures would create a joint body of Congressmen and representatives of agriculture, labor, and business. The main purpose suggested by these measures is to create a group that would become aware of world conditions and study all plans and ideas relating to a post-war peace, and bring the information to the Congress and the President.

Mr. President, I would welcome the creation of such a body or commission. It undoubtedly would and could perform a valuable function, depending of course upon the way it handled the problem.

But, Mr. President, the treaty America will enter into after this holocaust is over will have to be confirmed by the Senate and signed by the President. Section 2 of article II of the Constitution provides that—

> The President * * * shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur.

Mr. President, last September I submitted a resolution in the Senate which reads as follows:

> Resolved, That the Chief Executive be invited to join with the Senate in the creation of a Foreign Relations Advisory Council to be constituted of the following: The Secretary of State, the Under Secretary of State, other technicians whom the Secretary of State might designate, the chairman and the ranking minority member of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, and the chairman and the ranking minority member of the House Committee on Foreign Affairs, and such other Senators as the President might from time to time designate.

A few days ago I resubmitted that resolution in the Senate. The leading newspapers of the country, as well as some of the leading magazines, have written editorials approving the resolution; yet the committee to which it was referred would not report it to the Senate. Is this because the resolution itself is so simple, so understandable, so workable? I trust that it will have more favorable action in the near future.

I do not want history to repeat itself in respect to what happened after the last World War. I am not saying what pattern the world peace treaty should follow. I do not think any man is competent at present to lay down an adequate plan. Why? Because we must cut the cloth to fit the pattern, and no one can foresee what that pattern will be. I am happy to know that everywhere in America the people are thinking about this matter. The executive branch of the Government is giving thought and study to the subject. Great institutions devoted to public service, whose objectives are to develop sound national policies and to aid in building a better world, are also giving study and thought to the subject. Church groups and public forums, but most of all the common man and woman, are thinking about the kind of world we hope to bring about when this war ceases.

We have had the expression of former President Hoover suggesting that when the war ceases there must be a breathing spell before agreeing to a final plan. That idea is debatable. Governor Stassen, of Minnesota, has suggested a plan the nucleus of which would be a "single house parliament" to be composed of representatives of the United Nations of the world.

Mr. President, I have said that in this matter of international affairs we must cut the cloth to fit the pattern. I also said that as yet we have not the world pattern. What do I mean? Recently I received a letter from a friend in the State of Wisconsin on the subject of world peace, from which I quote the following:

> That the peace to come ought to be planned, most of us agree. That it must be planned and the support of the citizenry obtained before victory, many of us insist. What is dimming our hopes is the question of how. What is a plan through which the nations can contrive a lasting peace? Never has it been so apparent that means effect ends. In the last war the means we took (trusting it to a few harassed men working under the pressures of time, and of an impatient public, and of self-seeking groups) in the end brought the world to its present catastrophe.

Let me say parenthetically that that statement is also debatable.

> What method do we propose to use this time? Can an ordinary citizen like me have any part in it?
>
> I write representing no political or religious group, purely in my capacity as a citizen who is, as you are, interested in doing the right thing now, that our children and grandchildren may not, because of our indifference, have to face problems even more difficult than those we face today.
>
> Out of the din of voices there seems to be rising a concurrent sound opinion, which I can only mention and commend to you for your mature consideration and action. It has been given form best by Mr. Herbert Hoover, whose primary position is this:
>
> "That the United Nations shall agree now on the bases for a conditional peace, which shall be open to democratic discussion in the democratic nations, approved by popular will, and ready to be offered to the peoples of the Axis nations to be put into effect the moment they lay down their arms."
>
> Mr. Hoover suggests that this temporary peace should provide at least five things:
>
> 1. The total disarmament of the enemy.
> 2. The designation of provisional boundaries to nations.
> 3. The machinery for repatriation of prisoners and civilians driven from their homes.
> 4. The removal of economic blockades the instant that the enemy has handed over his arms.
> 5. The immediate organization to relieve famine and combat pestilence and aid in reconstruction. Otherwise there will be anarchy and no peace.
> 6. The provisional restoration of all commercial treaties that trade may begin again.

In answer to this letter I said that I am happy to see that people everywhere are thinking about the kind of world we are going to try to shape when the war ceases. I called attention to the following plans which are under consideration:

American leadership and mastery in the post-war world.

A new balance of power with America as the balancing power.

A British-American alliance.

A British-American union.

A federation of the democracies.

An association of the United Nations.

Regional arrangements.

The League of Nations.

Which plan the world will follow will be determined not only by the United States, but by the other nations of the world.

But plans alone are not sufficient. A great deal must take place in the rebirth of the human race before wars will cease.

As we get a broad perspective of the world we realize that many nations are just coming into "their own." Their peoples are stepping up the rung of the ladder of time to where they will feel the great impetus of national existence. Russia, with her hundred speaking tongues, is being amalgamated—a great people stepping out of their past into a world dynamic with all kinds of action. China, with her 400,000,000, is being united into a modern nation. South America, with her "dictator republics," is feeling the fever of a new world. And what about the black race and India? Are they not also feeling the impact of a great push?

We are living in a great, changing world. Even coral life is building new continents. We know that, because many heretofore uncharted reefs are being discovered.

Bearing all these things in mind, America must be realistic. She must constantly be on guard. We must, of course, attempt—and I hope bring about in the world—some form of association of governments which will be able to build peace and order. But until the race is reborn in the things of the spirit, we shall find volcanic eruptions—wars.

A great desire—which is prayer—among the common people of the earth may operate to channel the efforts of statesmen so that at least peoples of similar mind (like our Colonies were, back in 1786), will get together in some form of international association or union.

What is now going on in Africa—the trouble which our generals there are now facing, the trouble between the various groups of Frenchmen: Royalists, De Gaullists, Vichy French—is just a little sample of the problems that we must approach with realism as well as idealism when we talk of shaping a post-war peace and framing a treaty or an arrangement that will operate successfully in the post-war period. We all—especially we Senators—have a great responsibility, a great constitutional responsibility, and that is to see to it that this people is not put into a position such as we were when Hitler struck in Europe. If we are ever in that position again there may be no England and her air force to stop a yellow or a white horde, or a combination of the two, from striking at America.

Before Pearl Harbor a great many people in England and in this country had come to feel that no price was too high to pay for peace. On the other hand, we had a group of unrealistic interventionists who had no realization of what war meant, who said, "We are going to lick 'em in 3 weeks."

I say frankly that, looking out upon the world today, I am of the sincere conclusion that until the race has learned to be Christian in fact instead of in theory the problem is primarily one of power—the way of applying power for the purpose of maintaining world order. Mere generalities or phrases or fine-sounding clauses will not do the job.

Recently, Mr. President, there came into my hands, apparently forwarded to me from England, a document called Points for Post-War European and World Organization, by A. Hutton Ashkenny, Member of Parliament. I ask that it be incorporated in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks because it is rather full of specific ideas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCCLELLAN in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit A.)

Mr. WILEY. The document is not simply a collection of generalities. This, gentlemen, also suggests certain corollaries.

My purpose in inserting into the RECORD these points with the corollaries is simply to provide food for thought and to bring to the students of the great problem of the proper kind of post-war peace plan some phases of the problem about which perhaps they may not have thought. It has been said so often, Mr. President, that we won the last war, but lost the peace. We are resolved now that if it is humanly possible we will win the war and win the peace. We should know by this time that merely passing laws or engaging in international pacts will not do the job.

The Kellogg-Briand Pact outlawing war demonstrates that fact clearly. By the Kellogg-Briand Pact we outlawed war, but war came upon us. We know that you cannot by legislation or international convention change human nature and make wars cease, any more than you can make a good man out of a bad man by passing a law. In the post-war period we do not want to be caught napping at the peace conference or at any time thereafter. If we do we may not find it so easy to escape. Pearl Harbor should be a constant reminder that eternal vigilance—eternal vigilance in all matters, in peace and in war—is the price of liberty.

Will the peace treaty create a new balance of power, a federation of democracies, a league of nations, regional arrangements, an American-British alliance, or will America attempt to "go it" alone? No man at present is big enough to answer that question. There are too many imponderables in the future. But one thing is sure: If we are realists we shall see to it that America, either singly or jointly, is in control of the pivotal air bases and the sea bases of the world. We shall also see to it that the threat of foreign nations in the Caribbean is removed.

I believe that at the outset it must be apparent to most thinking people that, considering the psychological, religious, intellectual, social, and political conditions of the various races of the earth, it would be impossible at this time to amalgamate them into a world state. I think that consideration is primal.

All the enthusiasm and all the things that make men whose feet are not on the ground dream dreams and see visions amount to nothing. I say that unless we are realistic enough to see the picture of this globe as it is, it is impossible at this time to amalgamate all the races and all the peoples, with their various backgrounds such as I have enumerated, into a world state.

I believe after we have won through to victory and have paid the price of this war, in lives and material values, this people will never forget—at least, I hope so—that we are living in a changing world, and that the maintenance of a world order and peace depends to a large extent upon the power lodged and the way that power is exercised by the associated nations.

We know that when this war is over the world will not be cleansed of the evils which make for war. There will be no opportunity to put into effect a great many of the Utopian and visionary schemes which have been advanced. Our problem is to create a plan. We must ever bear in mind that the plan must fit a complex world which is ever changing, and will have to deal with nations and groups and their capacity—I reemphasize the point—and their will—I also reemphasize the necessity for their will—to fit into the plan. Consequently, our eyes must be open. They must be on the past; and we must be aware of the experiences of history, as well as consider the dynamic present and the imponderables of the future. America must go forward searching out and seeking a way for the world's good, but constantly on the alert and on guard, aware of the dangers within and without which might threaten her very existence. No matter what kind of a post-war world we find ourselves in, America must see to it that she is adequately awake and prepared against any emergency that may arise.

Mr. President, I have gotten a long way off from my resolution. I return to it.

If President Wilson had advised with the Senate, as he knew other Presidents before him had, if he had appointed plenipotentiaries some of whom were Senators, might not the whole course of history have been changed? I believe so.

When Woodrow Wilson was president of a great university he taught the meaning of the constitutional phrase "advice and consent"; but when, as President of the United States, he went to Europe, he forgot his own teachings, and subsequently he submitted to the Senate of the United States what has been called a "fait accompli," a treaty ready to be ratified, and the Senate was told to ratify it. I say to you that the very course of history might have been changed and the present war might never have occurred if President Wilson had remembered his own teachings.

So I ask every Senator to give consideration to my resolution, because I think it is the answer to the way out.

I believe, Mr. President, that the recent election in the United States is a mandate to the President and the Senate to get together, to cooperate now, on the subject of planning the treaty and the peace for a post-war world. The advisory council provided for in my resolution, a council made up of the Secretary of State, the Under Secretary of State, and their experts, together with certain Members of the Senate, whose function it is to advise and consent, would be a liaison committee between the Senate and the Executive in this period, a group that would rub out the rough spots.

While this council would be concerned with the definition and formulation of the foreign policy of the United States, the council itself would have no constitutional authority. It would not detract from the power of the Senate to advise and consent or refuse to consent, nor would it limit the power of the President. It would be a committee built up for a specific purpose, to get over the bumps which exist. It would be simply a mechanism that would coordinate these two separate and distinct branches of government. This liaison committee would iron out some of the rough spots between the Senate and the Executive.

I have already said that the executive branch of the Government is studying this matter. Does the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate know what the Executive is thinking Not at all. Are we to go into another repetition of a situation in which the Executive is to attempt to dominate the picture, or are we to follow the mandate of the last election, a mandate by our masters to the Executive, a servant, and to the Senate, a servant, that we had better get together and play ball? If not, we will constitute the committee I am proposing.

I say again, it would not detract from the power of the Senate to advise and consent, nor would it limit the power of the President. It would merely be a mechanism which would coordinate these two separate and distinct branches of the Government. This liaison committee would iron out the differences.

It is equally apparent that the Senators on this council would be leaders in the debate when the treaty came before the Senate for its consent. Moreover, the members of the council would be in an intimate position to discuss matters with the Committee on Foreign Relations and get the benefit of the advice of that committee.

What is more, if this liaison committee were built up and created it could get the benefit of the best minds of the country. It could get the benefit of the joint commission which is contemplated under the various plans I have heretofore mentioned. It could be the reservoir of all the constructive ideas on earth. The members could call before them the leaders of Britain, if you please, and the ambassadors of the Allied countries.

They could get the benefit of the great independent brains and the great associations. Why should this be? Because, whether some folks believe it or not, the Constitution still lives, and it is the function of this body and the Executive to build the treaty to follow the war, not have it built and put in our laps, but to build it, and then, if it is satisfactory, ratify it and make it a living international organism.

If this proposed body were created the Senate would be on the inside in the formulation of the treaty. Oh, how important is that. We are the representatives of the people; we are the constitutionally elected officers, told to advise with the President. In the past other Presidents have said that meant aiding in the formulation of a treaty, and other Presidents have taken Members of the Senate and made them plenipotentiaries who have created treaties.

Are we looking forward to a period of cooperation, or to a period when again the two separate arms of government which are supposed to cooperate and coordinate their efforts will be distinct, as if a barrier were between them?

The suggestion I have made would require no legislation. The adoption of this resolution by the Senate would mean that the Senate, at least, would be on its toes, demonstrating a splendid example of democratic government in action. After the resolution was adopted, it would be up to the President to reject or to cooperate, and I believe the President would cooperate, in spite of the letter of the Secretary of State, which is already in the RECORD, which I inserted about a month ago, in which he said, in substance, that he knew his friends, the Senators, and could consult with them. It is not sufficient that the Secretary of State consult with a few buddies in the Senate of the United States. This is a Senate obligation; the Senate will insist, and if once again, months or years from now, the present Executive, if he is in office, should be handling the international subject of peace, and should appear before the Senate with another treaty in the formulation of which we had had nothing to say, we might see a repetition of history.

Mr. President, I do not want that to happen. I want this body and the President to assume their responsibility to the world, working together, cooperating. It is a big job, and it merits grave attention by big brains, tolerant, cooperative, willing to work together.

I am sure that if any Member of this body were the Executive of this Nation in this critical hour, he would welcome this gesture on behalf of the Senate. If the Senate should adopt the resolution there is no question that, if this suggestion were carried out, it would result in a more intelligent formulation of our foreign policy, and would certainly create a better working relationship between the Executive and the Senate.

Mr. President, I began my remarks with the thought that we have to attend to this idea of winning the war. I think the general tendency, because there is so much talk about peace planning, is to assume that the war is won. There is not a military man of any consequence in the United States today who says that. We did hear Halsey, out in the Pacific, say what would be done; but great naval men have disagreed with his statement. So it is our problem to win the war; and the only effect of my resolution would be the creation of a general liaison committee between the Executive and the Senate, the treaty-making powers of the Government, so that we could think the thing through together, and work in harmony, to the end that, if and when peace comes, we will be ready to give to the world the result of our study, and we will be working as teammates, with the thought that we could do the job, whatever it is.

EXHIBIT A

100 GREYHOUND LANE,
STREATHAM, S. W. 16,
London, England, July 12, 1942.

Mr. ALEXANDER WILEY,
Senator for Wisconsin,
United States of America.

P. T. O. for Corollaries September 3, 1942

DEAR SIR: The following proposals for a post-war European and world organization was submitted by me to all members of Parliament, Ministers of the Crown, and Cabinet Ministers. The replies suggest my praying your indulgence also. Hypocritical democratic leaders of peoples on the European Continent, and elsewhere, will oppose a watertight organization, hence the urgency for its insistence, to prevent future religious and economic wars.

POINTS FOR A POST-WAR EUROPEAN AND WORLD ORGANIZATION

1. No anticipatory wartime promise by the Allies of sovereignty to any European or world state whatever.

2. Six to 9 months' interval before a general election in Britain, dominions, and other world states, permitting the national populations to form a wise public opinion on a just comprehensive peace plan.

3. After the order for cessation of hostilities, the Allies to march into Paris, Brussels, Berlin, Munich, Rome, Vienna, and Warsaw, disarming all European states, only thereafter distributing food and clothing, rebuilding houses, organizing, and redistributing populations, establishing free institutions, democratic education, and just courts within the newly constituted states. The Allies to remain in occupation from 5 to 10 years.

4. The pooling of all personal and national offensive and defensive equipment (except personal sporting equipment) within the European states, into one federal army and navy. Air forces to be at the disposal of the supreme federal world power.

5. Establish undefended boundaries, not defended frontiers. Only the international union police to carry arms. All civilians over 16 years, to carry identification cards containing officially taken portraits and fingerprints.

6. Try, by Allied open courts, all Nazis accused by German or occupied territory nationals of criminal acts, violating pre-Nazi national and international law, and vouched for by witnesses.

7. The British Empire federal representatives, together with the United States of America and Russian representatives, shall alone be responsible for the democratic education of all European and mandated territories.

8. The creation of several large federal powers throughout the world, based on geographical position, either by an immediate post-war world conference or by the post-war allied overwhelming power.

9. Each federal power to possess a democratic constitution, an army, navy, and a federal police force, courts of justice, judges, prisons, and staff in each state. The federal high court shall hear appeals from states (or from minorities within states), and give decisions, it will promote appeals from states or minorities to the supreme federal power, who in turn will submit legal or constitutional matters to their independent supreme high court.

10. The British Commonwealth of Nations to be formed into six constitutional federations, owing allegiance to one constitutional king.

11. Constitutional guaranties to all peoples in all world states, freedom of association, expression, and thought. Appropriate legal, military, or air force action shall immediately follow any threat or contravention of the laws and constitution, by any person, minority, or state. Failing this, the supreme world federation shall immediately take control and armed action.

12. States — constitution, legislation, and administration: A federation constituting a state shall provide a code of federal laws and by-laws, devolving power to pass future regulations having the power of laws. The federation shall pay, own, and control the administration of justice for carrying out these regulations, by appointing state courts of justice, judges, staff, police, and prisons. When any state or minority therein is threatened from within or without, the federation shall immediately provide armed assistance.

13. Rising above these separate federations, covering the entire world, there shall be established a supreme world federal power, representative of the world federations. This grand federal power will appoint offices and officers to assist and coordinate work in all federal administrative departments, and shall conjointly control all armies and navies and shall alone control all aviation, civil and military. The decisions of its supreme court shall be final.

14. Any state or power not joining, or having joined, seceding, not complying with lawful decisions, or refusing to meet its proportional financial obligation toward the cost of the world organization, from taxation, shall be considered an enemy of mankind and be treated as such.

Yours faithfully,

A. HUTTON ASHKENNY,
M. B., Ch. B., B. Sc.

Corollaries, September 3, 1942, amplifying my points of July 12, 1942, for a post-war European and world organization.

A. Training personnel: The United States and British Dominion Governments are training officers at Virginia and Oxford Universities respectively for post-war European and world reconstruction and organization, and to act as liaison officers between the organizers of international union army of occupation, rescue workers, executors of justice for war crimes, and the civilian native populations. But many thousands more trainees are required. Students in universities and colleges, boys in public and secondary schools in United States of America and Britain should immediately be advised and guided to select a country, study its approved political, social and economic history, and language. It is vital for United States of America, Britain, and Russia to fill all such posts, instead of relying on native antidemocratically influenced personnel.

B. Armistice priorities: First, international union army of occupation to occupy all towns and strategic points all over Europe, including unoccupied supine states. Second, immediate collection and control everywhere of all military equipment. Third, only after collecting all arms, including those from unoccupied states, feed, clothe, and suitably house that section of the population, first in occupied then in Axis and unoccupied states. Fourth, organize execution of justice, concentration camps, prisons, etc. Fifth, organize employment, agriculture, transport, etc., with the help of judicially forced labor of Axis offenders. Sixth, establish absolute equality of religious freedom of worship for all denominations, forbidding abuse of freedom by political and religious secret propaganda. Seventh, establish undefended boundaries, not defended frontiers. Only the international union police to carry arms. All civilians over 16 years to carry identification cards, containing officially taken portraits and fingerprints. Eighth, establish free approved compulsory nonsectarian universal education, including for adults, compulsory biweekly civics, international organization and duties, social policy debates, and secret uninfluenced voting. Ninth, constitutional elections of local and state representatives, after 6 months' compulsory politico-social education, using identification cards.

C. Executing justice: Allies must now prepare classified directories of Axis populations, leaders, gestapos, military, and civilians, whether disguised, in hiding or protected in unoccupied countries, of those imprisoned, robbed, tortured, murdered, and of informants, etc. All military-aged men to be presumed guilty of cooperating in crimes, unless pr ed otherwise. No vindictive or life-taking punishment, only judicial, humane, even merciful.

PUNISHMENT CLASSIFICATION—CLASSIFIED PER SEVERITY OF OFFENSE AND JUDGED IN GROUPS

1. Hard labor for life. (a) Individual isolation on isolated world islands. (b) In isolated concentration camps for mining, reclamation, forestry, or agriculture, without the aid of labor-saving machinery, library, or radio.

2. Hard labor for a long term (20-30 years) as 1 (a) above.

3. Hard labor for a short term (10-20 years) with or without aid of machinery, library, or radio.

4. Good conduct men of classes 2 and 3. Service in labor corps in isolated or semi-isolated mines or farms with aid of machinery, library, and radio.

5. Labor corps long term (5-10 years), classified in trades and grades for mining, forestry, agriculture, building, engineering in various parts of the world, to recondition and reconstruct, land, farms, factories, houses, towns, roads, and railways, etc.

6. Same. Short term (1-5 years).

7. Educational labor (1-10 years), for students, teachers, in approved educational studies in isolated school camps or rural institutions, suitable, when freed for service as such, in state of origin.

8. Good conduct men in classes 4 to 7 may have wages, increased freedom of movement, amusement, less restricted civilian association or complete freedom in state of origin. Bad conduct men, duration and severity of labor increased.

Classes 4 to 7 to be provided with suitable feeding, clothing, housing, recreation, library, and radio.

Population remaining in Axis states, after redistribution and adjudication, will consist of men over 60 years, women, children under 16 years, released good conduct men, international union army of occupation, including federal staff for executing justice, prisons, and approved teachers, etc.

JOINT COMMITTEE ON BUDGETARY CONTROL

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, there has been submitted in the House of Representatives and in the Senate today a concurrent resolution which, I understand, is Concurrent Resolution No. 2 in the Senate, providing for the setting up of a joint committee on budgetary control. As I have been one of the many who have interested themselves in that subject, I should like to say just a few words about the measure.

The proposal is, broadly speaking, patterned on the system which has obtained for a number of years under the Committee on Ways and Means of the House and the Committee on Finance of the Senate. There is a Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation, which, in its turn, employs a staff of experts, who are responsible to Congress and to Congress only, and who maintain a constant, 12-months-a-year contact with and study of the subject of taxation.

Senate Concurrent Resolution 2 proposes to set up a Joint Committee on Budgetary Control consisting of members of the Appropriations Committees of the two branches of Congress. That committee in turn would employ a staff of experts, who would give the same kind of close attention to governmental expenditures that the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation gives to taxes.

Certainly the matter of appropriations has become extremely complicated. Whether or not it is as complicated as the subject of taxation is something which I will not discuss, but I think anyone who has had any contact with appropriations will agree that the matter has become extremely complex. This year in particular, when we have a Budget of $109,000,000,000, it is certainly no less difficult. In my judgment, if Congress is properly to discharge its function, it needs this type of expert help.

I see in the Chamber the able senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] who has many times been acting chairman of the Appropriations Committee, and who is chairman of some of its most important subcommittees, and whose diligence and industry are an inspiration to the younger Members who serve with him. I do not believe that men of his standing should be swamped with the detail which now comes to their lot. We have two extremely able secretaries of the Appropriations Committee today, but, of course, they are in no sense of the word a substitute for the kind of system which is contemplated by the measure under discussion.

Mr. President, I hasten to add that this is in no sense of the word a partisan undertaking. The joint committee contemplated in the concurrent resolution would give a majority representation to the majority party. It is above all a sincere attempt to enable Congress to function as Congress is intended to function. It is an attempt to follow through the policies which Congress establishes. It is an attempt to find out where the money goes and what happens to it. It is an attempt to have an authoritative voice at the disposal of Congress which can check on inaccuracies and on any misrepresentations which may be made to us by other branches of the Government.

For this reason I commend the measure to the attention of the Senate, and hope that the purpose and the spirit which underlies the concurrent resolution will find a friendly reception at its hands.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I should like to speak very briefly concerning the subject to which the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] has so well devoted himself. I see that the Acting Chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee, the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], is in the Chamber, and I wish to repeat what the Senator from Massachusetts had to say respecting the complete divorcement from any partisan purpose of this effort on the part of the minority members of the Appropriations Committee.

No one knows better than do the minority members of the Appropriations Committee the zeal and the energy with which the Senator from Tennessee presents and discusses appropriation measures in the Senate, and the measure under discussion is presented only with a view to building that sort of understanding which will bring about complete cooperation, to the end that we of the minority can more efficiently perform our duty as members of the committee in cooperation with the members of the majority.

Senators who are not members of the Appropriations Committee can have no conception of the task which the Appropriations Committee has to perform. The responsibility which falls particularly upon the chairman or the acting chairman is, I am sure, a responsibility greater than that carried by any other Member of the Senate. With appropriations assuming frightful figures, being now in excess of $100,000,000,000 a year, and the organization for handling appropriations being what it is, there ought to be better understanding of the task that falls on the Committee on Appropriations.

In the Senate, its Appropriations Committee, as, I am sure, the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] will agree, is given only 3 or 4 months to deal with these total appropriations. The Appropriations Committee of the House of Representatives, starting at this time through its subcommittees, is beginning the study of appropriation bills, supply bills, and getting them on their way.

If the usual practice is followed, we will not see any of those supply bills before late March or perhaps in April. Then the obligation will be upon the Senate Committee on Appropriations to function, and function fast, to the end that we can complete action on the bills before the beginning of the new fiscal year. That is an almost impossible task to place upon the Senate committee. When appropriation bills are received from the House the Senate committee cannot undertake in any material degree to go back of what the House has already done. Of necessity our time is devoted in largest part to a consideration of added requests, or requests which the House has denied, or new estimates which had not been presented in time to be dealt with by the House of Representatives. So we as members of the Senate committee are pressed in an impossible way, and we cannot do the job; and I do not believe any member of the committee would claim that it was possible for the committee to do the job in the manner expected by the Senate of its other committees.

So, Mr. President, this concurrent resolution is offered. It has now been appropriately referred to the Senate Committee on Appropriations, where I know the majority leadership will be cooperating to the end that there can be a thorough consideration of the proposal. It may well be that that consideration will afford a more expeditious approach to our problem.

Mr. President, I should like to make the point that those who are offering the proposed legislation are not in any degree seeking to shirk a responsibility which is theirs, and solely theirs, and that of every member of the committee. But it is not humanly possible for members of the committee to do the full job that ought to be done.

Mr. President, I see coming in our approaching work for the ensuing fiscal year a terrific challenge respecting the issue of personnel in some of the Federal departments. The journal of the Federation of Federal Employees—I do not remember the exact title of the journal—carries an editorial in its current issue attacking the existing overwhelming personnel, and argues that it would be possible to weed out endless numbers of employees, and thus reduce the budgetary requirements. Since that charge comes from the employees themselves, it seems to me the obligation rests upon our Appropriations Committee to make most careful investigation concerning personnel needs. We could be aided in an immeasurable way if we had at the service of the Appropriations Committee such a joint staff of experts as is made available to the Finance Committee and the Ways and Means Committee of the Senate and House, respectively—a staff of experts who would be devoting not a week, not a month, not 3 or 4 months in the year, to a study of budgetary needs and the uses to which our appropriations were being devoted, but would spend 12 months in the year studying those matters.

Mr. President, if that sort of joint operation were to cost $60,000 a year or $70,000 a year, I venture to say that for every dollar expended for that kind of service we would be able to save many, many times the cost of the effort.

Mr. President, I wish to say only one thing more, and it is rather a repetition of what has already been said.

This concurrent resolution is not offered to discount in any way the splendid leadership on the Senate Appropriations Committee. I repeat that we wish only to cooperate, and be of the greatest possible aid and service in assisting that leadership in doing more fully the job which I know the acting chairman of the committee as zealously desires to accomplish as does any other Member of the Senate.

Mr. President, I ask that at the conclusion of my remarks there be printed in its entirety Senate concurrent resolution 2.

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 2) establishing a Joint Committee on Budgetary Control was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States (the House of Representatives concurring), That there is hereby created a joint congressional committee known as the Joint Committee on Budgetary Control (hereinafter referred to as the joint committee).

SEC. 2. (a) The joint committee shall be composed of 10 members, as follows: (1) 5 members who are members of the Senate Committee on Appropriations, 3 from the majority and two from the minority party, who shall be chosen by the majority and minority members of such committee, respectively; and (2) 5 members who are members of the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives, 3 from the majority and 2 from the minority party, who shall be chosen by the majority and minority members of such committee, respectively.

(b) No person shall continue to serve as a member of the joint committee after he has ceased to be a member of the Committee on Appropriations by which he was chosen, except that the members chosen by the House of Representatives Committee on Appropriations who have been reelected to the House of Representatives shall continue to serve as members of the joint committee notwithstanding the expiration of the Congress.

(c) The members shall serve without compensation in addition to that received for their services as Members of Congress; but they shall be reimbursed for travel, subsistence, and other necessary expenses incurred by them in the performance of the duties vested in the joint committee, other than expenses in connection with meetings of the joint committee held in the District of Columbia during such times as the Congress is in session.

SEC. 3. The joint committee shall elect a chairman and vice chairman from among its members.

SEC. 4. The joint committee shall have power to appoint and fix the compensation of a clerk and such experts and clerical, stenographic, and other assistants as it deems advisable.

SEC. 5. The expenses of the joint committee shall be paid one-half from the contingent fund of the Senate and one-half from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives, upon vouchers signed by the chairman or vice chairman.

SEC. 6. For the purposes of this resolution, the joint committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized to sit and act at such times and places within the United States, whether or not the Congress is in session, has recessed, or has adjourned, to hold such hearings, to require the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, and to take such testimony, as it deems necessary, to authorize such expenditures as may be necessary for printing, binding, and other purposes as may be authorized by the joint committee. Subpenas may be issued under the signature of the chairman of the joint committee or any member designated by him, and may be served by any person designated by the chairman or such member. The chairman of the joint committee or any member thereof may administer oaths to witnesses. Every person who, having been summoned as a witness by authority of said joint committee or any subcommittee thereof, willfully makes default, or who, having appeared, refuses to answer any questions pertinent to the matter herein authorized, shall be held to the penalties provided by section 102 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended (U. S. C., 1940 ed., title 2, sec. 192). The cost of stenographic services in reporting such hearings as the joint committee may hold shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words.

SEC. 7. It shall be the duty of the joint committee to investigate the operation and effects of the present budgetary system, to ascertain the necessity for, the economy, and the correctness of amounts of appropriations made to or requested by the various governmental departments, independent agencies and establishments, and to make such other investigations with reference to the expenditure of public funds as it may deem necessary, and in particular to investigate such questions as may be submitted to it by the Appropriations Committee of the Senate or House of Representatives, or by any member of the joint committee, and to report, from time to time, to the Appropriations Committees of the Senate and House of Representatives the results of its investigations, together with such recommendations as it may deem advisable.

SEC. 8. The joint committee shall make available to the Appropriations Committees of the Senate and House of Representatives and to the subcommittees thereof at the request of the chairman or ranking minority member of committees or subcommittees thereof all available data together with the services of experts and assistants on the staff of the joint committee.

CONSIDERATION OF EXECUTIVE NOMINATIONS

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, as in executive session, I ask unanimous consent that the Executive Calendar be considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky? The Chair hears none.

The clerk will proceed to state the nominations on the Executive Calendar.

THE ARMY

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Army.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask that the nominations in the Army be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask that the President be immediately notified of the confirmation of these nominations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the President will be notified forthwith. That completes the Executive Calendar.

CONFIRMATION OF NOMINATIONS IN THE DIPLOMATIC SERVICE

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, earlier in the day several routine nominations in the Diplomatic Service were favorably reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations. As in executive session, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the nominations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The nominations will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read the nominations of the following persons, now Foreign Service officers of class 7 and secretaries in the Diplomatic Service, to be also consuls of the United States of America:

Paul J Reveley, of Connecticut.
John Peabody Palmer, of Washington.
Henry E. Stebbins, of Massachusetts.
Waldo E. Bailey, of Mississippi.
Jacob D. Beam, of New Jersey.
Mulford A. Colebrook, of New York.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, may I inquire what is the order of business?

Mr. BARKLEY. We are now about to consider certain routine nominations in the Diplomatic Service.

Mr. AUSTIN. Are they new appointments?

Mr. BARKLEY. They are merely routine promotions of members of the Diplomatic Service.

Mr. AUSTIN. Have they been referred to a committee?

Mr. BARKLEY. They were referred to a committee and were reported today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. They were reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations today.

Mr. AUSTIN. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the nominations? The Chair hears none.

Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask that the President be immediately notified of all nominations confirmed today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the President will be immediately notified.

ADJOURNMENT TO THURSDAY

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I move that the Senate adjourn until Thursday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock and 23 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Thursday, January 21, 1943, at 12 o'clock noon.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, JANUARY 18, 1943

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God of righteousness and of grace, Thou who art the Shepherd of our souls, we are pleased to come into Thy presence and look up to Thee as the fountain of wisdom, goodness, and power. Give us the peace of those who put their trust in Thee, who can suffer and be strong, who can bear burdens though the way be hard, who can live and serve in the midst of difficult tasks. We pray Thee to merge our courage and our motives into Thine own will so that our uprightness and honesty shall command respect; remind us, dear Lord, that there is no sculpturing like that of molding character. Oh, link us to a great crusade that shall be administered by the spirit of honor, truth, and unselfishness; thus the world shall be aroused from its nightmare and humanity shall be made free from the shambles of threatened death.

Give our citizens everywhere minds of discernment, willing minds, that they may heed the stern dictates of patriotic duty, of sacrifice, and frown upon ease and self-imposed idleness. We pray Thee to sanctify our joys, our hardships, our temptations, and our circumstances, and all who have distress of heart and are secretly bleeding. Spare us from any expression of complacency or self-aggrandizement and grant that the accents of our words and actions may be in the spirit of cooperation. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, January 14, 1943, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had adopted the following resolution (S. Res. 57):

Resolved, That the House of Representatives be notified of the election of Edwin A. Halsey, of Virginia, as Secretary of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Vice President had appointed Mr. BARKLEY and Mr. BREWSTER members of the Joint Select Committee on the part of the Senate, as provided for in the Act of August 5, 1939, entitled "An act to provide for the disposition of certain records of the United States Government," for the disposition of executive papers in the following departments and agencies:

1. Department of Agriculture.
2. Department of the Navy.
3. Department of the Treasury.
4. Federal Security Agency.
5. The National Archives.

SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER

The SPEAKER. The Members who have not taken the oath of office, if there be any, will present themselves at the bar of the House and take the oath of office.

Mr. KIRWAN appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath of office.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. GORE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that today, at the conclusion of the legislative program of the day and following any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

NATIONAL YOUTH ADMINISTRATION

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

[Mr. TARVER, addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that today, at the conclusion of the legislative program of the day and following any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDERSON of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday next, following any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a resolution relating to the farm situation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a newspaper article and extracts from letters.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

THE LATE BERNIECE C. LAMBERT

Mr. PATTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution (H. Res. 41), and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House to the husband of Berniece C. Lambert, late an employee of the House, an amount equal to 6 months' salary compensation, and an additional amount not to exceed $250, to defray funeral expenses of the said Berniece C. Lambert.

The resolution was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a declaration made by the National Council of Farmer Cooperatives entitled "The Place of Farmer-Owned and Farmer-Controlled Cooperatives in the National Economy."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRYSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an address I delivered in Statuary Hall on Saturday last.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

OFFICE OF FISCAL INVESTIGATIONS

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I have asked this time to call attention to a bill—H. R. 83—which I introduced almost a year ago, and which I have reintroduced in this Congress, to establish an office of fiscal investigations as an agency of the House of Representatives. I think by implementing the purpose of this bill either by adopting it or making it the basis for the consideration of a proper correction of this matter, we can save untold millions of dollars to the taxpayers of this country. We ought to know what is done with the money that we appropriate, and we ought to have an agency of our own to keep tab on it in order that we may not have to accept 100 percent every statement that is made to the committees of the House of Representatives by the bureaucrats who appear before us.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that tomorrow, Tuesday, after the conclusion of matters on the Speaker's desk, I may address the House for 25 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ILLEGAL STRIKES

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, the outlaw anthracite coal mine strike in Pennsylvania borders on treason against the Government and people of the United States, and I urge the Department of Justice to take prompt action to prosecute the labor leaders responsible for it.

Men and women working in war production industries, as well as management, are generally doing a splendid job to help win the war. However, when we consider that the lives of millions of American men, on the battle front, are wholly dependent upon production of essentials at home, strikes in every necessary industry should be prohibited for the duration. Lawful methods have been provided for the adjustment of labor and wage disputes. These facilities should be used without resorting to illegal strikes.

The labor leaders responsible for strikes and racketeering in essential industries are doing more than giving aid and comfort to our enemies. They are the advance invasion army of Hitler and the Japs, primarily engaged in sabotaging war production and in destroying public morale and confidence. They are also jeopardizing the lives of our fighting men and retarding victory over the enemy. The strike leaders and their followers should be given a taste of front-line fighting if they are not willing to work at home under legal and patriotic methods.

If our public officials in charge of law enforcement refuse to prosecute individuals and leaders responsible for illegal strikes and racketeering in essential industries, it is about time for Congress to begin a few necessary impeachment proceedings.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KUNKEL] be permitted to extend his remarks and include therein certain reports.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that today, after the conclusion of other special orders, I be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include a newspaper editorial from the Daily Argus Leader of Sioux Falls, S. Dak., and some other newspaper comment in connection with my resolution for a post-war planning commission.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCHWABE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks and include a report of the College of Agriculture of the University of Missouri relative to farm labor and machinery.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include a resolution regarding the milk industry.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the day's business and other special orders, I be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PAGÁN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include some newspaper articles.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include an article written by the majority leader appearing in yesterday's Washington Post, and also the text of a short bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

QUESTIONNAIRES

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, a short time ago I received a communication from the National Federation of Federal Employees. I believe other members also received it. It contains one suggestion with regard to the problem of so-called paper work, forms and questionnaires, sent out by governmental agencies, which I think is worth commenting upon. The N. F. F. E. suggests that in every case where a form or questionnaire is to be sent out, before it goes out, it be submitted to two or three minor employees of the agency in question, that if these employees can understand and appreciate its import, it is all right, but if they cannot, it be corrected, simplified, and improved. I think that is a simple suggestion and a constructive one, and that it ought to be followed up.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix by including an address made by Maj. Gen. J. D. Patch to his soldiers.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

STRIKES IN INDUSTRY

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, the American people are outraged, as they have a right to be, at the continuance of strikes on the home front when our boys are fighting and dying on the battle fronts. The promise of the labor leaders that strikes would not take place has not worked. As I tried to get the Congress to do at the last session, we should pass legislation which makes it a crime to strike or to foment strikes in defense industries when our country is at war.

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include a radio address I recently made.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. BLACKNEY was granted permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.)

GASOLINE RATIONING

Mr. BLACKNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLACKNEY. Mr. Speaker, a day or so ago I received a telegram from William Brushaber, president of the Genesee County Funeral Directors Association, in which he stated that gasoline was refused immediate relatives of deceased people in Genesee County who desired to attend the funeral of the deceased. The association asked if this strict rule could not be modified. We immediately submitted the proposition to the O. P. A., who informed us in no uncertain language that the rule would stick, that relatives of deceased were in no better status than anyone else. This certainly is a peculiar travesty on humanity and justice.

I have long felt that bureaucracy in Washington was reaching a nauseating stage, but when a rule of this character is applied to conditions involving death, then it seems to me that it is beyond all rhyme and reason. Our bureaucratic friends apparently desire the American people to be Hitlerized. Anyone who is familiar with Washington knows that a constant succession of official cars are being driven, many of them needlessly. You can see them parked and double parked in front of hotels and places of amusement, and yet that seems to be all right.

The growth of bureaucracy in this Government has reached a nauseating stage. These bureaucrats seems to be imbued with the idea of subjecting the American people to every inconvenience and every indignity. They pose as supermen of erudition that makes me think of Goldsmith's description of the village school teacher, where he says:

> And still they gazed and still the wonder grew, that one small head could carry all he knew.

I think it is high time that the Congress of the United States, representing 131,000,000 of people, should place its stamp of disapproval upon such tactics. The people of the Sixth District of Michigan, of which I have the honor to be Congressman, are law abiding, thoroughly patriotic and loyal, and my district is producing, in the large industrial institutions located therein, great quantities of defense matériel and compares favorably with any other district in the Nation. Any reasonable regulation, based upon common sense and necessity, will be gladly obeyed, but I fail to see the necessity of inflicting multitudes of nauseating rules upon the American people, apparently based upon the fact that the bureaucrat seemingly desires to show his authority.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Wednesday of this week I may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes, at the conclusion of any other special orders and the business of the day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein a short editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

OVER-EMPLOYMENT IN GOVERNMENT DEPARTMENTS

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to extend my remarks and include therein an article by Jerry Kluttz.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, for many months we have known of the stupid, senseless, outrageous overemployment existing in the various bureaus and departments of this Government. Not long since the Civil Service Commission itself, finding these conditions to exist to an extent far beyond the bounds of reason, called upon the bureaucrats to reduce this employment and to then keep it within the realm of necessity.

One of the fine newspapermen of this community, Jerry Kluttz, conducts the Federal Diary for the Washington Post—a daily column devoted to news about the Government's civilian employees. Mr. Kluttz—than whom no man is better informed on the subject—is an able writer and entirely reliable.

In an article appearing in the December's Reader's Digest, entitled "To Washington, An E for Inefficiency," Mr. Kluttz discusses these conditions in the various departments in a most comprehensive way. Under unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, I include as a part of my remarks this article by Mr. Kluttz in order that every Member of the House and Senate may see for himself exactly what the situation is and the necessity for a radical change in the policy of putting thousands of employees on the pay rolls when there is not the slightest justification for doing so. It seems to me the conditions as disclosed by Mr. Kluttz can be characterized in one way and one way only—bureaucracy gone mad.

[From the Reader's Digest of December 1942]

TO WASHINGTON: AN E FOR INEFFICIENCY

(By Jerry Kluttz)

In wasted manpower and low morale, no war plant anywhere surpasses bureaucratic Washington—the biggest war plant of them all. This unfortunate fact is revealed in hundreds of letters and telephone calls which I receive from Government employees, has been confirmed by data submitted to the Congress by the Civil Service Commission, and is underlined by President Roosevelt's recent comment that the Nation's war spirit is everywhere excellent—save in the capital.

In the first 16 weeks after Pearl Harbor, 40,000 young people, hired from every State in the Union, were added as stenographers and typists to Washington's war-swollen agencies. By June 1 more than half of them—disillusioned and disgruntled—had quit their jobs. By August 1 the Civil Service Commission, in making 189,000 Washington job-placements, required 118,000 of that total to fill places of employees who had quit. That turn-over rate would be disastrous in any private enterprise.

When President Roosevelt suggested that wealthy and idle "parasites" move out of the capital to make room for war workers, a Government clerk wrote to me as follows:

"I am one of the parasites. If I didn't exist, $1,620 a year could be directed into vital war channels instead of into my salary. I am one of the huge number of Government employees who spend their days killing time. Yet I am a capable person; my qualifications include college and successful jobs in private industry where I was glad to work like a Trojan. I should be useful here, but actually I'm an utter waste. My hardest task is waiting in line to cash my pay check.

"Clerks who are criticized because they spend too much time at the water cooler or talking to their neighbors will confide to anyone that they might as well waste time. There is nothing else for us to do.

"We are a great army—we parasites. And, almost unanimously, we don't like it. We came to Washington to be part of a united war effort. We are grossly disappointed. Our fervent plea is for someone to put us all to work."

I published that letter in my column. A woman called me. She had made a trip to Washington because her Government-employed daughter, distraught at weeks of enforced idleness in her job, wanted to resign. I promised to make some inquiries. I found that not only this girl but 130 other employees in that unit had no work whatever to do When I presented this story of enforced loafing to the bureau chief he confirmed the facts.

Further inquiry convinced me that mass idleness within the Government is a disease of epidemic proportions. More than any other fact, it accounts for the abysmal level of Washington morale.

Last July I invited Federal workers to write my column for a week while I took a vacation. I asked for newsy and humorous anecdotes. What I got, instead, was several hundred letters, most of which told the same story of idleness, inefficiency, and frustration, all strongly criticizing the way the Government is conducting the war on the Washington front.

"It used to amuse me to read about the 'shortage' of stenographers in your column," one girl wrote. 'Now I get a sick feeling in the pit of my stomach. I know, because I have investigated. I'm a stenographer and a good one. I work, eat, sleep, and play with others doing the same work.

"I happen to be at the War Production Board, but I have talked with at least 100 stenographers who represent a dozen different Government departments. Seventeen of these girls are overworked. Some of them work 12 hours a day regularly, even on Sundays. Five of the seventeen have had physical break-downs of one degree or another.

"The rest of us are complaining, too; we're underworked."

The most moving letter was from a young woman whose husband came to Washington to do vital war work, at a considerable financial sacrifice. To help meet their responsibilities, she—like thousands of others in the Capital, where the cost of living is sky high—took a job in the War Department. She wrote:

"In the biggest war plant of them all—the War Department—many of us sit around waiting for work that never, or hardly ever, comes. Other war agencies are understaffed, need people badly, and appeal to the Civil Service Commission daily for more personnel. But if an idle War Department employee applies for a transfer he or she is flatly refused. Office regulations say that no transfers will be granted for any reason whatsoever.

"You beg your superiors for work; they agree with you—and continue to let you sit. The situation is tragic and dangerous. You want to help fight this war by working with all your energy for the Government, but all you do is sit day after day, wasting time that should'nt be wasted. Who in the world is responsible for this crazy system?"

A recent college graduate wrote me on behalf of a group of 50 young women—all trained specialists—who had been lured to war jobs in Washington during the past year. At the end of 8 months, after long spells of idleness and part-time work, all but 1 of them had resigned.

"I worry because, with the world in turmoil, I sit all day with ample time to read newspapers, magazines, and books," said a $3,000-a-year Government expert. "I know there is work to be done. But how to get it? My superiors assure me that my services are 'highly satisfactory.' But that doesn't satisfy me. I am working only one-tenth as hard as I could. My duties are such that a person with half my training and salary could handle them."

An $8,000-a-year War Production Board official—a production executive who had been drafted from private industry—reported that he was on his way back to private industry "where I can again do some real war work." In 4 months in Washington he had been given nothing to do. An economist at the Board of Economic Warfare told me he wasn't given a single assignment to do in his 5 months with that agency. When the draft caught up with him he welcomed it—although his Government superior urged that he ask deferment on the ground that his "work" at the Board of Economic Warfare was "essential."

Some of this waiting around for work was probably an inevitable result of the rapidity with which Federal bureaus were expanded after Pearl Harbor. The fact that now, a year later, these conditions still prevail can be ascribed only to bad planning and to the instinctive urge to expand which is the curse of every bureaucracy.

I have known Government agencies to hire as many as 100 new employees with nothing whatever in sight for them to do. It was merely thought that some day they might be needed. I recently had a letter from a high-priced Government specialist who said that he was one of a group of specialists who had all been idle, on the Government pay roll, for months. The entire group tried to resign, but the chief of the section rejected their resignations. "Eventually," he said, "you may be needed."

Workers who are hired to wait for work are often assigned to "pools." If they are stenographers, and typewriters are available, some of them practice. Many work crossword puzzles. Most of them just sit. I have visited pools so crowded that there weren't enough chairs for them all to do even that.

Some offices, of course, have a different story to tell. One high officer at the War Department, who declared that "between half and a third of the employees now in Washington could be at once eliminated and the work done better," put through a reorganization. He reduced the number of his employees 50 percent and raised the pay of the remaining ones 40 percent, in this case saving 25 percent in overhead and 50 percent in office space. As a result, the work of his unit is now much better done.

But such salutary purging is likely to run afoul of the bureaucrats. An executive of the Board of Economic Warfare who had previously presided over a Department of Agriculture office "where 'made' work was necessary to keep my employees busy," determined that his set-up at the Board of Economy Warfare would be "compact, efficient, where every employee would have a clear understanding of his job."

The bureaucrats heard of it. "I was immediately besieged," he wrote me, "by $2,600-a-year personnel experts who said bluntly, 'You can't do that. It wouldn't conform to the organization charts of similar Government offices.' After weeks of conferences I found myself saddled with 40 percent more employees and a 35 percent greater budget than I had planned.

"For nearly every employee around the $2,000 level whom I proposed to hire, I had to take on two at $1,440 each. I had chosen two persons for work which I knew they could do and agreed to pay them $2,600 each, but the personnel experts overruled me and I ended up with five persons whose salaries are $1,620 each."

Hence this executive concludes that what an office needs in order to conform to the general pattern of Government offices is to be overstaffed.

"I'll never forget those days after Pearl Harbor," a veteran at the Labor Department told me. "Thousands of Government employees got to work ahead of time; willingly reported to their offices on Christmas and New Year's. They asked for more and more work. Production skrocketed. Morale was never better. Now the Pearl Harbor stimulus has worn off. Employee morale has gone a-tumbling; production is off. We asked for action; we got merely words."

The general public has looked upon Uncle Sam as an ideal employer whose labor policy is a model for industry, yet the Government's own labor policy is shot full of inequalities and injustices that no well-operated concern would tolerate. More than half of a group of employees questioned attributed bad morale to poor supervision. Work was ordered and no explanation given. Comments were made only on mistakes. No appreciation was shown for good work. Office politics and inept handling of personnel by supervisors and administrators, in addition to the uncertainty and confusion over the policies and functions of the many different bureaus, are held responsible by the workers themselves for their sense of frustration. Employees are not given a feeling that their work is important or that they actually are contributing to winning the war.

Consequences of this drop-off in morale are apparent in Washington's poor showing in civilian war efforts. For this city's below-average civilian defense organization—particularly in Government buildings—it has been severely rebuked by James M. Landis, National Director of the Office of Civilian Defense. In the recent Red Cross war relief drive Washington raised but $550,000 of its $750,000 quota—the worst record of any large city in the country. For that it was rebuked by the President. Among Government agencies bond buying by employees of the War Department up to September 1 was near the bottom—along with that of the employees of the White House.

In its recent report to the Congress, the Civil Service Commission declared that "thousands of Federal employees are working below their highest skills; thousands of others are using their highest skills during a very small percentage of the working day."

But even with the active prodding of this Commission, something more is needed to force Washington bureaucracy to put the Government machine into streamlined war-winning condition.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, after disposition of all legislative matters and other special orders, I may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include a scholarly letter on post-war financing and employment by Ralph W. Manuel, of Minneapolis.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

STRIKES IN INDUSTRY

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, apropos of what the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON] has just said with reference to strikes, recently I reintroduced a bill that would stop strikes. It is now before the Military Affairs Committee. I do not know whether it will meet the proposition or not, but some action should be taken by this Congress to stop strikes. You do not have to have a strike in the aircraft industry or any particular industry. Just strike in the coal industry and you stop everything, because it takes coal to make coke and it takes coke to make steel and it takes steel to make munitions for the boys who are dying on the battle fronts. I would like to see some action on this proposition.

[Here the gavel fell.]

SELECT COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE AIRPLANE ACCIDENTS

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, on Saturday morning there was sent to the desk of each Member the final report by the Select Committee of the House of Representatives to Investigate Airplane Accidents. Accompanying that report was a letter which pointed out to you that there was much information which the committee felt should not be put into a written report, even to the Congress. We advised you at that time that on one day of this week we would ask you to meet in this chamber in executive session so that we could, off the record, give you information gleaned in our investigation which we thought you were entitled to have. So, in agreement with those in charge of the House, on Wednesday afternoon, immediately after the business on the Speaker's desk has been concluded, there will be a meeting in this chamber in executive session, to which all Members are invited, in order that this Committee can give you information which we think you should have.

In that connection, I hope you will forego requests for special orders on Wednesday, so that we can get to that business as soon as possible, because it will require an hour or so to do it in any form.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I think there has been a misunderstanding as to any agreement that I entered into. I perfectly agree that this meeting should be held on Wednesday but I did not want it to be interpreted that I am in any agreement to extend for any time the life of this committee that is now investigating airplane accidents.

Mr. NICHOLS. This has nothing to do with that. I will say to the gentleman, however, that this morning there was passed in the Committee on Rules a resolution which does extend the life of this committee until March 1, not for the purpose of making any further investigation, but for the purpose of winding up our final reports and getting the business of the committee to close by March 1.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The reason I probably will oppose that is because we have a request, as the gentleman knows, for the creation of a standing committee to take into consideration this question of aviation after the war. It is one of the great questions of the country at the present time. There is a tremendous demand for it. I do not want to be put in the position by extending the gentleman's committee until March 1 of sidetracking this request that the country has demanded.

Mr. NICHOLS. I think if the gentleman from Massachusetts will talk to me before he makes objection I can convince him that the very ground work we shall lay from now until March 1 will be of material advantage to a standing committee if and when it is created.

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therewith a letter addressed to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS], chairman of the Select Committee on Air Accidents, in which are set forth my advocacy for many years of a standing committee on aviation in this House.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks on three subjects and to include therein certain statements and excerpts.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

(Mr. FISH asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.)

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow after the disposition of the business of the day and other special orders I may be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes today after the other special orders.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a newspaper article.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

THE FLORIDA BARGE CANAL

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, and to revise and extend my own remarks, to include a letter from Gen. C. P. Summerall, former Chief of Staff of the United States Army.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

[Mr. RANKIN addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LAMBERTSON] is recognized for 10 minutes.

JAMES AND FRANKLIN ROOSEVELT, JR.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I want to amplify on the 1-minute speech I made Thursday, on the lifting of James and Franklin Roosevelt from two battle fronts to the American shore.

Before going into that, however, I want to say a little about my good friend from Massachusetts, the majority floor leader, and his short and ugly word. I have been twitted by some of my western colleagues that I was not living up to the traditions, especially of the West, by passing that over so lightly. There were four reasons why I did not do anything about it.

First. I am a timid soul;

Second. I know it is undignified to engage in any brawl about the House;

Third. One always runs a chance of being whipped when he participates and that is embarrassing; and Fourth. I do not think any exhibition that the gentleman of Massachusetts and myself would put on would be worth the money.

I am going to give him a little larger order today. He will have the chance to repeat his lie or produce some a-li(e)-bies.

There are two reasons why I asked unanimous consent to postpone this 10 minutes I had allotted to me on a special order for Thursday, until today.

First, it was the desire of some of the leaders on the minority side. In fact, they wanted me to postpone any further remarks indefinitely, and my second reason was, I might give anybody more time to answer my question of Thursday.

I am impelled to make a further statement on this subject now because I feel I am distinctly on the spot. I am only a humble Member of the minority and I carry no prestige of leadership, and the man with the most powerful prestige, the leader of the majority, and all others following his lead, have chosen to dismiss me with the insinuation that I am just a common liar. I say I am on the spot before a hundred new colleagues here who never knew me before and in the country because everybody knows that a majority floor leader outranks a humble minority man and his words carry more weight than mine generally.

First of all, I want to clear up a misconception which has been coming to me in letters since Thursday that I am attacking the military record of the Roosevelt boys, that I am shooting at them. I want to say and to be perfectly honest with you, I am not. They had nothing to do with their sudden departure from the battlefields, and I am not intimating that it was their desire. On the contrary, I think they were humiliated with the orders that brought them out.

Let us review the major events of the subject matter before us. I will not be specific in my dates, but let us review them in a general free way. In the late summer the marines entered Guadalcanal. There were pictures of James Roosevelt on the screen everywhere leading his marines to action. Suddenly, one day, I noticed a little news item in a western newspaper, only about an inch long, announcing that he had arrived by plane on the western coast of America. It appeared to me that it was the same week that the marines entered Guadalcanal. I pondered this thing a good deal. Along in November Drew Pearson had a story about how James would have been decorated had he not been a President's son and how unfortunate it was for him. Then, the last week of November, there was an occasion in which the subject matter was cleared up. I will pass over it for the time being and refer to it last.

Following all of this, and with my hunch more confirmed than ever, on December 5, in the Times-Herald of Washington was a United Press story of how Franklin had the day before come back from the African front and was entering the Navy hospital of Philadelphia for 3 or 4 days, with some kind of a mild attack. The words "mild attack" were distinctly emphasized. Three or four days later there was another item indicating that he was out, and later we know he spent Christmas at the White House. The technique of the second son to leave the battle front was just like the first one. I did have a paragraph in the RECORD of December 10 making reference to the two battle fronts having diversions from them, but I still resolved not to make a speech about it. However, on last Thursday morning here came the announcement in the morning papers, in spite of what Drew Pearson had said weeks before, that James had been cited last October. Then, as you know, I just could not stand it any longer.

This is what happened the last week in November. I came upon a group of seven or eight men talking. There was one distinguished American who was being talked to principally and who was doing most of the talking. I said to him, "Do you have any idea that it was the Commander in Chief of the Army that lifted James from Guadalcanal?" His reply was, "There isn't any question about it. The Commander in Chief told me he ordered him out. He said, 'When I heard that the marines and James were in Guadalcanal, I ordered him out.'" I said to my distinguished friend, "Are you really sure of that?" He said, "I heard the President say it, and he made no bones of it." I have had the temerity to use this today, because it was not given to us in confidence. It was given to a group of seven or eight and the statement that the President made no bones of it seemed to take away any thought that it was confidential. Now, I know I am facing the big black bear. I know the powerful influences that can take a distinguished citizen with courage and sometimes make him testify absolutely to the contrary. I can even comprehend how they could take seven men that heard him and make them all splendid forgetters, but I am asserting to my colleagues here, if I ever told the truth in my life, I am telling it now. There was not any mistake about what was said. There was not any mistake about what I heard. When they ferret out this distinguished citizen I do not believe they are going to make him testify anything to the contrary. I do not think they are going to seek out the seven other men in order to be able to repudiate me. They might be able to do it, but if they do I know what I heard and I believed the man who said it.

In closing let me say there has been a lot said in this country about chiseling in the little things of life, using too much sugar, pleasure driving, using the gas, owning a sixth tire, and then I have heard time and again the emphasis on that word as applied to the man in small business trying to save himself from the Fair Labor Standards Act. The American people, if I know them rightly, will not stand for chiseling off of the battle front by the higher-ups.

The SPEAKER. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GORE] is recognized for 10 minutes.

JAMES AND FRANKLIN ROOSEVELT, JR.

Mr. GORE. Mr. Speaker, it is with a sense of regret and shame for the gentleman from Kansas and for the dignity and integrity of this Chamber that I have witnessed his performance just now and on last Thursday. It is not characteristic of the gentleman. I would not say that he has put himself and this Chamber to shame did I not fear the consequences of such stabbing at the heart of American unity and America's will to win.

With all respect for the gentleman from Kansas but in due regard for the truth and in proper respect for the integrity of the Commander in Chief of this great Nation and in the honor of his four sons who today are wearing the uniform of the Stars and Stripes, and in deep concern for the unity not only of the people of the home front but for the morale of the men in uniform, I must brand his insinuations and statements as the cheapest, the nastiest below-the-belt disservice yet uttered in the Chamber of this House.

The gentleman says he is on the spot. Mr. Speaker, he is on a worse thing than that. He is on the altar of shame before his country and before this Congress.

Let us look at the record. He challenged on Thursday last that some one answer his statement with the record.

James Roosevelt was first appointed a lieutenant colonel in the Marine Corps in November 1936. He performed active training duty with the fleet of the marine force on maneuvers in 1938, but in 1939 he submitted his resignation for this reason:

> I am impelled to take this step for reason that I do not feel my age or experience justify my holding such rank in case of actual call to service, and, therefore, it is not proper for me to hold such commission.

His resignation was accepted, but in December of 1939 he was recommissioned at the lower rank of captain.

In August 1940 he was assigned to the Twenty-second Battalion, Marine Corps Reserve, in Los Angeles. In November 1940 this battalion was mobilized—and he with that battalion—for active service at the Marine Corps base, San Diego, Calif.

He was absent on temporary special duty abroad as an observer attached to the British Army headquarters in Egypt for a brief spell.

In July 1941 he was assigned to the office of the Coordinator of Information, Washington, D. C.

In December 1941 he was detached from that duty at his own request, for duty with troops at the Marine Corps base, San Diego.

In February 1942 he joined combat organization of Marine Corps, which went to duty in the Pacific.

In the summer of 1942 he participated in the raid at Makin Island, one of the Marshall group, and was second in command of the raider battalion which participated in this raid. He returned to the United States in October 1942 and is now in San Diego in command of the Fourth Raider Battalion training men for the kind of duty in which he has had personal experience.

Here is testimony from a young man who was wounded in this raid, which I would like to read, and I quote from an Associated Press dispatch from Seattle:

> A wounded marine sergeant related yesterday how the landing for the successful raid on Jap-held Makin Island last August 17 was accomplished from submarines after months of training with inflated rubber boats.
>
> It was the raid in which Lt. Col. James Roosevelt, eldest son of the President, participated actively.
>
> The sergeant, Lawrence A. Lang, 36, a carpenter at Wheeling, W. Va., before he joined the marines 13 years ago, was brought to the Navy hospital last week with a bullet-shattered right elbow.
> SERIOUS BUSINESS
> "We didn't know where we were going when we started in training," Sergeant Lang explained in an interview, "but we knew it was going to be serious business. We were reasonably sure we were going after Japs if we had to sneak up on 'em in submarines.
>
> "That was the only way we could get in because we were right in the heart of Jap territory.
>
> "We landed under cover of darkness just before daybreak. They didn't spot us when we landed, but the fighting started about half an hour later and it was pretty hot and heavy after that. It was all close-range stuff. The range averaged from 30 to 100 yards.
> RIFLES, MACHINE GUNS COUNT
> "There wasn't much hand-to-hand fighting. You usually shoot the other fellow or he shoots you before you get that close. Tanks and planes are all right out in the open, but it's just rifles and machine guns that count in the jungle."
>
> Sergeant Lang said he was taken off the island, one of the Gilbert group, about 10 at night, after the Japanese detachment had been wiped out.
> He described Colonel Roosevelt as "a swell fellow."
> "A lot of people have said he got his rank because he's the President's son," Sergeant Lang said, "but he's way above the average. He's right up in the front line in action."

Mr. Speaker, the commanding officers in charge decorated this distinguished colonel of the American marines for outstanding service and bravery in action; yet today and on Thursday we hear his integrity, his honor, and his record of service challenged. We hear further the very integrity of the armed forces challenged. Any man who states that a commander at the orders of his Commander in Chief, or the commander himself, withdrew one as a special favor from points of danger undermines the integrity and the morale of the armed forces of the United States. I brand it as a disservice and call upon the gentleman to apologize to these boys, to the Commander in Chief, and to his fellow men, as well as to the honor and integrity of the House of Representatives.

Further mention was made that Franklin Roosevelt, Jr., had been pulled from North Africa. Here is what happened, and I contacted the Bureau of Personnel of the Navy Department today for this information. The young man has been attached to a destroyer for 21 months, plowing the North Atlantic on patrol duty and convoy duty, one of the most dangerous assignments that may be given to a naval vessel. Yes; he was at home in December. Why? Because he and his vessel participated in the battles incident to the landing in North Africa. His ship returned to port and he, like other boys aboard, had a few days' leave. Instead of being dishonored, he is back on the high seas today fighting German submarines, upholding the Stars and Stripes, and it comes as poor patriotism for any Member of this House, no matter how humble he may be or claim to be, to try to destroy and take from that boy the glory with which he and his comrades are clothing themselves in this terrific struggle in which the very freedom of mankind is at stake.

There is the record of the other two Roosevelt boys. Let me say here that it is rather striking that out of the millions of men in the armed services, three sons of the President of the United States have already engaged in some of the most difficult operations on land, at sea, and in the air in which our forces have participated.

Elliott Roosevelt has not been transferred from north Africa. He is there performing a most dangerous class of service in the Air Corps. I am told by his superiors that he has a superior record of bravery going beyond what is ordinarily expected of a man wearing the uniform, risking his life to make photographs of enemy territory. Not only is he making such photographs now, but he went into the territory before it became an area of war operations and made photographs upon which our plans, which worked out so beautifully, were based.

The younger son has been treated as any other American boy, just as the other three have been treated as other American boys have been treated. He has not been abroad. He is assigned to a station, and, although he has made repeated applications for active combat duty, I am told, he has not yet had the privilege of being assigned to such duty.

I call on the gentleman from Kansas to recant. I do not say he is unpatriotic; I know he is not. I do not say he would do a disservice to his country in order to strike at the President; I know he would not. I do not say that the gentleman from Kansas has possession of his full equilibrium in making this statement. The only explanation to which I can subscribe is that he has on this occasion allowed his stark, rank prejudice to so overbalance his equilibrium and intellect as to perform this great disservice to himself, to this House, and to the armed forces of the United States.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] is recognized for 20 minutes.

HOW THE RUML PLAN OF INCOME TAX COLLECTION WOULD AFFECT YOU AND YOUR GOVERNMENT

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I do not need to tell you that there is great interest in this country in the enactment of some method of paying taxes which will not leave the people in debt in case they lose their positions. You have each noticed the editorials, magazine articles, and special pamphlets and resolutions of chambers of commerce pouring into your office with reference to a plan known as the Ruml plan. I have done my best for several days to try to see if I can clarify some of the confusion which seems to persist in the public mind about this new tax proposal.

Mr. Speaker, this widespread interest in the adoption of the so-called Ruml plan for placing individual income-tax payments on a current basis probably will result in early consideration of the proposal, and other pay-as-you-go plans, by the Ways and Means Committee.

NO GENERAL MORATORIUM ON TAXES INVOLVED

Pressure for early enactment of the Ruml plan is coming in a large measure from those who mistakenly believe that they will thereby escape the payment of income tax this year. This, of course, would not be true in the case of the great majority of the 27,000,000 persons now subject to income tax. It is principally to prove that this is not so, and thus not to hold out any false hope to anyone, that I am making these remarks. Also, it should be made clear that the proposal would apply only to individuals, and not to corporations.

A PAY-AS-YOU-GO SYSTEM HAS MERIT

I am strongly in favor of making our income-tax payments current, for a pay-as-you-go system would be of benefit both to the Treasury and to the taxpayer. So far as the Government is concerned, current collections would bring revenue into the Treasury as income is earned, instead of in the year following. Moreover, there would be less delinquencies, since the Government would cease being a creditor to 27,000,000 taxpayers for last year's taxes. This will be an even more serious problem when the war boom ends, and the Treasury tries to collect the last year's income taxes from millions of persons who will then be without jobs and be unable to discharge their tax liability to the Government.

From the standpoint of the taxpayer, pay-as-you-go collection of the income tax would remove the tax debt which constantly hangs over him under the present system. His current tax liability would be based on, and be paid out of, his current income. Hence there would be no crushing burden of taxation to be paid after he dies, or loses his job, or ceases to have an income as large as he had in the previous year. The present system of deferred collection works a particular hardship on men who go into the armed forces and have to pay a substantial tax on their past year's civilian income out of their present meager pay. In many cases the service pay will be far from adequate to meet the past year's tax liability.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. I have been reading about the suggestions with regard to a pay-as-you-go plan and deferring the 1942 income tax to another time. May I inquire of the gentleman if he has made any study of the position in which we may find ourselves as taxpayers if we should defer the payment of our taxes on a fat year like 1942 and then strike an extremely lean year when we may be called upon to pay that tax?

Mr. REED of New York. Later on in my speech I shall make mention of the necessity of guarding against that very thing. I am only trying to present the plan and show some of the things that are in the public mind, which they think this plan proposes to do, but which it does not do. If the gentleman will be patient, I think I shall arrive at the point in which he is interested.

TWO ASPECTS TO PAY-AS-YOU-GO TAXATION

It should perhaps be pointed out that there are two separate aspects to pay-as-you-go taxation. To some people, pay-as-you-go means pay-as-you-earn instead of in quarterly installments. This can be brought about simply by providing for weekly or monthly income-tax payments, or through withholding of the tax out of pay envelopes, as is done in connection with social-security taxes and the Victory tax. This phase of pay-as-you-go taxation is not an inherent feature of the so-called Ruml plan, although it has been included in the bill introduced by our colleague the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CARLSON].

The second aspect of pay-as-you-go taxation concerns the question of whether we will continue to collect the Federal income tax on last year's income and out of this year's income, or will "turn the tax clock ahead," as proposed by Mr. Ruml, and collect the tax on this year's income out of this year's income, whether the payments are made quarterly, monthly, or weekly.

THE PROBLEM OF LAST YEAR'S LIABILITY

If we are to collect the tax on this year's income out of this year's income, we must somehow postpone or cancel our present liability for paying the tax on last year's income out of this year's income, else as a result of the transition we will be paying 2 years' taxes in the first year during which the new method of collection is in operation.

RUML PLAN WOULD CANCEL TAX DEBT ON 1942 INCOME

Various suggestions have been made for dealing with this problem. It has been proposed by some that our income-tax debt on our 1942 income be spread over a number of years, thereby avoiding any doubling up in any 1 year. Others have proposed that the 1942 liability be collected from the estate of the taxpayer when he dies. Mr. Ruml has proposed that this 1942 tax debt now hanging over us be absolutely canceled, so that we may start with a clean slate in putting our tax payments on a current basis. His argument for completely wiping out the 1942 liability is that the object of making income-tax payments current is to get rid of the present tax debt resulting from the fact that we now collect the income tax on a particular year's income the year after it is earned. He contends that mere postponement of the debt will defeat the whole purpose of trying to set up the collection of the income tax on a pay-as-you-earn basis.

INCOME-TAX PAYMENTS WOULD CONTINUE TO FLOW INTO TREASURY UNDER RUML PLAN

The question naturally arises: "Does not the cancelation of our liability for income tax on our 1942 income result in a terrific loss of revenue to the Government at a time when we need every cent we can raise to help pay for the staggering cost of the war?"

Though it may be difficult to see at first blush, the answer, however, is "No," because while the Ruml plan would cancel the liability for paying the income tax on 1942 incomes out of 1943 income, it would at the same time move up the time for paying the income tax on our current incomes to the current year. Thus the great majority of the 27,000,000 income-tax payers would go on paying their taxes as if nothing had happened, and the revenue would continue to flow into the Treasury.

THOSE WHO WOULD BENEFIT THIS YEAR

The only ones who would immediately benefit from the cancelation of the 1942 liability would be those who died during 1942, or who are receiving less income in 1943 than in 1942, or who have this year lost their jobs or ceased to have sufficient income to make them subject to tax.

In the case of the man who died during 1942, or who no longer has any taxable income, no tax would be payable in 1943 on the 1942 income.

In the case of the man who is receiving less income in 1943 than in 1942, his current tax burden would be reduced in keeping with his current income.

SOME WOULD PAY MORE THIS YEAR

On the other hand, in the case of the man who is receiving a higher income in 1943 than in 1942, there is no cessation or diminution of tax payments in 1943. Instead, he would pay a higher tax than under the present system, because instead of his current liability being measured by his last year's income it would be measured by the increased income anticipated during the current year. In other words, where the income is increased, the Government benefits by collecting the increased tax on the increased income a year sooner than under the present system.

Any current loss of revenue resulting from the outright cancelation of the 1942 liability in the case of certain taxpayers would be offset by the speeding up of collections from those who have increased incomes during 1943. Moreover, as I have previously indicated, the Government probably would have fewer tax delinquents under a system of current collection.

THOSE WHO HAVE SAME INCOME IN 1943 AS IN 1942

In the case of those who have the same income in 1943 as in 1942, there would be no immediate benefit to them, or loss to the Treasury, as a result of the cancelation of the 1942 income-tax liability under the Ruml plan. They would go on paying income tax just as if nothing had happened. Their 1942 income would be used as a basis for measuring their tentative income tax for the current year. In other words, they would be taxed in 1943 on their anticipated 1943 income, instead of on their last year's income. Any minor adjustments which might be necessary on the basis of the final determination of the income and deductions at the end of the year would be made when the tentative return is filed for the subsequent year.

TO SUMMARIZE

Thus I repeat that the adoption of the Ruml plan will not result in a general moratorium on income-tax payments during 1943 or any subsequent year. In the case of those with the same income in 1943 as in 1942, the Government would collect the same tax during 1943 under the Ruml plan as under the present system. In the case of those with more income in 1943 than in 1942, the Government will collect a higher tax during 1943 than under the present system. Only in the case of those who have died during 1942 or have suffered a reduction in income or ceased to have sufficient income to make them currently subject to tax, would there be any current loss of revenue to the Government or gain to the taxpayer.

WHEN BENEFIT OF CANCELING 1942 LIABILITY ACCRUES TO AVERAGE TAXPAYER

The question may be asked: "If this is so, then when do other taxpayers benefit from the cancelation of the 1942 liability and when does the Treasury suffer any loss of revenue in their case?"

The answer to this question is very simple, but it varies in each individual case, depending upon when the person, as a result of death or loss of his job or otherwise, ceases to have income in the then current tax year.

Under the present system of deferred collection the individual, although he had no income in the then current year, say 1960, would still owe for the taxes on the previous year's income. Under the Ruml plan his taxes would have been paid currently, and he would have no tax debt hanging over him or his estate when his income ceased. Up to that time, however, he would have had no benefit from the cancelation of the 1942 liability in the year 1943, since he still had to pay his 1943 taxes in 1943 and his subsequent taxes in the year in which the money was earned. Thus, in his case, the benefit of the cancelation is deferred until the year following his death or loss of income. In that year, as I have indicated, there is no tax debt for the prior year's income hanging over him or his estate. It is then that the benefit in his case is felt and, conversely, that any loss to the Government results.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. Yes.

Mr. DOUGHTON. As I understood the gentleman, he said that only two classes of people would be benefited by this plan that he is advocating, but which I have not had time to look into.

Mr. REED of New York. I am advocating only the merits of the pay-as-you-go system, with such modifications of the Ruml plan as will be workable and will not permit tax avoidance by those making large incomes in 1942, who, under this plan, might see fit to retire early in 1943.

Mr. DOUGHTON. This is no criticism of the gentleman from New York, but, as this plan is so new, so revolutionary, and doubtless will be so controversial, I have been hoping that discussion of it could have been left until the committee has had hearings and both sides of the controversy be explained. However, as I say, I understood the gentleman from New York to say that only two classes would be benefited, those who died during 1942, and those who would have a less income in 1943 than in 1942. Take those who are not included in those two classes, with their 1942 taxes payable in 1943. When would they pay them? If they never pay them, would they not be benefited?

Mr. REED of New York. The gentleman has asked a very pertinent question, and he may ask it again after I conclude, if I have not answered it in the meantime. I do not want the gentleman to get the idea that the members of his committee would not try to cooperate with the gentleman 100 percent in this matter of the current collection of individual income taxes. However, we are all going to be flooded with mail, and a great many people think at the present time, because the word "forgiveness" has been used, that they will not have to pay any income tax on March 15 if this plan be adopted.

Mr. DOUGHTON. There are two classes who will be entirely excused from present liability in 1942, and that is what I am trying to get light on, whether or not they will ever pay the 1942 tax, or whether this Ruml scheme means to let them out of paying the 1942 tax entirely.

Mr. REED of New York. That is exactly what I am trying to clear up.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. REED of New York. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. There has been, as the gentleman knows, and as the chairman of the committee is aware, the plan of carrying the 1942 taxes on as a debt, and then, when a man dies, if the estate exceeds the $60,000 exemption, the tax would be paid.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. That 1942 tax would be collected from the man's estate.

Mr. DOUGHTON. But suppose he did not die for a while?

Mr. KNUTSON. Very well; then we would not get it for a while.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I think it should be collected before he dies.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, this may be a very interesting colloquy between my two friends, but I cannot yield further.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I think the gentleman should proceed.

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman proceeds, will he yield to me?

Mr. REED of New York. Yes.
